Dr. Campbell Gives Congratulations To Community Chest

One way to judge the quality of a community is to find the extent to which that community succeeds with its provision for the Community Chest, Dr. Doak S. Campbell, FSU president told local community chest workers recently.

Dr. Campbell, the principal speaker in a wind-up dinner meeting to give special recognition to volunteer chest workers, added his congratulation to the community for exceeding the quota.

"THE COMMUNITY CHEST organization is distinctly American," the university president said. "So far as we are able to observe, it has no true counterpart anywhere else in the world."

The speaker said many countries have elaborate plans for relieving human distress through the use of public funds. "But," Dr. Campbell said, "it is truly American to provide so widely through voluntary gifts alone.

"HOWEVER," the speaker continued, "if we are to believe that spirit is the essence of humanitarian service; if we are to believe in serving needy persons without degrading their dignity as human beings; if we are to render service unselfishly and gladly, without hope of social, political or economic reward—then it seems to me we shall have achieved the essence of the American way."

Dr. Campbell also pointed out the Community Chest does not limit itself to relieving human distress. He said that many of the agencies that participate in the Chest are devoted almost wholly to constructive programs of youth development.

"Herein," he said, "lies one of the most important and satisfying of our activities."

Speech Department Stages Season's Final Production

Play Begins Run In Conradi Tonite

A play written by Russell Graves of the speech department will be the final major production of the year to be given by that department starting tonight at 8:15 in the Conradi Theater.

The Last Lesson of Pantalone," will run tonight, Saturday, Monday and Tuesday nights. The box office is open from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. each day for the sale of tickets.

THE DRAMA FIRST was performed in Sarasota on April 2 for the Art Seminar in the John and Mable Ringling Museum of Art there. The setting was in the Asolo Theater, an eighteenth century theater which was moved from Italy to the Museum.

"The Last Lesson of Pantalone" is a modern reconstruction of the "commedia dell'arte" and in its writing author Graves has attempted to include those elements most typical to this type of drama. The "commedia" was the theatrical form in the sixteenth century, and retained the rank of the most popular form of entertainment of both the elite and common people through three centuries. Strong influences of the "commedia" can be found today in Punch, Pierrot, Harlequin, Columbine, Hansaurst and the circus clown.

IN THE "COMMEDIA" an actor would devote his life to playing a single character, and over the years he would develop speeches and actions so much a part of that character, that he could adapt himself to many plot situations.

Scripts were not written out. Instead, "scenari" were tacked to the scenery, and the actors would check which scene they were to play just before they went on stage.

THIS TRADITION is best preserved today in the works of such clowns and commedians as Ed Wynn, the Marx Brothers, Bobby Clark and Charlie Chaplin.

Graves directs his own comedy, with scenery and lighting designed by Charles Reimer. Douglas Russell designed the costumes.

Legislative Group Gets FSU, UF Bill

By GALE TOMLINSON

Defeat for a bill to consolidate Florida State University and the University of Florida seems almost certain. Rep. Roy A. Surles, Polk, introduced the bill which was submitted to the House Committee on Higher Learning last Tuesday.

The bill was then passed on to a sub-committee consisting of Ralph D. Turlington, Alachua; Sherman Smith, Indian River; and John S. Burwell, Broward, for further study. It must pass the committee to get to the floor of the House.

"I DON'T BELIEVE the bill will pass either the committee or sub-committee favorably," Chairman Turlington said later to the capitol correspondent of the Flambeau.

The committee did pass favorably on a bill of Speaker of the House C. Farris Bryant which in effect would counter-act the consolidation plan. It would provide for an educational adviser to the Board of Control of the universities.

BRYANT stressed to the committee that having an adviser would not mean consolidation. The adviser's job would be to carry on studies to determine the needs of Florida's institutions of higher learning, and act as consultant to the Board of Control.

For instance, if a bill for a school of architecture came up before the Board of Control, the educational consultant would carry on a study to see if the school was really needed. He might discover that an extension of the agricultural school at Gainesville seemed more necessary.

THE BOARD of Control would call on the adviser to comment on the findings and give his opinions about the matter. It could then either accept or reject his recommendations because the consultant would have no power over the board.

If this bill can pass the House and Senate and get the governor's approval it will become a

Band Director from Ohio State May Replace Robert Braunagel

Florida State probably soon will have a new leader for its Marching Chiefs. Manley R. Whitcomb, director of the Ohio State University Marching band, has been nominated for the position. Final Board of Control approval should come this weekend.

Director

Manley R. Whitcomb

Whitcomb will be a professor of music education also, and will replace Robert T. Braunagel, who will continue on the School of Music faculty. He is an assistant professor of instrument music.

WHITCOMB, band director at Ohio State since 1930, is now on leave of absence to do advanced work at Columbia University. He was born in Mellen, Wis., in 1913, and graduated in 1934 from Northwestern University.

He then took a job as graduate assistant in music at Ohio State, and in the Summer of 1935 returned to Northwestern to earn his Master's degree. Returning to Ohio State in the Fall as an instructor, he was made assistant professor in 1020 and full professor in 1946.

OHIO OFFICIALS have credited Whitcomb with much of the development of that University's band program, now including a 120-piece all brass marching band, said to be the only one of its kind in the nation, an 80-piece symphonic band, an 80-piece activities and a 110-piece ROTC regimental band.

He led the marching band in California's Rose Bowl on January 2, 1950, and has a reputation in Ohio as guest conductor. He is an authority on marching maneuvers and band drill, and has appeared as speaker and conductor in 12 states.

WHITCOMB WAS an Army Infantry sergeant in the U. S. and Italy during World War II, and participated in the invasion of Southern France and the fighting in Germany. He has the combat infantry badge, bronze star with one cluster and five battle stars for his services.

When the war ended, he was placed in charge of a regiment's musical program in the occupation of Germany.

He is a member of the American Bandmasters' Association, College Band Directors' National Association, Ohio Music Education Association and Phi Mu Alpha Pi Kappa Lambda and Kappa Psi fraternities.

THE THURSDAY performance of the circus, as well as the two that follow will be open to the public, and will be given at the Campbell Stadium. More than 250 students in sequin-studded costumes will appear in the 21 acts.

In addition to this year's show will be the dances, in which costumed Indian sun-dancers will introduce the troupe's Seminole princess and give an adagio number. Acrobatic stars will perform on roller skates and by trick lighting and fast timing a waltz line will be converted into high-stepping minstrel men. The iron-jaw swivel, the Girl in the Moon, Sensation of the Web, the Flying De Cosmos, Bicycle Built for Three and the Queen of the Big Top are other acts to be featured.

CLOWNS WILL again be a main part of the circus, with a clown band this time giving "Music as You Like It," in the seventh act. This will be the first appearance of the clown band.

Women to Get Time Extension For Saturdays

New 12:30 Permission Passed By Committee Takes Effect Next Fall

The Faculty Review Board passed a resolution Wednesday giving 12:30 permission on Saturday nights to all girls. This measure will go into effect next Fall.

The recommendation made by the Women's Senate after a careful study of regulations of 25 other colleges and universities throughout the nation.

THIS WILL in no way effect the senior privileges and dance regulations.

This study by the Women's Senate also resulted in the recommendation last October 29 that all first-semester frosh girls be in at 10:30 p.m. on week nights, rather than 11:00. Hours for the week-end would remain the same. This recommendation was approved at that time by the Faculty Review Board.

JUNE CONYERS, president of Women's Senate, explains that this action is intended to stimulate freshmen women's scholarship.

"Anything we've done," she said, "is only after careful study and consideration of the facts.

"We have always done what we thought best for the most students in our efforts to keep high ideals for FSU's women students."

SENIOR SENATOR Bobbie Drake protested this ruling in a joint senate session several weeks ago and followed with an official letter of protest to June Tale, Chief Justice of the University Court.

Drake bases his protest on the fact that the measure was not signed by Mary Ruth Summers, President of UGA and was not brought before the joint senate.

ACCORDING TO Drake, "Women's hours and rules indirectly affect men, and they should have some say about or knowledge of them. What this amounts to is: Will Women's Senate—or Men's Senate—be all powerful without any checks upon them, or will their legislation have to go through the regular UGA channels?"

The University Court will decide

Orchestra Presents First Jazz Concert In Opperman Hall

The first concert of modern jazz ever to be presented on this campus will take place Tuesday at 8:15 p.m. in the Amphitheater.

An orchestra of 17 musicians, directed by Robert Braunagel, will give the concert, with featured arrangements by Randy Canfield, Bill Hoiston and John Baxley.

THE IDEA of this new jazz orchestra was formed by three of the musicians who were formerly with dance orchestras in the service. Upon their discharge, they agreed to enroll at Florida State and attempt to form an orchestra of "modern sounds." These men are Bill Holston, John Baxley and Harry van Brunt.

The concept of this modern jazz, they say, is to introduce a new musical idiom to the public. It provides experience in both playing and arranging for the progressive musician.

VARIOUS TYPE tunes will be presented on the program. The band will be influenced by the styles of such musicians as Stan Kenton, Woody Herman and Billy May.

Featured soloists with the orchestra will be Van Brunt, and Holston, trumpet; Hank Kmen and Donald Heckman, saxophone, and Baxley, trombone. Included on the program will be "Everything Happens to Me," featuring Heckman with the alto sax; "Deimus," written especially for the orchestra by Canfield; "Blue Skies," with Baxley and his trombone; "Somebody Loves Me" featuring the "Miles Davis" sound, "My Silent Love," a popular ballad set to modern orchestration, and "The Man I Love," alternating between slow and fast tempo.

Speech Tryouts Set For Department Play

Tryouts for James M. Barrie's one act play "The Twelve Pound Look" to be presented by the speech department will be Monday at 7 p.m. in Room 208, History Building.

The comedy will need a cast of two men and two women, and will be directed by William A. Peterson. All students are invited to audition.

The play will be given Sunday May 17, at Ruge Hall, and Thursday, May 21, at the Tallahassee Women's Club.

Room Rotes Increase Here Next Semester

Other rate increases shown by the bulletin include a rise to $14 of the women students' laundry.

Carothers, Lawler, Morris, Swept Into Top Offices

Student Party Candidates Fill All 15 Offices As Record Number of Voters Cast Ballots

The 1953 University Government Association primary elections Tuesday turned into a final election as the Student Party candidates made a clean sweep on the 1850-odd ballots cast. Milton Carothers, Student Party's choice for UGA President, clinched the day's voting with his 1,091 check-marks, edging out by a large margin Gene Bridges who received 502 and Chris Young with 264 votes.

President

Milton Carothers

THE CONTEST between June Conyers and Gene Lawler, expected by many to be one of the two hardest fought and closest battles of this year's major elections turned into a landslide for Lawler. He received 1,075 votes against Conyers' 762. Lawler led Conyers in all three precincts, the closest being Seminole Dining Hall with Conyer's tally of 212 and Lawler's total vote reaching only 237.

The battle between Marcia Morris, of the Student Party, and Bruce Galphin, running independently, ran neck-and-neck as spectators in the Longmire Auditorium vote-counting area sat on the edges of their seats Tuesday night.

AS THE FIRST returns came out early in the counting, Morris was three votes ahead of Galphin. Her edge climbed to 23 with the next returns and 37 at next report. Marcia finally drew ahead of Bruce and rocketed to a final tally of 1,009 to win Flambeau Editor from Galphin who received a total of 788.

Close observance of the Flambeau race showed an interesting fact. Marcia's Westcott votes really clinched the large margin she ended with. Westcott votes showed 474 for Morris and 290 for Galphin. Galphin, however, came close to carrying the Student Center and Seminole Hall. Student Center votes showed 296 for Bruce and 11 more, or 307 for Marcia. Seminole Dining Hall voted within 26 votes for Marcia with her 228 against Bruce's close 202.

Students Vote Name Change Of Flastacowo

The University camp is still sticking to its old name, Flastacowo—at least for the present.

The name change had been brought to student vote once before, but had to be re-voted on because UGA officials did not consider the number of students voting sufficient to make a change legal.

FROM THE RESULTS of Tuesday's voting, the name The Reservation received a plurality, said Elections Secretary Paul Soraparu, but none of the suggested names or write-ins had a majority. Soraparu said there will be another vote on the issue in the primary of the class elections, Tuesday, May 12.

A total of 1,083 students voted that the name of the camp should be changed, to 604 voting that it should remain the same. The Reservation led, with Camp Flastacoed coming second.

ALL AMENDMENTS passed. The one to redefine class standing for candidates for University Government Association office received 1,263 votes to 256 against. The amendment to make statutory provision for class officers other than presidents passed 1,243 to 237. The amendment most popular with the students of all four, was that which would provide for the filling of a vacancy in the office of editor-in-chief of the student publications. This passed 1,458 to 149. The amendment to place the Honor System in the constitution passed 1,268 to 359. This one had the most votes against.

Soraparu said this primary set a record in the number of ballots cast. This year there were 1,862 ballots cast to last year's 1,763.

EACH CANDIDATE must submit a statement to the effect that he has complied with campaign expense limits before he will be issued a certificate of election, the Election Secretary said. No student will be installed or take office who has not received a certificate of election.

Soraparu said installation ceremonies will be held during the second or third week before the end of the Spring semester. All officers will assume office immediately upon administration of the Oath of Office with the exception of the members and chairmen of the Courts, who will

The final faculty recital of this year will be played in the Opperman Music Hall tonight at 8:15 p.m. Soloist will be Bertil Boer, flutist; he will be accompanied at the piano by Mary Esther Winslow, associate professor of piano.

SENIOR CLASS Pres. Bob Ryals said, "Every person who expects to receive a degree is individually concerned. We are also going to discuss times and dates for these functions." He explained that he realized other activities will be going on Wednesday night, "but we tried to set a date when the least activities and meetings were going on." "It will be to your advantage to come and find out your obligations and responsibilities that are expected of you before you graduate," he continued.

June Kierstead, chairman of invitations, will take orders before and after the meeting. May 6 is the final deadline for placing these orders.

University Associations Give Unbiased Evaluation of NSA

Editors Note: The following report is an unbiased evaluation of the United States National Student Association compiled by a joint committee of the National Association of Deans of Women, the American College Personnel Association, and the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators. FSU's Dean of Women, Miss Katherine Warren, is a member of the executive committee of the NADW. Dean of Student Welfare J. Broward Culpepper is a member of the executive committee of the NASPA.)

EVALUATION OF NSA

The NSA is the most representative national student organization in the United States.

The NSA Congress held each summer on a university campus brings over 500 elected student delegates from 150 American colleges and universities together with the representatives of many foreign student bodies and with recognized educational consultants for the purpose of stimulating student debate and discussion of vital contemporary affairs. The annual Congresses are practical workshops for democratic education which deserves the support of the colleges.

The United States National Student Association is not now, nor does it appear to be in danger of becoming communist- or leftist-dominated. On the contrary: NSA has spearheaded and led the mobilization of the unions of students of the free world in combating the propaganda and distortion of truth fostered by the communist International Union of Students. NSA, more than any other student group, symbolizes the youth of the free world to the students of those critical areas where the battle of ideas has not yet been resolved. NSA has demonstrated that it never fails to defeat subversion by sticking faithfully to democratic methods and principles.

As a young and growing organization, NSA has not yet achieved a secure financial basis. The solution to its financial problems appear to rest primarily upon the expansion of its membership.

In the case of NSA's attempted investigations of alleged violations of academic freedom, it is the judgment of many members of our profession and of the National Advisory Council of NSA, that NSA had adopted a program which had not been wisely implemented. NSA is to be commended for its prompt and intelligent correction of this error. NSA is now in accord with the principles of academic freedom as expressed by the American Association of University Professors, in Volume 32, Number 4, AAUP Bulletin.

The NSA is to be commended for seeking and increasing its utilization of experienced assistance from among our profession.

It is the opinion of this committee, after careful review, that the purposes and the program of the NSA are indigenous to and parallel with the student personnel point of view, and therefore deserve the support and counsel of student personnel workers in the colleges and universities of this country.

DESCRIPTION OF NSA

The USNSA is an organization of some 300 college student bodies, represented through their student governments. It was created to serve the long-existing need for a representative intercollegiate organization designed to serve the American student community, and to promote student interests and welfare.

Any college, university, junior college, normal school or technical school can join NSA upon ratification of its Constitution and payment of annual dues. NSA's membership is more than 300 institutions. Twenty-three colleges and universities have become member-schools by their action since September 1, 1952. During the same period four schools have withdrawn from NSA.

NSA's aims and purposes are "to maintain academic freedom, stimulate and improve democratic student governments, develop better educational standards, improve student welfare, promote international understanding, guarantee to all people equal rights and possibilities for education and foster the recognition of the rights and responsibilities of students to the school, the community, humanity and God, and to preserve the interests and integrity of the government and constitution of the United States of America."

Twenty-five American students returning from the World Student Congress in 1946 conceived the idea of forming a United States National Student Association. At that Congress they became aware of the fact that the U. S. stood almost alone without a representative national student group. In December, 1946, the Chicago Student Conference was called by these 25 students to consider the formation of such an organization. For three days, representatives of some 300 colleges and 25 student organizations prepared recommendations on its organization and character. A continuations committee, elected at Chicago, prepared a draft of a constitution and organized the Constitutional Convention of NSA, held at the University of Wisconsin in September, 1947. At that time, students representing over 350 colleges established the constitution and mapped a program for the newly-formed USNSA.

NSA is financed in three ways. Member colleges pay an annual assessment based upon the size of the student body. Projects of the association and its publications are a second source of revenue through direct services and sales. Special grants from outside the student community are a further source of financial support. NSA has established Educational Projects, Inc. to receive donations and to afford donors a tax deductible status. All records of the Association are audited regularly, and its financial officers are bonded.

PROGRAM

The Student Affairs program is concerned primarily with services to the student government and with the extracurricular life of the student body. The commission prepares informational materials and surveys; it sponsors the national Student Art Exhibit, the Symphony Forums, World Affairs Councils, and other cultural activities. In addition, the student affairs program assists in the development of services to special interest clubs. Academic freedom, intercollegiate athletics, social life, student health and orientation are other important phases of the commission's work.

Educational Affairs concern: the student in his educational process, legislation affecting education, student economic welfare, discrimination, inter-group relations, educational practices, scholarship opportunities, vocational guidance and similar matters concerning the educational community.

Informational services and program implementation are provided through the area headquarters of the Subcommission on Educational Practices and Human Relations, and such subcommissions as those on Legislation, Scholarship Opportunity, Vocational Guidance, and Economic Welfare.

International Affairs has as its primary aim the promotion of international student understanding and cultural exchange. This commission sponsors a foreign student hospitality program, is working to increase the number of scholarships available for study abroad, and has made possible an international exchange of information on student problems.

The commission maintains relations with student organizations in most other nations of the world and is working to establish contacts where none at present exist. It participates in the Student Mutual Assistance Program, and in other practical programs of the national unions of students participating in the annual International Student Conferences.

Student Government resource materials are available to member schools on request to the Student Government Information Service, including finance, constitutional structure, elections, handbooks, fund raising, and campus chest, and the philosophy of student government.

Publications—The national office published the NSA NEWS, a publication containing news of interest to students on education, student life and NSA activity. It published each month the STUDENT GOVERNMENT BULLETIN AND REPORT which includes reports, articles, project outlines, and studies in administration and techniques for the use of student governments throughout the nation.

Affiliations—NSA is the only national student organizatoin holding membership in the ACE and NEA. Other affiliations include UNESCO, Young Adult Council, WSSF.

ORGANIZATION

The NSA Congress is composed of representatives of all the member colleges. The size of each school's delegation is determined by the size of its student body. The Congress meets annually for more than a week. The Congress elects the national officers of NSA.

The National Executive Committee is composed of one or two representatives of each of the 20 regions in the organization. It meets between congresses to review the program, advise the staff, consider new policies and prepare the program for the Congress.

Each member of NSA belongs to one of its 20 geographical regions. Regional organizations are largely autonomous, having individual constitutions, executive officers, etc.

All of the national officers are elected by the Annual Congress. The officers must have been students at the time of their election by the Congress.

● CONGRATULATIONS

Congratulatoins are due to Paul Soraparu and his Election Committee for the most efficiently handled election held at this university.

Paul has performed his job as Elections Chairman remarkably well since he assumed his position only several weeks ago and in this short time prepared for the most important election of the year.

A record voting turnout did not phase the smoothly run polls. The votes were tabulated with a speed and accuracy that indicated careful preparation.

Again, we say congratulations to the Elections Committee and its Chairman for a job well done. We look forward to class elections conducted in the same excellent manner.

MOVIE REVIEW . . .

Film Features John Wayne

BY JUNE MORGAN
Feature Editor

It looks like John Wayne has turned in his ten-gallon-hat roles for a big slice of human interest drama, if his two latest roles are any measuring stick. In the same vein of the "Quiet Man" he appears this time as a two-fisted down-and-outer who fights his way to happiness.

The new film Trouble Along the Way is the big weekend attraction at the State Theater and play through Tuesday, April 28. A rich cast includes, Donna Reed, Charles Coburn, and Marie Wilson

PERHAPS one of the year's most heart rendering tales, "Trouble Along the Way" is the story of a man, who is deserted by his wife, and his struggle to bring up his growing child. One of his greatest obstacles is a pessimistic view of the features which turns him to pool playing, drinking, fighting and similar past times usually indulged in by the discouraged and unsuccessful.

Meanwhile the rector of a Catholic College learns that his school will be closed unless a $170,000 debt cannot be paid within six months. Realizing that the football team is the only answer to raising the sum, the rector hires Coach John Wayne to help them win their games and thereby raise the money. At first Wayne seems to be achieving the college's aim to raise money, but his methods aren't in keeping with the high ideals of the schools. More trouble is added to his already too heavy burden when his ex-wife, Marie Wilson, charges him with neglect of their daughter, portrayed by Sherry Jackson. The probation officer Donna Reed, investigates the situation and succeeds in helping the Coach, the College and all concerned.

OF COURSE Charles Cobrun is his old loveable self, a mixture of humor and heartbreak. His role as the unhappy rector is the outstanding performance of the picture.

John Wayne, as the two-fisted "Duke," the Coach who tries all the wrong methods and is always knee-deep in trouble, shows his ability to drain sympathy from the most stoic of audiences.

DONNA REED, the probation officer, shows all the calm and control it takes to soothe the many stormy situations, and Sherry Jackson, "Duke's" daughter wins a place as an outstanding new juvenile star.

Michael Curtiz directed the film.

ALAN LADD represents the fearless fighting Foreign Legion in his starring role in Desert Legion, weekend feature film now playing at the Florida Theater.

He rides the Arabian sands leading his men against bandit Arab tribes and falls prey to the wiles of voloptuos queen of the tribes, portrayed by Arlene Dahl.

THE technicolor epic also co-stars famous actor, Richard Conte.

Evening of Opera Features Premiere

BY C. M. CARROLL

A most unusual and highly entertaining evening of opera was presented in Opperman Music Hall Wednesday, the program being sponsored by the School of Music.

The world premiere of "The Research," a new opera by Walter Kaufmann, with music faculty members in the singing and directing roles, formed the first half of the program. Benjamin Britten's one-act opera, "The Little Sweep," was the second item of the evening. This was produced and acted by members of the class in opera, under the direction of Walter James CLEARLY, IT was Prof. Jame's night. In the role of the "research philosopher" in the first opera, he very nearly stole the show from the other two leads, Joao Daye James and Herman Gunter, Jr. As musical and stage director of the Britten opus, he turned out a first-class show, a stunning and even spectacular performance.

Kaufman's work is not an opera in the usual sense of the word, but a music drama, a sepcies of stage work which allows music to act as a catalyst to the action, as long as it keeps its proper distance and doesn't try to get tuneful Expertly acted by the three principals and expertly directed by Lloyd Slind and Alan Thomson, "The Research" seemed weak on the musical side Robert Glotzbach did a superb job of accompaniment at the piano.

THE PRINCIPAL roles of "The Little Sweep" were taken by FSU students Adrian Katcham, Ray Nye, Bigit Wikstrom, Jane Parkman, Adrianne Lowe and Alice Peacock, assisted by five elementary students from the Demonstration School and Sealey School. The latter were Avery Freeman, Susan Ainsworth, William Kirk, Lynn Witherspoon and Judith James.

The entire cast acquitted themselves splendidly, especially (and inevitably) the youngsters, who quickly captivated the audience and made the show their own. Their task was complicated no little bit by Britten's occasionally querulous setting of the text, which, being in British English, was often as incomprehensible as any other foreign language

VIOLET MANDESE and Richard Jacobs provided an admirable accompaniment at two pianos, aided by Pat Johnson and Louanne Self in the percussion section. The near-capacity audience also earned an orchid in the Britten work by acting as the chorus, singing four songs which were very competently and wittingly taught them by Dr. Wiley Housewright before the curtain went up.

University Service Sponsors Seminar In India This Year

World University Service committees of India and Canada are sponsoring a seminar on "The Human Implications of Development Planning," this summer in India. American student and faculty members are eligible to participate in the study and analysis of the economic, social, and political situation in Asia and North America, with particular reference to South Asia and Canada.

The seminar will comprise over 100 delegates, and will take place during the five weeks following the approximate date of June 7 at a Hill Station in India. At the end of the seminar, participants will split into small groups which will tour Asian universities and visit development projects in Southern and Southeast Asia.

Delegates will represent such countries as Pakistan, Thailand, Indonesia, Ceylon, Burma, and Malaya, as well as Canada, India, and the United States.

Participants will be chosen for their intellectual calibre and record of participation in extra-curricular activities. Expenses will be partially subsidized by the WSSF, due to a generous grant from the Ford Foundation.

Letters to Editor:

Thanks

Dear Students,

In respects to this past election, I would like to thank all of you faithful students for giving me your full support and for electing me to the office of Chief Justice of the Traffic Court I commend you on behalf of the interest and spirit evidenced by your strong turnout and record vote at the polls Tuesday.

If there are any questions in respects to the Student Traffic Court or Regulations, please feel free to consult with me at any time. You may find me residing at Freshman Hall, room 515.

In closing, I would like to thank Bob Drake, his committee and the delegates of the Student Party for making it possible to run in this past election. You all have done a grand job

Respectfully,
Klyne "Pinky" Nowlin

Thanks

Dear Students:

I should like to extend my heartiest appreciation for the support which was given me in the recent UGA election. It will be our chief aim and concern to publish a Flambeau worthy of our student body and student government.

In the near future tryouts will be conducted for all those students who are interested in working on the newspaper. Positions will be open in all phases of staff work

Anyone wishing to receive more information may contact the Flambeau office

Sincerely
Marcia Morris

Thanks

Dear Editor,

I want to take this chance to thank with all sincerity and humility those people who helped and encouraged me during my recent campaign for Flambeau editor.

And of course I want to thank all those wonderful people who voted for me and made a real contest out of the editorial race

Naturally I feel disappointment after having lost so close a race, but there are several things which comfort me

First of all, I feel that I lost to an excellent opponent, and I know that she will be an excellent editor. We have already agreed that the two of us will work together next year to make of the student newspaper what we both urged during the campaign: namely, a better, more informative, more interesting Flambeau.

Secondly, I have had during the last couple of weeks an opportunity to meet so many people and make so many new friends that I feel all the hard work of campaigning would have been well worth the effort even had I got nothing else.

I believe the interest that Marcia and I stirred up in this election will be good for the Flambeau. I hope those whom we aroused will keep this interest and work with the paper in the future.

Again my thanks to my supporters and my best wishes to the new editor,

Sincerely,
Bruce Galpin

Nannette McLain on the ballot proved a walk-off for Jackson. He led McLain through Westcott and Student Center balloting with a good margin. But Nannette copped a majority of the votes in Seminole Dining Hall. The Seminole votes were 212 for McLain and 208 for Jackson. McLain's total was 714 votes against Jackson's 1,026.

All 11 other candidates, running unopposed on the ballot received tallies of four figures. Lillian Avis took the office of Vice-President of Women's Affairs with 1591 votes. Her male counterpart, Wayne Terry, copped the Veep of Men's Affairs with 1,550 "thumbs - up" on the ballot

CAROLYN GOLA proved the most popular of the unopposed candidates with her tally of 1,596 votes. "Connie's" largest single vote came from Westcott precinct with 691.

The office of Chairman of Judiciary, whose only candidate was Yvonne McCarthy, received 1,578 votes for Yvonne with a reported "no write-ins." Yvonne's strongest vote, again, was Westcott with 679 votes

KLYNE NOWLIN, running for Chairman of Traffic Court, copped the office with 1,564 approvals "Pinky," as Nowlin is better known, had his strongest support from Westcott with 682 votes, and his weakest turned out to be Seminole Hall with 371.

Charlotte West, Student Party's candidate for Chairman of University Recreation Association took the office with 1,520 votes As in all the other cases, West's largest vote came from Westcott where her tally was 659. Her lowest figure was 380 from Seminole

THE GENERAL run of the returns indicated that Westcott votes were largest, then Student Center came second in number, and finally Seminole Hall. Perhaps this could point to the relative popularity of the three areas for future electioneering

John Howard, running for Editor of Smoke Signals, FSU's humor magazine, tallied 1540 votes.

BECKY BROWN will fill the office of Tally-Ho Editor next year after her popular vote of 1,515.

The candidates for business managers of the three campus publications were last on the ballot, but by no means least. Nancy Lowe, candidate for the Student Party for Flambeau business manager took 1,539 total votes, while Al Shuler, Student Party's candidate for business manager of Tally Ho took 1,507 total approvals.

Paul Soaraparu, UGA Elections Chairman, said there were many write-in votes, some valid, but most of those written in would probably not have qualified for the offices.

PLANS ARE already in the making for the coming elections for class officers, court members and, of course, the promised hotly contested senatorial race.

Soaraparu said the Senatorial elections will touch off the next big electioneering campaigns beginning Tuesday, May 5.

Legislative Group

law, as is the case with all proposed bills.

ANOTHER BILL directly affecting FSU was passed favorably by the committee Also introduced by Bryant, it provides that the Board of Control can't issue any self-liquidating certificates unless previously approved by the legislature

The building of the eight new fraternity houses on campus was financed this way. At present the Board of Control is in the process of making it possible to build five more of these small dormitories.

THE BILL COULD prevent their construction unless the house accepts the committee's recommendation to approve this project and others already under way.

The purpose of legislative approval is to give the people of Florida a chance to approve the spending of their tax money in such matters, through their senators and representatives.

ANOTHER OF Bryant's bills stirred up debate in the committee before it was temporarily passed. It is his proposal to put the Ringling Art Museum under the control of the Board of Commissioners of State Institutions, instead of under the Board of Education.

Bryant feels that the museum has institutional problems such as large scale purchasing and upkeep He says that it has educational features at the higher level but it is primarily a museum and tourist attraction.

WILLIAM POWERS, secretary of the Board of Control, argued that a survey done by directors of large museums in New York City and Chicago showed that the museum would definitely serve better if tied to higher education.

The museum is a privately endowed, and not a custodial institution It serves FSU with a valuable three-week seminar once a year. Also prepared lectures are given to visiting groups of secondary school children and maintains a library.

next week on the constitutionality of this action by Women's Senate.

THE 11 O'CLOCK closing time goes back to the war years During World War II the country shifted its clocks back an hour and called it "War Time." FSU followed suit and also turned back an hour.

Howevar, co-eds found they were getting up at 6:30 a. m. instead of their usual 7:30 in order to make 6 o'clock classes To remedy this, the University shifted their whole daily schedule ahead a half-hour, making the dorm closing time 11 instead of 10:30.

After the war nobody objected, so the 11 o'clock hour remained.

The Seminoles seem to be going fairly strong this just as they did last year. And, like last year, the ent support is nothing short of lousy. Roetzheim To Do TV Show With Nationwide Coverage

Olympic Star Also to Perform With Gymkana in Chicago

Gymnast Bill Roetzheim, twice a member of the United States Olympic team, will perform before a coast-to-coast television audience on a Chicago sports program. Roetzheim, who will compete with the Florida State Gymkana team in the AAU, will go through his high bar routine, Sunday night and perform on the side-horse on Monday.

The program is broadcast from station WGN-TV on the Tom Duggan Sport's show.

AFTER THE show, Roetzheim will be joined by the rest of the Florida State Gymnasts in Chicago where they will go after the AAU title, May 1, 2, 3. Last year the squad finished second behind the Philadelphia Turners and earlier this Spring tne Gymnasts finished fifth in the NCAA.

But they have been strengthened since the NCAA meet by the addition of three stand-out performers who didn't compete in the National collegiate. They are Roetzheim, who was ineligible as a graduate student; Joe Taylor a freshman and Dick Gutting who was declared ineligible by the NCAA for accepting pay for his performances. They are eligible since the AAU is open to all amateurs. Taylor, who is from Philadelphia, has been called by Coach Hartley Price "a good Olympic prospect for 1956."

GYM MENTOR Price, whose squad has already taken five meets this Spring, figures that his team "on paper, should finish about fifth." But he added "with a little luck, we could squeeze into third."

Price picks the Los Angeles Turners to overthrow the Philadelphia Turners as national champs and picks the NCAA champs, Penn State, to finish fourth. The Los Angeles squad has been bolstered by the addition of two members of the Southern California team who competed in the '52 Olympics. For third, Price predicted UCLA, who boast the nation's three top rope-climbers.

BESIDES THE TV show, Roetzheim's picture will appear on the posters advertising the AAU meet. And Price also anoounced that Dick Gutting will go through his regular comedy trampoline act after the regular competition.

The Florida State Gymkana team will leave Tuesday. The meet is slated for the University of Illinois Navy Pier in Chicago.

Seminoles Sign Carrabelle Star, Are Near Others

FSU's pigskin mentor, Tom Nugent, says that the Seminoles have signed Bobby Smith, a back from Carrabelle, and hopes to land several more top football prospects within the next few days.

Smith, who starred in basketball as well as football at Carrabelle, had attracted the attention of at least one Southeastern Conference power before signing with the Seminoles.

Nugent says that be also has an eye on several boys from Miami and at least one player from Cairo, Georgia.

One Miami boy, thought to be quarterback Lee Corso of Miami Edison, was reported visiting on the campus last weekend, although Nugent did not confirm the report.

A Clewiston star who was reported beaded towards the University of Tennessee several weeks ago, and a couple of midwestern high school stars, are also on the list of players who may join the Seminole camp soon.

SN Wallops PDT In No-Hit Game

Sigma Nu's Jim Parkhurst chunked a dazzling no-hitter, which, along with numerous errors on Phi Delta Theta, enabled them to come out on the top end of a 14-0 score in the intramural softball game Tuesday afternoon.

In addition to his fine pitching Parkhurst connected solidly with one of the offerings of PDT pitcher Bob Berto, which was good for a homer. All told, Sigma Nu got only 5 hits, but added to the errors made by the Phi Delts, this was enough. The Delts made a total of 15 errors.

DON COOPER was battery mate for Berto, while Warren Cobb was backstop for Jimmy Parkhurst.

In the SPE-LCA game, Gordon and Nessalke of Lambda Chi also swatted homers, but evidently this was not enough, as they fell to Sigma Phi Epsilon 12-6.

LAROCHE OF Sigma Phi connected with a fast ball to get a non-stop trip around the diamond in the fifth innina.

Oropeza and Daye were the batteries for SPE. Wyalt and mansfield played the lead slots for Lambda Chi Alpha.

THE GAME between Delta Tau Delta and Pi Kappa Alpha was also a homer studded affair, with two of them being contributed by Slatcn of DTD. McClean also came through with one for PKA.

The pikes came out on the short end of a 10-9 score which they protested. No change has been made as yet, but it is possible that they will have a return game to decide the official score.

BATTERIES for Tuesday's game were Blanchard-Kinsaul for Delta Tau and McLean-Wisner for PKA.

Other scores of Tuesday's games were: Phi Kappa Tau, 15-Theta Chi, 2, Sigma Chi, 16-Pi Kappa Phi, 1, and Kappa Sigma, 23-Kappa Alpha, 11.

Most U. S. Foods Are Over-Refined Lecturer States

American hogs today are fed a better balanced and more efficient diet on the whole than the American people, Dr. Wendell H. Camp of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia, said recently at Florida State University, Tallahassee.

The prominent explorer-botanist was sponsored for an FSU lecture by Sigma Xi, national science honor society. His extensive field work and botanical explorations have taken him into Canada, Mexico and Central and South America.

DR. CAMP'S conclusions on over-refined American foods were made after conferring with a chief chemist for a large and well-known concern processing both human foods and animal feeds. They agreed that really nutritive material actually was refined out of foods destined for human consumption, and put into foods destined for animals and poultry.

"Much of the food reaching American tables is so 'refined' that little but its caloric value is left. The addition of accessory vitamins and minerals, as now widely practiced, does not begin to return the whole nutritive value of the original food material," Dr. Camp stated.

ALTHOUGH THE question of American food-processing would seem to be adequately taken care of, Dr. Camp said there is still need for education in what constitutes a wholly nourishing and economic diet. He pointed out that food processors would automatically fall into line with definite demands made of them.

House Grants Teachers $350 Yearly PayRaise

The House of Representatives, yesterday afternoon passed the bill giving Florida's school tachers a $350 a year pay raise. The Senate was also considering a similar bill but they had not come to a decision as of 4 00. The Senate is certain to okay a raise but the amount of it is still in debate.

The pay boost, long advocated by teacher and education groups, will effect some 172 FSU students who will graduate this June from the school of education. The increase, what ever it is, goes into effect this summer.

THE BILL which the house passed, falls short of the $560 amount asked by the powerful Florida Education Association and the Parent-Teachers Association It is also below the figure urged by many legislators and also the board of education. Thomas E. Bailey, the board of education's head, has been pushing for a $600 boost.

However, since only the house has acted, the figure could be raised (or lowered) by action of the Senate. Charles E Johns, president of the Senate, said from the Senate floor, Wednesday, that he was supporting an increase for teachers of $450.

THE GALLERIES in the legislature was packed Wednesday with the many teacher groups lobbying for a pay increase. And they were also on hand to testify at the appropriation committee hearings. Those of the school group who did have the chance to air their views, stressed the point that Florida's school teachers are badly underpaid and as a result there is an acute teachers shortage. Many potential teachers have gone into other work which pays better wages, such as secretarial and clerical work. It was also asserted that teachers' pay has not kept pace with the rising cost of living.

An attempt was made in 1951, during the legislative session to get a $300 a year increase but it failed when the Senate and the House could not come to agreement on how to raise the money.

AT THE PRESENT, school teachers in Florida receive from $2299 to $2800 a year, which is slightly below the national average.

The money to finance the boost, whatever the amount, will come from the $25,000,000 surplus fund in the State's till.

VOL. XXXIX, No. 46 PUBLISHED BY STUDENTS OF FLORIDA STATE UNIVERSITY, TALLAHASSEE, FLORIDA Tuesday, April 28, 1953

Appropriation Bill Passes Granting FSU $11,522,000

Representatives Cut Requested Budget; Committee to Work Out Compromise

The Florida Senate yesterday passed an appropriations bill, corresponding to the recommendations of the Senate Appropriations Committee, which would grant Florida State University the $11,522.000 budget submitted to the State Budget Commission by the administration.

The House however, passed appropriations amounting to $11,261 000—a cut of $261.000 from the requested amount.

A CONFERENCE committee composed of three members from each House will work out a compromise between the two conflicting figures.

Sen. Tapper of Port St. Joe recommended a cut of $400 000 from the University of Florida's budget but the Senate voted down his proposal by a large majority Sen Floyd of Apalachicola and Sen. Shands of Gainesville led the fight against slashes in the school appropriations. They declared that these appropriations were necessary to obtain the best possible teachers in Florida's institutions of higher learning.

IN THE FACE of this defeat, Sen. Tapper withdrew his amendments for other proposed slashes which would have affected Florida State University.

The FSU appropriations passed by the Senate included:

SALARIES for a one-year period $4 747.802: salaries for a two-year period. $9.498.120.

Expenses for a one-year period. $950 262 for a two-year period. $1 920 634

COMBINED APPROPRIATIONS for salaries and expenses for the first year total $5.698.064. The total for these two items for a two-year period amounts to $11.418.754.

Appropriations for a new library total $1.300.000.

$1,100,000 was appropriated for a new Men's Physical Education Building: $850,000 for a new Home Economics Building.

$750 000 was appropriated for general classroom purposes.

$200,000 was appropriated for the purpose of remodeling the old library, the Demonstration School, and the Physical Science Building.

The total appropriation for new buildings and remodeling was $4 580.000.

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS by Dick Bibler

"He says he finished the course work for the M. A. 40 years ago—but he had a little trouble getting his thesis accepted."

HONOR SYSTEM INTERPRETED

(Editor's Note: The following guest editorials on the Honor System were written by faculty members at the request of members of the Honor Committee. Both Miss Parker and Dr. Rogers attended the University of Virginia, which is noted for its working Honor System.)

IDEAL HARMONIOUS

By DAISY PARKER

Over a century past, Thomas Jefferson spoke these words to a group trying to formulate a system of discipline for a newly founded institution of higher learning:

> "It will then be for the wisdom and discretion of the visitors to perfect and prepare a system of government, which, if founded in reason and comity, will be more likely to nourish in the minds of our youths the combined spirit of order and self-respect, so congenial with our political institutions and so important to be woven into the American character."

The Honor System is an ideal harmonious with "the combined spirit of order and self-respect, so congenial with our political institutions and so important to be woven into the American character." Whether the Honor System is a practical attainment in our University may, however, be a question of controversy.

The idea of the Honor System rests upon the fundamental principle of democracy—the worth and the responsibility of the individual. In democratic governmental theory and practice, there is the belief that trust offered the individual can create a worthiness of that trust. There is the important belief, also, that the success of the system comes slowly, experimentally, painfully, and at a high cost.

The success of democratic government and the Honor System depends on the acceptance of each individual as a person worthy of trust and responsibility. That acceptance, based on the belief that each individual (or most individuals) can be made an honorable person, will have to prevail for the ultimate success of democratic government and the Honor System.

The individual himself—you, I—has to become a worthy, responsible individual to lead others to ethical responsibility. In the United States of America, in Florida State University, each of us has an obligation. Democratic government and an Honor System are not quick and easy realities. And they will not be realities, one without the other.

BASIC UNDERPINNING

By Dr. W. H. RODGERS

There are several things concerning the Honor System in the Florida State University which are of concern to every member of the student body and to all the faculty as well.

The first is that a good working Honor System must be the basic underpinning of any successful and responsible Student Government. Self-government implies responsibility. No democratic government can long survive which is not founded strongly on the attributes of honesty, integrity, and sound judgment. A student government that does not accept the obligation of protecting the members of the group from infringement of its moral code, whatever that code may be, is of course no government at all. A student body that delegates to the faculty the enforcement of a moral code because it is itself unwilling to undertake the responsibility is weak and inept. A working Honor System goes hand in hand with a competent Student Government.

In the second place, the standard of honor is of prime importance to any democratic group. The law-abiding citizens pay a high price in any democratic society for the dishonest minority. For example, fire insurance costs are higher because of a relatively few arsonists. Police courts are expensive because of the number of criminals that pass through them. Society must have laws to protect itself and must pay the cost of enforcing those laws. Whenever a society can lift its standard of honesty, it by that much relieves itself of the burden of enforcement.

In the third place, a working Honor System, concerned chiefly with the basic principle of honesty in social relations, is a sign of moral maturity. Young men and young women who are intelligent enough to gain admission to a University should have attained that degree of moral responsibility compatible with their status. They should be competent to maintain in their group the best standards of honor and integrity without supervision of the faculty or administration of the institution. Anything short of this is surely an admission of inadequacy.

Finally, it is obvious to everyone that an Honor System will be effective only in proportion to the will of the student body to make it work. The students of the Florida State University will have precisely the kind of Honor System which they want. The effectiveness of the Honor System on this campus will be measured by the earnest desire of the student body to have and to maintain a standard of honor of which it may be proud.

THE SPECTATOR

BILL INTRODUCED TO ABOLISH COMMISSION

By WARREN COBB

The controversial State Improvement Commission has gone the way of all flesh—literally if not figuratively.

Duval County's Sen. Wayne Ripley introduced a bill earlier in this session to abolish the commission by repealing the act which created it in 1933. Ripley contended that the commission had outlived the function for which it was intended during the depression and that in floating bonds it has circumvented the State Constitution, which forbids the state to incur bonded indebtedness. This would also necessarily apply to an agency of the state—i. e., the Improvement Commission.

On top of this came the scandal uncovered by a House Committee involving the substitution of cheaper and inferior materials, the failure to ask for bids, exorbitant spending, etc. in connection with the renovation of the House Chamber, the old Senate Chamber, and air-conditioning of the north wing of the capitol—all under the supervision of the Improvement Commission.

All told, the project amounted to $608,000.

This situation was originally brought to light by Speaker of the House Bryant.

Last Tuesday the commission was reduced to the status of a minor agency by the State Cabinet. This step was favorably looked upon by Gov. McCarty, who had previously announced his intention to curb the commission's borrowing power.

Walter Keyes, director of the commission that has in seven years borrowed 60 million dollars for public works, was forced to resign his $7,900 a year job. Keyes was a product of the Warren administration.

The commission will now lose its financing and construction supervising functions as a result of its extravagance and corruption. It will, when reorganized by McCarty, be designed to handle only such items as dealing with the federal government for surplus property disposal, grants for hospital constructions, etc.

Ripley's bill to abolish the commission completely (thereby committing its functions to the State Board of Administration) and, also, a bill by Sen. Gautier, New Smyrna Beach, to limit its spending to $100,000 in any two year period without express legislative approval are now before the Senate Governmental Reorganization Committee. It is waiting for McCarty to act in conjunction with his newly appointed board members.

It would seem to me that the Cabinet and McCarty were thoroughly justified in their action, considering the apparent irregularities in the projects of the old commission.

However, the evidence in the case is not altogether negative, as these recent developments might indicate.

Sen. Ripley's charge that the Improvement Commission, as a state agency, controverted the Constitution by floating bonds is not the whole story.

It is my understanding that the state was not liable for those bonds. For example, holders of the bonds on the new Mathews Bridge in Jacksonville cannot sue the state if the toll does not suffice to retire the bonds. They can only foreclose the bonds and assume operation of the bridge. It, not the state treasury, is the collateral.

The Improvement Commission has been responsible for many worthy enterprises—e.g., the Suwannee County Hospital at Live Oak, the Home for Delinquent Girls at Ocala, the T. B. sanitarium at Lantana, many added facilities at Chattahoochee, etc.

It also supervised construction of the new Supreme Court Building, the Caldwell Building and the State Road Building.

Tallahasseans may be grateful to the commission for these latter constructions due to the fact that they have permanently established the State Capitol here and, therefore eliminated controversy regarding its possible shift to other part of the state more centrally located.

With the emasculation of the old Improvement Commission arises the question as to what agency or group is to assume such projects as it was responsible for—the inefficiency with which it may have carried them out notwithstanding.

It is quite unlikely that the individual counties could shoulder this financial obligation. So, if the state is legally unable to operate such a program based on floated bonds (a question for the attorney-general to decide), it would seem that a constitutional amendment to create such a state agency—to be intelligently supervised by the Legislature—would be expedient.

Labor Department Issues Job Lists

What lies ahead for the '53 grads is a good question to be answering along about now. The big oportunity branches are appealing for new people, but it seems quite a few of the June grads took all the wrong courses in college.

Thus for the benefit of the grads—but more for the benefit of the undergrads with a few more years to change their courses and get on the big band wagon of available vocations, the U. S. Department of Labor has recently issued a short run-down on the available jobs in the nation.

Highest on the list of opportunities are the positions in the field of elementary education. The demand in September is greater than ever before as the bumper crop of war babies hits the primary grades. National average of teacher salaries lie between $3400 and $4000 annual pay. With the proposed teacher raise, Florida will be paying around $2800.

THE NEED for secondary teachers has dropped since 1950 but vacancies are still available in home economics, girl's health and physical education, agriculture, industrial arts, and certain physical sciences. Undergrads enrolled in pre English or social studies teaching courses are advised to change to other areas or risk unemployment upon graduation.

Opportunities are also at a peak for engineering graduates. The department predicts an annual need of 30,000 new engineers. Chemical, electrical and mechanical engineers should look to private manufacturing concerns for employment—while the government is employing civil engineers.

DEMAND for personnel in the natural sciences and chemistry has increased sharply in the past two years. Median income for chemists was $5800 dollars. Those possessing a Ph.D. might count on $6800 per year.

Young physicists who specialize in nuclear physics, electronics, quantum theory, atomic and molecular physics ride the crest of opportunity in line with the nation's defense program. Median incomes are $7000 in private industry, $6300 in government and $5600 in colleges and universities.

ALL AREAS of health work show shortages that mean opportunity for new graduates, but increased hospital construction adds to the already pressing need for young nurses. Annual salaries range from $3000 to $3588.

In the fields of business and law, the recent demand is for additional personnel who specialize in accounting, advertising copywriting, market research, sales, statistics, insurance underwriting and personnel management. Lawyers are also much in demand.

SOCIAL WORKERS of all varieties are quick to find placement after graduation. Salaries range from $2900 to $3710.

IN BEST FORM

Indian Tracksters Win Triangular Meet in Ga.

Displaying their best form of the season, the Florida State track team again won a triangular meet over University of Georgie and Georgia Tech. The Seminoles also won last year.

With seven firsts', the Seminoles scored 72 points to Georgia's 63¼ and Tech's 38¼. The meet was run-off on the Towne's Field track in Athens.

NEXT SATURDAY, the FSU trackmen will close out the home season against Loyola University of New Orleans. On the west campus oval at 2 30. The Seminoles will be out to avenged the 79-52 defeat handed them by Loyola last year.

As in most of the track meet's this season, big Carlos Fraundorfer paced FSU with 18¾ points: the high of the meet. He won the javelin, shot put and discus and was second in the broad jump. He also ran a lap of the 440 relay which finished second.

ALSO OUT-STANDING for the Seminoles, was Woody Parkar as he took firsts' in the 440 and broad jumps and second in the 220 yard dash. His time of 48.5 in the 440—his speciality—established a new FSU and Towne's Field record. He also anchored the winning mile relay team.

Then by winning the broad jump, Parker salted the meet away for the Seminoles since they were trailing Georgia up to this event.

WITH BILL Wagoner winning the mile and his teammate Ken Jarrett following in second place, the Seminoles got off to a blazing start. Wagoner's time of 4.39 and Jarrett's 4 40 are both field records.

FSU kept up the pace by winning the next two events—shot put and 440—before Georgia's Otho Dodd ended the string by taking the 100 yard dash in 10.00. Dodd, who has not been beaten this year, also won the 220. Georgia's other double winner was versatile Kermith Perry who won the high and low hurdles. He also tied for second in the high jump.

SENIOR JOE Pracassi, with a jump of 12'6", tied for first place in the pole vault with Ralston of Georgia Tech. It was one of the 12 field records set by State trackman during the rainy afternoon.

Defense Stressed In 2nd Week Of Basketball Drills

Florida State's Seminoles move into the second 10-day portion of their spring basketball drills this week

Coach J K "Bud" Kennedy and 25 Seminole cage aspirants have forsaken the spring sunshine for the stuffy confines of a gym in order to improve on what was FSU's weakest phase last season —defense.

Three players have been particularly impressive this spring. They are Ed Wursbach of Daytona Beach, Bill Wisner of Crystal Beach and Edwin Reeves a six-foot, five-inch transfer from South Georgia Junior College.

The Seminoles will have eight lettermen back for the 1953-54 campaign, including Ham Wernke, the sophomore all-state sensation who shattered a half-dozen school scoring marks with a 468-point production last season.

IF YOU CAN WIN THESE WINGS YOU CAN EARN OVER $5,000 A YEAR AFTER GRADUATION

Important facts about the opportunities for YOU as a Commissioned Officer—Pilot or Aircraft Observer—in the United States Air Force

Must I be a college graduate to take Aviation Cadet Training?
No. But you must have completed a minimum of 60 semester hours or 90 quarter hours toward a degree. In addition, under the new Aviation Cadet training program, you must be between the ages of 19 and 26½ years, unmarried, and in good physical condition—with high requirements for eyes, ears, heart and teeth.

How long before I get my commission?
60 calendar weeks. You will receive the finest aviation training in the world—training that not only equips you to fly modern military aircraft but prepares you for executive and administrative work as well. At the completion of your training, you will have acquired a commission as a 2nd Lieutenant and the coveted silver wings of the United States Air Force.

Where do I take my training?
Pre-flight training will be at Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas. Primary, basic and advanced training will be taken at any one of the many Air Force bases located throughout the South and Southwest.

What happens if I flunk the training course?
Every effort is made to help students whose progress is unsatisfactory. You can expect extra instructions and whatever individual attention you may require. However, if you fail to complete the course as an Aviation Cadet, you will be required to serve a two-year enlistment to fulfill the minimum requirement under Selective Service laws. Veterans who have completed a tour of military service will be discharged upon request if they fail to complete the course.

What pay do I get as an Aviation Cadet? And after?
As an Aviation Cadet you draw $109.20 a month pay. In addition, you get summer and winter uniforms, flight clothes, equipment, food, housing, medical and dental care and insurance . . . all free. After you are commissioned a 2nd Lieutenant you will be earning $5,300.00 a year—with unlimited opportunities for advancement.

Are all Aviation Cadets trained to be Pilots?
No. You can choose between becoming a Pilot or an Aircraft Observer. Men who choose the latter will become commissioned officers in Navigation, Bombardment, Radar Operation, or Aircraft Performance Engineering.

Do Aircraft Observers get flying training, too?
Yes. Aircraft Observer Cadets receive approximately 200 hours of "in the air" instructions. The primary phase of Aircraft Observer training is the same for all branches (navigation, bombardment, etc.). The basic and advanced phases of training vary, depending on the specific course you pursue.

What kind of airplanes will I fly?
You will fly jets. The Pilot Cadet takes his first instructions in a light, civilian-type plane of approximately 100 horsepower, then graduates to the 600 horsepower T-6 "Texan" before receiving transition training in jets. You then advance gradually until you are flying such famous first-line aircraft as F-86 Sabre, F-89 Scorpion, B-47 Stratojet, B-50 Superfortress. Observer Cadets take flight instructions in the C-47 Dakota, the T-29 Convair, and the TB-50 Superfortress before advancing to first-line aircraft such as the F-89 Scorpion, B-47 Stratojet.

Will my commission be in the Regular Air Force or Reserve?
Aviation Cadet graduates, both Pilots and Aircraft Observers, get Reserve commissions as 2nd Lieutenants and become eligible to apply for a regular Air Force Commission when they have completed 18 months of active duty.

How long must I remain in Service?
After graduation from the Aviation Cadet Program, you are tendered an indefinite appointment in the United States Air Force Reserve and are called to active duty with the United States Air Force for a period of three years.

What recreation and leisure time will I have as a Cadet?
Discipline will be rigid—especially for the first few weeks. However, it is not all work. You'll find swimming pools, handball courts, movies and other forms of recreation on the post.

Where will I be stationed when I get my commission?
You may be stationed anywhere in the world . . . Hawaii, Far East, Europe, Puerto Rico, elsewhere. During your tour of duty, you will be in close touch with the latest developments in new flying techniques. You will continue to build up your flying experience and later should have no difficulty securing a CAA commercial pilot or navigator rating.

Your future is assured if you can qualify! Here's what to do:
1 Take a transcript of your college credits and a copy of your birth certificate to your nearest Air Force Base or Recruiting Station. Fill out the application they give you
2 If application is accepted, the Air Force will arrange for you to take a physical examination at government expense.
3 Next, you will be given a written and manual aptitude test.
4 If you pass your physical and other tests, you will be scheduled for an Aviation Cadet training class. The Selective Service Act allows you a four-month deferment while waiting class assignment.

Reporters Are Subject For Journalistic Study

Newspaper correspondents are busy "covering" the Florida legislature at Tallahassee, but this year the newsmen are being "covered" themselves.

Students at the School of Journalism are reporting on the capitol reporters. They are studying the hundreds of stories and thousands of words being written each day by the newspaper correspondents and by the news wire services.

THE STUDENTS are interested in finding out how, out of the great confusion and noise and the debates of a legislature, the newsmen produce clear, informative stories for Florida newspaper readers.

They are busy trying to learn, for instance, how do the reporters cover the sessions of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, when both are in session simultaneously.

THEY ARE INTERESTED in learning how stories are written so quickly about the fifty or more bills introduced each day. A measure may be introduced at 10 a. m. in the house and be written, transmitted and printed in your newspaper 250 or 500 miles away by 3 p. m.

The students follow reporters around to discover how they can cover a dozen legislative committee meetings and hearings going on at the same time, with at least three of them dealing with important bills.

THEY LEARNED that the Associated Press, with a five-man staff, writes some of its stories on the legislative floor on silent typewriters; then a copyboy takes the news to the AP bureau headquarters on the same floor as the house and senate.

The news articles are transmitted by teletype machines to this newspaper in a matter of minutes. The students have learned that between 30 and 50 such articles are sent out daily for morning and afternoon newspapers in Florida.

THE FSU STUDENTS have discovered that some papers have their own special correspondents to get "special angles" on stories in which their readers are especially interested. This news is sent to home offices by telephone, by telegraph, or by air-mail for Sunday papers.

One student who interviewed the telegraph manager found that more than one million words were sent out via that method in the last session of the legislature. He expects about an equal amount this year.

THE STUDENTS have found the job of covering the capitol reporters is no easy task. The reporters are busy long before the session opens and most of them have to write over-night-stories after the senators and representatives have gone home.

The students' job isn't over either, for they read and check the news which has actually appeared in the press, for the school subscribers to a number of dailies.

THE STUDENTS, working under the direction of Dr. Sidney Kobre, professor of journalism, will compile their research reports at the end of the session. These will be co-ordinated by their instructor into the first report on the capitol reporters in Florida.

Convention Called

the executive committee yesterday that he thinks the appearance of a political party system on campus has definitely boosted the interest of the students in elections and government.

"Figures don't lie," Drake said, noting there were approximately 1900 total voters in this year's UGA elections, as against last year's 1500.

DRAKE SAID the Party convention is being spread over the two nights as there is such a large number of nominations coming up. He said probably nominations for class officers and senators will be all they can handle at tomorrow night's convention, adding that nominations in the party for Judiciary, Honor Court and Traffic Court members will take place Thursday night.

According to Drake many have the mistaken idea that all 70 names will appear on one ballot to be voted on by the entire student body.

EACH CLASS, sophomore, junior and senior will have a ballot. On it will appear the names of the candidates for president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and social chairman of that class.

Under these will be listed, on the juniors' and seniors' ballot the names of those running for university court. Voters will mark two senior women and two senior men as their choice or two junior women and men, whatever ballot they use, for Honor Court.

THIS SAME procedure will hold for election of Senators, with three senior and three junior men and women to be chosen and two each from the sophomore ranks.

Election of judiciary members will follow the same basic plan as above. Three men and three women will be chosen from the Seniors, Juniors and Sophomores.

ROUNDING OUT the election will be the office of members of traffic court. This will be an election of one member from each of the three classes also.

Both Sorsparu and Drake feel the coming elections will prove equally as interesting and colorful as the last have been.

Students Submit Applications For College Qualification Tests

Major General Lewis B. Hershey, Director of Selective Service, today reminded college students that applications for the May 21 Selective Service College Qualification Test must be submitted to the Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey, not later than midnight May 11.

The May 21 test is primarily for students prevented by illness or other emergencies from taking the test April 23, but General Hershey emphasized that this did not bar any qualified student from taking the test if his application is mailed before the deadline.

HE ALSO stressed that students who have a certificate of admission for the April 23 test which they failed to use on the assigned date must submit new applications if they wish to take the May 21 test. The old certificates, he pointed out, will not admit a student to the May 21 test.

General Hershey said the May 21 test will be the last test this school year.

THE STUDENT may obtain a new application from any Selective Service local board. The application blanks should be submitted as soon as possible to the Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey, Administrators of the Test, who, in turn, will mail the admission certificate direct to the student.

To be eligible to take the Selective Service College Qualification Test an applicant on the testing date (1) must be a Selective Service registrant who intends to request deferment as a student; (2) must be satisfactorily pursuing a full-time college course, undergraduate or graduate, leading to a degree; (3) must not previously have taken the test.

Miner Becomes Party Head As Delegates Name Slate

Conradi Is Jammed With Spectators Reviewing Voting Procedure, Speeches

Amid the constant banging of the gavel for order, while delegates and on-lookers electioneered Wednesday night in Conradi, the Student Party convention elected a new party chairman and secretary, made nominations for Senators, and closed down politicking just in time for women students to get home before dormitory closing.

Charlie Miner was elected new party chairman, over Frank Shaw and Pinky Nowlin, while Bert Hollander by acclamation, was declared party secretary. The second phase of the convention began Thursday at 6 p.m., during which class nominations were made.

STARTING at 7 30, all available seats of the auditorium were filled, with people standing in the aisles and the entrances. The crowd of interested students only began diminishing to any extent during the last hour.

At the opening of the convention by Chairman Bobby Drake, Gene Lawler, head of the organizations committee presented the constitution of the party, which mainly outlined membership, convention duties of convention, executive committee and duties of that committee. Mimeographed sheets of this, along with a tentative schedule of the candidates for nomination to come up that night, were passed out to the audience.

THE SCHEDULE ran through party chairman, Senators, Honor Court and Judiciary, but time-wise proved too optimistic as the convention did not consider Honor Court and Judiciary. Richard Jackson, delegate from Sigma Nu, moved that a phrase of the constitution be struck out. Under composition of convention the constitution stated that there "should be one delegate from each social fraternity or sorority that is a member of the party." After a discussion, "that is a member of the party" was removed. Then it was decided to table the constitution until Thursday.

Duane Gordon made the nominating speech for chairman winner Charlie Miner. It was seconded by Jack Hopkins. Gene Lawler nominated Pinky Nowlin, seconded by Richard Jackson, while Ann Blake and George Martin spoke for Frank Shaw. Bert Hollander was accepted unanimously by the delegation as secretary.

SENATE NOMINATIONS began with Sophomore men, Gordon Gasstor, Coyle Moore and Jimmy Joanos making the party slate. Others running were Harry Eilson, Herbert Lacavo, Bruce

Regents Group Provides Music For May Dance

Popular Election Held To Name King, Queen For Annual May Day

The entire student body is invited to attend the Annual May Day Dance tomorrow night in honor of the Senior Class. The Regents Quintet will provide the music from 8:30 p.m. until midnight at the Student Center.

Each year a popular election is held among the student body to choose the senior man and woman whom they wish to reign over the May Day Dance as King and Queen. This year's royal pair will be crowned by Pres Doak S Campbell.

The identity of the King and Queen will be kept secret until the crowning tomorrow night. The Senior man and woman receiving the most votes, and the eight members of their court are Donah Aase, Iris Stokes, Aughtman Ellen Avis, Barbara Brewton, Martha Hall and also Bobby Drake, Al Pierce, Bob Ryals, Bill Skipepr and Ted Steinmeyer.

The dance is being sponsored this year by Cavaliers and Cotillion dance honoraries for men and women. The dance is traditionally formal and refreshments will be served.

Legislators Allow Yearly Pay Raise For State Teachers

Teachers will have to be satisfied with $350 a year pay raise as far as Gov. McCarty is concerned. Last week the legislature decided to give this amount to the teachers. Since then there has been some talk among legislators to try for another increase.

In a formal statement the governor said he could not and would not approve one dollar more. He feels that more support for public schools should come from the counties. He expressed the hope that school boards would use their local funds to supplement teacher's pay in the future.

As the bill stands now, all the state's public school teachers will get the increase regardless of educational rank. Advocates of the $350 had argued in session that this was the highest amount that could be safely allotted. It will cost the state an additional $16,500 a year. McCarty had previously recommended a $300 increase.

The house has tabled a motion to reconsider the 75-18 vote in favor of the $350. This means that the bill can't come up again without unanimous consent.

WFSU Off the Air; FCC Serves Notice

Station WFSU has gone off the air voluntarily after receiving official notice from the Federal Communications Commission that the station has been operating in non-compliance of the Communications Act.

The station's signal has been radiating beyond the limits set for wired-wireless radio stations. Action is already being taken to adapt WFSU's transmitting system to restrict the signal to campus property or buildings used by the University.

Margaret Parham, station manager, states "operation will be resumed just as soon as a new system is installed which complies with the FCC regulations."

Rick Hutto

Station Elects Manager, Staff

Ceremony Is Planned For Officer Installation

Rick Hutto has been elected new station manager of WFSU, along with seven new staff members. Hutto replaces Margaret J. Parham as manager.

Newly elected staff members include Ann Chandley as program director, Bal LeVay as chief announcer, Stan Tippins as director of special events, Betty Anne Nasrallah as director of community, Nan Hillman and Betty Jo Grubbs as co-directors of public relations, and John Danaby as production manager.

Hutto began work with the radio station WFSU in February of 1952. He has been co-director of special events since last May. Rick is also an announcer with the Tallahassee radio station WTAL.

Three staff members will not be with the station next year due to graduation and transference. The two seniors are Bob Ducker and Leah LaPlante. Stan Harvey, this year's director of public relations is transferring to San Jose State College in California.

A special ceremony and staff meeting will take place May 14 for the installation of new officers.

Newman Club Has Successful Supper

Over 100 guests attended last Sunday's Spaghetti Supper at the Newman House when Marty Hall and Al Pierce became kitchen chefs.

The Newman Club will send nine of its members to Charleston, S. C., this weekend for the Southeastern Province Convention. Citadel will be host to over 35 Newman Club delegations from the southern states.

The delegates from FSU include Betty Palermo, province corresponding secretary; Jim Frieod and John Pistone, official voting delegates, and Charlie Jacobs, candidate for province second vice-president, Ann Yeoman, candidate for recording secretary; Betty Gooch, candidate for historian, and Shirley Johnson, Isabel Sullivan and Joan Weikert, club representatives.

Next Sunday there will be a business meeting followed by report of the convention.

Senate, Judiciary, Class Officers To Be Elected in Coming Primary

One week from this Tuesday Florida Staters will again go to the polls and elect their class officers, senators and judiciary members for next year.

Paul Soraparu, Secretary of UGA elections has announced the election rules and procedure candidates for the 70-odd officers are to follow for the May 12th primaries and the finals a week later.

DEADLINE for Declaration of Candidacy and Expense Estimates will be 5 p. m. Monday, May 4, Soraparu said, adding that a candidate cannot withdraw his declaration or change the office he is registered for after that time. These blanks are available at the UGA office and Longmire information desk.

Active campaigning, including literature and posters will start Tuesday, May 5, according to the elections chief.

Soraparu said the declaration of candidacy lists information about the candidate and his qualifications. Those seeking the office of president of their class must have had a 1.3 average for last semester or a 1.3 overall average.

ALL OTHER candidates, according to the rules, namely class and judicial system, require 1.0 average for the last semester preceeding election, or a 1.0 overall average.

The rules continue, all those running for a senior class office need to have earned 80 credits and quality points before next September. The same goes for juniors and sophomores with the candidates for junior office requiring 50 credits and sophomores 20.

A POINT that needs clearing up Soraparu said, is the question of a student's holding two offices at the same time. The regulations say no student can hold two elective UGA offices at the same time. Soraparu said the office of house president on the women's residence halls is an elective UGA office because it is connected with the House Council and the UGA Judiciary system. Therefore, house presidents cannot run for a UGA office. However he added, other dormitory officers may run if they qualify as their office is not directly connected to UGA.

Before being placed on the ballot, a candidate must file with the secretary of elections besides the declaration for candidacy, an expense estimate. This has to include all the money the candidate expects to spend during his campaign for both the primary and the final elections. Also listed is a fair evaluation of all gifts the candidate receives.

EXPENSE limits for class president are $30, for University senators 25, for members of the courts $20 and for all other minor offices $15.

The elections head said an expenditure is the spending of money by a candidate or by other persons in his behalf for campaigning purposes. A gift, he continued, is the receipt of anything of value to be used for campaigning and will include discounts on printing and campaign material.

FURTHERMORE, under the expense section of the rules it says no one can pay for anything in behalf of the candidate without the candidate's authorization.

The Flambeau will publish a complete list of the candidates' names who will appear on the Primaries ballot a week from Tuesday.

Initial Circus Show Rained Out; Sixth 'Flying High' Is Tonight

Once again crowds are flocking to Tallahassee from miles around to witness the sixth annual FSU "Flying High" Circus—the Seminoles' answer to Barnum and Bailey's "Greatest Show on Earth." Seven thousand, five hundred seats are available in Campbell Stadium for each performance.

This extravaganza was to have made its initial home appearance last night but was rained out. It will be presented tonight and Saturday night. Students should present their Student Activity book either night for admittance. Tickets are on sale at the Athletic Business Office, at Alford Brothers and at the stadium before each performance.

"FLYING HIGH" is the brainchild of Coach Jack Haskin. It originated back in 1931 at a school in Pontiac, Illinois, where Haskin was a physical education instructor. In response to a proposed Parent - Teacher demonstration, Coach Haskin organized a few acts and presented an exhibition resembling a genuine "circus."

This exhibit was so well received that a repeat performance was called for the following year. Clowns were added and the show took on all the aspects of a "Big Top" presentation.

THUS, FROM a humble beginning a troupe of forty students dressed in make-shift costumes and working on a few pieces of simple rigging, the circus has bloomed to a cast of more than 200 with 40 acts, almost 500 costumes and hundreds of pieces of rigging.

Among the special features of the 1953 show will be "The Flying Decosmos." The flying return casting act stars John and Jerry Fortune, Ruthie Spencer, John Maybee and Dick Slade. The three aerialists do pass-overs, one and one-half forward somersaults and lay-out gainers.

ONE OF THE most spectacular acts is the Stratosphere Queens accomplishing exciting intricate feats of balance while doing head stands, back balances and hip balances on the ends of a freely revolving ladder suspended 24-feet above the ground.

The aerial ladder act stars Mary Ann Council, Javleen Robertson, Jane Sissoo, Ann Whitney, Selma Morgan, Sue Humphreys, Nancy Baxter, Betty Fischer, Marlies Gessler, Bonna Witte, June Yates and Libby Fahle.

"SOUTH SEA Island Fantasy," a big production number featuring 18 co-eds, lends a bit of the South Seas atmosphere to the show. Holding the spotlight in the act will be Dick Slade and Dale Blair on the "Rola-Rola."

"Flying High"—a most unique enterprise for an institute of higher learning—appeared on the Florida State University scene for the first time in 1947, shortly after the school became co-ed. Coach Haskin proceeded to make it a year round activity.

University Singers Present Spring Concert Tuesday Nite

The University Singers directed by Dr. Wiley L. Housewright, will present their Spring concert of choral music in Opperman Music Hall Tuesday evening at 8:15 p.m. The concert will be open to the public without charge. Student conductor for the program will be Thomas Kikstrom, doctoral student in the School of Music.

Piano accompanist will be Hugh McGarity, doctoral student in the School of Music who is on leave of absence from his position as head of the music department at Clemson College.

STUDENT SOLOISTS will be Nancy Ellis, soprano of Ocalla, William Dalrymple, tenor of Bradenton and William Kelly, baritone of Lake Worth. They will sing the solo parts of the Schubert "Mass in G."

A brass ensemble will be featured with the voices in a performance of the "Jubilate Deo" from the "Sacrae Symphoniae" of Giovanni Gabrieli. The ensemble is composed of Calvin Hasbrouck, Victor Mickunas, Catheryn Zapolo, Robert Powell, Clifford Fales, Dawn Bishop, Anita Woods, Adrian Ketcham, and John Wave.

FOR THE PERFORMANCE of the "Regina Coeli" by Mozart, a solo vocal octet and an instrumental ensemble will perform with the chorus. The vocal octet will be composed of Delano Driver, Jane Shepard, Jane Cornwell, Carol Nydegger, Ray Nye, Kenn Haskins, Adrian Ketchum and William Kelly.

The instrumental ensemble will include Lee Crook, Thomas Wikstrom, Buell Agey, Lewis Danfelt, Frank Peters, Calvin Hasbrouck, Bill Holston and Frank Prindle.

Seniors Prepare Plans for Party

Plans for the Senior Class Picnic and Dance have been officially decided by the Senior Class, according to Paul Soraparu, social chairman.

The picnic will be Thursday, June 4, at Camp Flastacowo from 10 a.m. until 3 p.m. A luncheon will be at 1 p.m., with tickets of 25 cents being sold to each Senior by the Alumni Association, first floor Longmire.

SENIORS WILL be allowed to bring guests out to the picnic, but will have to pay the full cost of their food. This includes relatives, friends and students other than Seniors.

Arrangements are being made with Dr. William Tait, associate professor of physical education for men, to have recreational facilities at the picnic. Soraparu says they are trying to get Audio-Visual to set up a PA system so that there will be music at all times during the picnic.

TWO SCHOOL buses will leave the Women's Gymnasium at 9:45 a.m. and will return to East Campus at 3 p.m. The Alumni Association will send out mimeographed sheets announcing deadlines for buying lunch tickets.

The dance will be at the Student Center on the same day from 8:30 until 11:30 p.m. The Ravens will play, and the event will be semi-formal. Punch and cookies will be served. The decorations are now being planned, but candles are tentatively to be used.

Choral Group Presents Opera

The first student presentation of grand opera on the Florida State University campus will be given on Friday and Saturday evenings, May 8 and 9, when the 250-voice Choral Union offers its production of Pietro Mascagni's masterpiece, "Cavalleria Rusticana."

The performances will be in Opperman Music Hall, and will be open to the public without charge.

THE PRODUCTION is directed by Herman Gunter, Jr., assistant professor of voice in the School of Music, and stage direction is by Betty Jane Grimm, also assistant professor of voice.

Principal roles in the opera will be taken by Bette Jo Armstrong, as Mama Lucia; Claude Rhea, as Turiddu; Joan Daye James, as Lola; Edgar Evans, as Alfio and Betty Jane Grimm as Santuzza.

AN UNUSUAL feature of the production will be the employment of a symphonic chorus, which will be used as an additional choir augmenting the orchestral instruments. The symphonic choir will assist in the presentation of those portions of the opera which are usually played entirely by the orchestra, such as the prelude and intermezzo.

All production, including set design and construction, is done by members of the Choral Union.

Dedication Is Made

Today's issue of the Flambeau is dedicated to Flying High, Florida State University's student circus.

The front page makeup used today is an attempt at what is known among professional journalists as "Circus Makeup."

'Flying High' Performs in Campbell Stadium; Circus Acts Are Bigger and Better Than Ever

By JAYLEEN ROBERTSON

The Gators growled for our "Flying High" in Gainesville a few weeks ago, and the Seminoles will be whooping it up when they see their own tribe performing at Doak Campbell Stadium tonight and tomorrow night at 8:00 p.m. Coming home is the biggest thrill of the year to all the members of the troupe, and this year's homecoming is bigger and better than ever.

There are the thrilling Flying DeCosmos who fly high through the air with the greatest of ease and their clown, Jerry Fortune, who keeps the audience in stitches as he too flies (with the greatest of nonsense). FSU's favorite Johnny Fortune who is now working on his Master's thesis will be there to thrill the students with his flying pirouettes.

New and more lavish costumes will take the students' breath away—not to mention the pretty girls who'll be wearing them.

THE CLOWNS are as crazy as ever and better than ever. Watch for "Lily" who kept one of the spectators laughing all through the entire Miami show. Brand new styles are being worn by the clowns this year that will probably set the fashion for the "man about campus."

Daring acrobats will perform in break-away acts, triple and double trap routines, in dance numbers and from a rigging known as the "hanging perch."

A grand total of 100,000 people have seen the FSU circus on its tour this year, but the most important people to the troupe are FSU's own 8,000 Seminoles.

A GRAND ENTRANCE line up and parade of the entire troupe, brilliantly costumed has been added this year to let the students and other spectators see the whole troupe at once. It will be surprising to find many performers who have been sitting quietly in class all year that have suddenly sprouted horns and new heads.

Last Free Movie Starts Tomorrow; Runs Thru Friday

The comedy-romance is by Twentieth Century Fox, and plays Monday night at 7:30 at the O Club; Tuesday, South Cawthon, Wednesday, Freshman Hall, Thursday, Senior Hall, and Friday at 8 in the Music Amphitheater.

Campus Sing Is Scheduled For May 16-17

The Campus Sing sponsored by Sigma Alpha Iota and Phi Mu Alpha music fraternities, will be Saturday and Sunday, May 16 and 17 in the Opperman Hall.

The preliminaries will be on Saturday beginning at 2 p. m. The six finalists will compete in Opperman on Sunday at 2 p. m., after which the trophies will be awarded to the winning men's group and winning women's group.

PRESIDENTS OF all fraternities, sororities, and dormitories received full information and rules, plus the entry blank, which must be returned to Delano Driver, Box 278, by May 6. Only those groups whose entry blanks are received by that date will be eligible to compete by May 18. If any group failed to receive the Campus Sing rules and entry blank, contact Delano Driver to get your copy.

One change has been made in the rules since last year. This year the director of each group must be a member of that group. Any group, which is directed by a person not belonging to the group, will be automatically disqualified. This rule was passed in accordance with a request from the Panhellenic Association.

LAST YEAR Sigma Chi fraternity won the Phi Mu Alpha trophy for the third consecutive year and earned the right to keep the trophy. This year a new trophy will start "circulation" among the men's groups. Sigma Kappa sorority won the Sigma Alpha Iota trophy last year.

Tuesday's victory was the 17th of the season for Georgia, against only three losses. This brought FSU's count down to 8 losses, 11 wins and a tie.

Bob Hudson and Ralph Blinn sparked the Seminoles' 11 hit attack with two raps each. One of Hudson's was good for three basses.

Tourney Starts In Windy City

The Gymkana Club will vie for national honors today and tomorrow in Chicago when it competes in the national AAU meet at the Navy Pier Branch of the University of Illinois.

Coach Hartley Price's squad won the event in 1951 and ran a close second to the strong Philadelphia Turners last year.

So far this season, the Seminoles have copped the Southern invitational titles in addition to placing fifth in the national NCAA meet.

However, Florida State will be strengthened for the AAU meet by the addition of Olympic star Bill Roetzheim and trampoline ace Dick Gutting, both of whom were ineligible for NCAA competition.

Roetzheim was AAU all-round champ in 1949, 1950 and 1951, but slipped the fifth last year. Roetzheim, along with teammate Don Holder, looms as top candidates for the honor this weekend.

Indians Meet Stetson Today

Florida State and Stetson resume their see-saw intra-state baseball rivalry here Friday with the Seminoles looking for their fifth straight triumph over the Hatters.

Stetson moves in for single games Friday and Saturday afternoons.

The Seminoles stretched their victory string over the hatters to four in a row with 14-7 and 8-2 wins in DeLand earlier this month. The sweep gave FSU an 8-7 edge in the all-time series between the two clubs.

Coach Ralph Matherly, however, is expecting a much tougher time with the hatters this time. Stetson has improved steadily this spring, trimming Miami by an 11-4 count last week.

Friday's game will be the first home appearance for the Seminoles since splitting a two-game series with Jax Navy on April 14 and 15.

Catcher John Cuesta continues to be the big gun in the hitting department with a .342 average. In 20 games, Cuesta has hit safely 24 times in 70 trips to the plate.

Billy Mills of Tallahassee is the No. 2 hitter on the squad with 23 hits in 73 trips for a 315 average.

SIDELIGHTS of the convention included hurried vote-swapping, or getting on the bandwagon, cowbell ringing by enthusiastic supporters, a vigorous bark from a dog when a sorority delegation was called on for its vote and a harassed score keeper whose good efforts to keep up were thwarted when power-weilding domitories and day students began to rattle off their votes.

Sports Chatter

BY CLYDE WARD
Flambeau Sports Editor

"Unbounded optimism would best describe the attitude of new head grid coach Tom Nugent. When asked about FSU's chances for the coming season, Nugent said, "It's very possible and probable that we'll have a winning team," then added as an afterthought, "If all the factors are right."

The "factors" affecting a ball club are many and varied. The Seminole roster next year will be loaded with freshmen, which will probably make the factors even more variable. Coach Nugent admitted that the '53 squad will be the "wildest" team FSU has had since breaking into football. He predicts that 6 or 7 freshmen will hold positions on the first squad.

This is pulling a switch on the old custom of supplementing the varsity with good freshmen. Instead of this, Coach is planning on supplementing the good freshmen with some of the old squad.

Nugent predicts that his team will "win some games you never expected them to win, and lose others by some miscue." Could be this "wild" brand of football is just what we need to wake up the booster section at FSU. One of the best ways to snap a crowd awake is for a team to get score-happy when it was seeded as underdog. FSU will be seeded last in several games next year, so we should have a chance to find out.

Major league baseball seems to be turning into other channels besides merely winning ball games. The latest aspirations of the players seem to be to cause as many black eyes and cracked craniums on the members of other teams as possible.

The Dodgers and Giants had quite a fued in their game last week. An attempted beanball by Sal Maglie missed batter Carl Furillo, and on the next pitch, Furillo heaved his bat at Maglie. He missed, too. Umpire Larry Goetz, who, ordinarily would have thrown both players out of the game, ignored the issue.

Tuesday night, the Yanks and Browns tangled in a free-for-all when Clint Courtney made a vicious slide into Phil Rizzuto at second. Before the half-pint infielder was on his feet, second base was swarming with Yanks, Browns and flying fists. After a 17 minute slugfest, back grounded by a pop-bottle barrage from the Saint Louis fans, the Yanks went on to win the game anyway. This put them out front again in the American League race . . . But of Course! . . .

Letters to Editor

Caesar Criticized

Dear Editor:

The Student Party has taken a step which may cause its downfall. Many delegates have succumbed to the desires of one "man," who is evidently trying to gain support for himself in future elections. The manner in which he "rigged" the Sophomore Senate nominations Wednesday was no secret to any of the delegates.

In attempting to intimidate candidates who opposed his bloc, "Little Caesar" sent a note to one of the aforementioned persons in which he stated:

"If you are definitely planning to run for Sophomore Senator it will be advisable for you to submit your resignation as convention delegate."

He then cordially offered his assistance in helping him resign, and signed it, "Thank you kindly, Wayne Terry, Board of Directors." Of what is Mr Terry the "Board of Directors?" In the lower left hand corner he had written, "Student Party, Phone 29138." It looked official and evidently attempted to present "Little Caesar" as "Big Caesar."

Mr. Terry is a big politician. I know because he was heard to have said, "Ya better not step on the Big Politicians toes because they step back real hard!" (Did they "step back real hard" when this candidate failed to secure the Party nomination?) And I heard him exclaim ere he ran out of sight, "Boy! I feel like a hot mountain tonight!"

I wonder how many delegates were disposed of in this fashion? Too, I wonder what caused the shake-up in the Landis delegation? (After the shake-up, they supported the "Terry Ticket.")

When any one person can tell so many people how to vote, it reminds one of the same "thing" the Student Party is supposed to be combatting. The Student Party is good. It is a tool to be used by the students to get what they want, and I am greatly grieved when I see only one "man" use this tool to gain his own selfish ends.

I know "Little Caesar" would appreciate your support when he runs for President of the Student Body next year!

Sincerely,
Bruce W. Fletcher

Freshmen Take Tilt With Leon

Florida State's freshmen baseball team snapped Leon High's six-game winning streak with a 12-2 decision Tuesday night at Centennial field.

Behind the tight six-hit pitching of Ray Pearson, the Baby Seminoles didn't have to work too hard for this one. Scoring singles in the second and fourth innings, they were fairly quiet until the fifth, when they started a barrage of runs that put the game on ice.

Pearson, a left-hander, kept the Lions under good control until the two final frames, when they scored a run in each.

Tony Avitable led in the hitting department for the Seminoles with three-for-four. LaVerne Williams and Bob Skola had two hits each.

Salome, Religious Epic, Opens Wednesday at State Theater

By JUNE MORGAN
Feature Editor

The religious epic of Salome is recreated for the cinema audience in Columbia's latest technicolor release which opens Wednesday at the State Theater in Tallahassee.

This most remarkable period in recorded history, a time of passion and pageantry in ancient Galilee was captured by a modern motion picture company that rode in imperial glory over the same around Pontius Pilate traveled on his fateful journey to Galilee.

THE COMPANY was baptized in the same River Jordan in which John the Baptist performed his original rites. The Sermon on the Mount was delivered from the same Bethlehem hills which first heard the message spoken. This and more from history was filmed by Columbia Pictures to make the new Salome.

Rita Hayworth as the dancing princess of Galilee and Stewart Granger as Roman commander Claudius, the aristocrat and secret follower of John the Baptist, star in Salome. Charles Laughton co-stars with them in the role of the licentious King Herod.

THEY AND the featured members of the cast are backgrounded by Hollywood sets so lavish that even the blase film capital was startled, so opulent and so authentic that even the most discerning film-goer cannot tell where the reality of Galilee leaves off and the make-believe Hollywood takes up.

In making Salome Buddy Adler and William Dieterle saw to it that all Hollywood sets were modeled after the actualities as photographed by the company in Israel.

THE COMPANY shot 18,000 feet of film in Acre, Tiberias along the banks of the Jordan, in Nazareth and in Bethlehem.

Two hundred men and women from Israel took part as extras in addition to hundreds of horsemen recruited from the Circassians, Arabs and Jews.

CRITICS are willing to give Rita Hayworth all of Herod's kingdom for her seductive dance of the Seven Veils, which all along has been a lead selling point for the new film

Salome lived in an era when a new civilization, a new way of life was being born Product of the opulent past, she embodied in her person, all the savagery, and sensuousness of the barbaric tribes. Alive to beauty, to love and to the promise before her, she personified all that is good and all that is bad to mankind. In this role, many claim Miss Hayworth tops anything thus far in her film performances.

BUT ALSO outstanding is Stewart Granger, the handsome Roman officer torn eternally between good and evil, unable to know the way to turn.

Laughton too is excellent as the drunken king whose desire for his stepdaughter Salome led to the beheading of John the Baptist, Judith Anderson portrays the wicked Herodias who used her daughter as a pawn, and Sir Cedric Harwicke plays the Roman emperor Tiberius Caesar

Students of marketing at Florida State University got some inside information on the jewelry business recently from Ed Dillon certified gemologist with Moon's Jewelry

Dillon, before a class meeting, discussed the various problems confronting the jewelry business, such as how and when to extend credit and the ethical presentation of products as advocated by the American Gem Society.

"One of the biggest problems facing jewelers today is the selection of the sales force," Dillon said. He said jewelry salesmen, unlike salesmen in most other businesses which start selling in a short time, must be trained in dozens of different kinds of jewels, watches, precious stones and their mountings.

3-Day Party Convention Chooses Class Election Slate

Residence and Day Student Delegates Assemble in Conradi and Longmire

By AL PIERCE

At least three Student Party members are near laryngitis cases this week after three hot days of attempts to quell political rumblings and over-zealous electioneering at Student Party conventions.

Bob Rhoden, secretary, Bobby Drake, chairman, and Charlie Miner, chairman-elect are resting their vocal chords while gearing for an intensive round of rallies.

Wednesday night touched a match to political fire works that have been going off ever since.

FIRST ON THE Wednesday agenda was election of next year's party chairman. Charlie Miner, "Pinky" Nowlin and Frank Shaw were nominated. Miner, at first in the minority with 17 out of 73 votes, climbed over the top after Shaw withdrew. Miner took the office with 43 votes to Nowlin's final tally of 31.

Bert Hollander, present party party secretary was spotlighted next for her "untiring efforts and great enthusiasm" during the life of the party so far. A move was made for her reelection as next year's secretary and was unanimously accepted

THE SENATORIAL race came first on the long list of 63 offices to be filled with Student Party candidates.

Out of nine nominations for sophomore senator, Gordon Gaster, Coyle Moore and Jimmy Joanos emerged victorious. On the losing list were Harry Eielson, Herbert Lacayo, Bruce Fletcher, Fred Mansfield, Hans Tews and Ray Jones.

SCOTTY DICKINSON, Joan Tavel and Joan Halford copped the sophomore women's senate race away from nine other girls. Sue Allen, Mary Passilis, Suzanne Linebaugh, Germaine Murray and Nancy Graham. Also, Barbara Bachman, Anne Owynne and Margaret Neller.

Out of five men up for junior senators, Donnie Hollis, Jim McCauley and Bob Berto edged out Dave Kennedy and Joe Harris.

THE EXCITED pitch of the events continued as a packed Conradi vibrated to the running feet and anxious queries of those up for nomination garnering support from harrassed delegates. As soon as a delegate seated himself in his section, watchful would-be nominees descended on him with pleas for support, nominating ~~speeches or the like~~.

The race for Junior women's senate was close. Charls Coulter, Phoebe Jackson and Ann Hays came out on top finally They defeated Nancy Mayer, Patty Blair, Iola Arnold and Charlene Caviness

THREE MEN were unanimously elected by the voters for senior senator nominees. Frank Shaw, Bruce Galphin and Chris Young were the only three up for the office.

Rene Hall, Patty Martin and Anne Linebach took the nomination for women's senior senate from Marilyn Price, Sue Schock and Margaret Horrox.

HONOR COURT nominations provided a welcome lull in the proceedings Junior men nominated were Bert Miller and Jerry Meyer. They edged out Spurgeon Johnson and Charles Cunningham who were also vying for the office

Honor Court Junior women Suzanne Erle and Betty Ann Munroe took the party nomination over Sara Whitehead and Sissy Smith. Steve Bailey and John Laritz were elected by the convention for Senior men's representative Senior women Mary Ann Ziegler and Mary Louthan were accepted unanimously by the party. They were the only candidates for nomination presented for the Honor Court positions.

FOR JUDICIARY, Curtis Jackson, Fred Mansfield and Tom Woods will represent the Sophomore men on the party slate, winning the nominations from Bob Brady, Norman Shipley and Bill Durham Sophomore women nominees were Ina Jean Pruett, Carol Membert, Margaret Ann Young Eight women who were edged out of the party nominations were Mary Jane Robertson, Lavetra Armstrong, Melinda Uaina Susan Phelps, Rose Ellen Moore, Peggy Halberstadt, Beverly Duperrouzel and Connie Stewart.

Junior women nominees for the Judiciary are Jo Ann Seizer, Dot Cooke and Sissy Smith. Mary Grace Shoemaker, Harriet Ramsay, Jo Fabian, Dot Wells, Charlene Caviness, and Boots Paris were presented as unsuccessful candidates for nomination.

JUNIOR MEN were Vic Spoto, Arthur Allwood and Mike Kish, who won the party support over Ray Rogers.

During the Judiciary balloting, the convention voted to discontinue nomination speeches because of the lack of time.

SENIOR MEN Kingman Brittain, Jimmy Messinese and Earl Long were unanimously accepted by the delegates, as the only nominees for Senior standing on Judiciary.

June McGill, Fe Pittman and June McMillan received party support for Senior Judiciary positions over Ruth Ann Miles and Kitty Peacock.

For Sophomore representative of Traffic Court, Howard Wilson received the delegates O. K over Glayton Schaffer Jane Ward-

Flynn Figures Return in Fall

WFSU Should Meet FCC Requirements

An optimistic Roy Flynn announced today that "it is very possible that WFSU will again broadcast in the fall."

The campus station was requested by the Federal Communications Commission to cease broadcasting when it was discovered that the wired-wireless set-up was radiating beyond its legal limit.

"Most wired-wireless stations have this trouble," continued Flynn, advisor to the group and Director of Public Relations from whose fund the station operates. The system works by wires from the transmitter strung over an area, in this case the campus, and the wires radiate. However, sometimes the wires radiate to other wires and transmit beyond the point expected.

"WE WILL BE working all summer to try and get the station back to its original form . . . possibly by shielding the wires. Also, low-power FM is always a possibility The only hitch is that most of the students don't have FM attachments on their sets and the station would be further away from the students as far as listening appeal goes. This would also mean," continued the advisor, "that the station would go all over the city—legally."

WFSU had been on the air since 1948 when it was first managed by Harry Hughey. It did not cease broadcasting for any great length of time until last Thursday evening at approximately 6:30 when, during the second portion of the Supber Club, the FCC official walked into the control room and told the announcer to sign off as quickly as possible—under FCC regulation.

The official was followed by Mr. Flynn who added that WFSU had finished broadcasting for the semester

AT A MEETING of the Seminole Broadcasting System, students comprised of the complete staff in every department, gathered together and mapped out a form of redevelopment for the group so that when the station returns to the air, the broadcasting will be of an improved nature and will not infringe on FCC rules.

● STUDENT SERVICE

For many years the Universtiy Bookstore has been furnishing free wrapping paper and wrapping cord to the student body. It has ben placed for our convenience on a wrapping table located in the lobby of the Post Office.

Four times since school opened in September someone has taken the entire stock on the wrapping table. One of the four occurences was merely a misunderstanding. A student was told he could go to the Bookstore and get paper and cord for a student organization and he misunderstood the directions and took the paper and cord from the Post Office.

The last time it was taken was during the past election when a full roll of cord and paper valued at more than $9 disappeared from the wrapping table.

It should be understood that the paper and cord are furnished us for the use of wrapping packages only.

The wrapping paper was not intended for poster-making as was done in the past elections. It seems some were forgetful that it was not provided for this use and took what they wanted.

The Bookstore places these articles on the wrapping table as a service to the students. It will do so as long as the proper use is made of them. It will not continue to do so if the materials disappear overnight as in the past.

We would like to urge the candidates in the forthcoming class elections to think twice before appropriating this wrapping paper for posters. If you don't, you may cause the loss of a helpful service to the student body as well as to yourselves.

● VIRGINIA HONOR SYSTEM

(Editor's Note: The folowing editorial was written by Dr. W. H. Rogers of the English department at the request of the Honor Committee. Dr. Rogers attended the University of Virginia which is noted for its excellent honor system).

By DR. W. H. ROGERS

My acquaintance with the Honor System at the University of Virginia dates back to 1915. As far back as I can remember the effectiveness of the Honor Code at Virginia has been a matter of pride and it has remained so to the present day.

At Virginia only the important elements of honor are comprehended in the Code. These embrace cheating in any manner; irresponsibility in financial matters such as passing worthless checks or refusing to pay legitimate bills; malicious lying; and drinking intoxicants after noon of the day one appears on a dance floor. This last is a violation of the honor for the reason that all students subscribe to the pledge that they will not drink after noon of the day they anticipate going on a University-sponsored dance floor. I have known students to withdraw from college within six hours of appearing at a dance with whisky on their breaths.

The Honor System works at the University of Virginia simply because the student body there is proud of its system and wants it to work. Personal property may be left by a student at any spot on the campus with full confidence that it will be there when he returns for it. Cheating in classrooms or examination is handled wholly by the Honor Court. If a student observes a second student cheating, he quietly calls it to the attention of a third student. Together the two observers go to the cheater and inform him of what they have seen. Then they report him to the Honor Committee, who receive the evidence, weigh it, and pass judgment. If the man is pronounced guilty he leaves college in twelve hours. There is no publicity.

The students at Virginia are proud of their Honor System. They have the will to make it work. For that reason alone it works. They believe that stealing, cheating, and lying are abhorrent evils in a decent society and they are determined to have none of them long in their midst. Only such whole-hearted support can produce an efficient Honor System such as theirs.

Letters To The Editor. . . .

Caesar Investigated

Dear Editor:

After several days of investigation, we have learned the following:

1. Although Mr Terry has signed his name with the title, "Board of Directors," no such board has been found by us on this campus, nor has Mr. Terry explained his affiliation with any such board

2. The phone number mentioned in our last letter, which is supposed to be the phone of the Student Party (according to Mr. Terry's note) happens to be the pay phone in Magnolia Hall, just down the corridor from Mr. Terry's room.

3. Ann Stone, who describes herself as a very good friend of Mr. Terry's and who respects his judgment, but who votes as she thinks she ought to, told us that the Landis delegation was strictly legitimate. She should know, since she was the chairman of the delegation

4. Several Student Party nominees feel that the aforementioned leter was a direct "blast" at them. This was definitely not our intention. What's the matter, guilty conscience?

Rumors we have heard, and our coments on them:

1. It was thought that Bruce Galphin and Pi Kappa Phi used us as tools in writing the letter entitled, 'Caesar Criticized." We regret that these fine people said nothing to us about writing such a letter. In fact, we feel that our intelligence has been insulted by this rumor.

2. Mr Terry will resign all his offices and will not return to FSU next year if proven wrong in this matter. We do not feel that this is necesary, or even desirable

3. The real purpose of the letter, "Caesar Criticized," was to further the campaign of Bruce Fletcher for Sophomore Senate. How could this be true, since he is not even running for any office?

Mr. Terry is really a nice guy, who always thinks of himself last. We got this "straight from the horse's mouth."

We hope that the preceding report has been sufficiently informative to the students. Too, we hope that "Little Caesar" and his "Mark Antonys" will benefit greatly from our fair criticisms.

Sincerely,

Bruce W. Fletcher,
Wallace Nortan.

Party Explains

Dear Sir:

The unpleasant situation created by last week's Letter to the Editor has been discussed by the Executive Committee of the Student Party. After discussion with both parties concerned, the Committee reached the conclusion that the situation in question was strictly a personal matter between the two parties involved. Due to the unfortunate publicity, the Student Party received much undue criticism

We would like to offer the availability of the files of the Party in the UGA office to anyone interested. A complete and accurate voting record is on file there. Should anyone wish to discuss any question concerning party policies, voting procedure, or convention conduct, he may contact Bobby Drake or Charles Miner, at any time

There are bound to be some misunderstanding, unpleasant situations, and inadequacies in any organization as young as ours. We hope that in the future there may grow an outstanding Party System, for the betterment of the entire Student Body, with friendly rivalry and clean politics.

Sincerely yours,

Executive Committee
The Student Party.

Landis Answers

Dear Editor:

Many people have questioned members of Landis' delegation as to what Bruce Fletcher was referring to in the last of his series of letters to the Flambean

It seems he wrote the letter, then he referred to was centered around this. At the first convention held by the Student Party, Landis was represented by a delegate who did not attend any more conventions. Her reasons being she had only served as a delegate because she was needed but she did not plan to be a member of the Student Party.

Bruce asked a Landis delegate about this on Thursday and the whole thing was explained to him. Friday his letter was published and when asked why he wrote about so-called "shake-up" after he knew there was none, he replied the letter had been written before he asked anyone about it.

Hereafter, we'd appreciate it if Mr. Fletcher would consult someone before he submits damaging materials which has no foundation

Sincerely

Landis Delegation

Fellow Students:

I want to thank all those students who worked for my election during the recent UGA elections. Your support was sincerely appreciated

You students, by turning out in record numbers, showed your interest in student government. I want to urge all of you to give your student government officers your continued support. With your participation next year Student Government can become the strong force the students have shown they want.

Dr. Howard R. Sebold Advises Motel Owners on Maintenance

Don't let grass grown in your driveways, Dr. Howard R Sebold advised about 70 motel operators attending the Florida State University's second annual motor court short course recently.

Dr Sebold, who is assistant professor of architecture at the University of Florida, gave illustrated lectures on "Good Planning Makes Good Motels" and "Motels I Have Seen" as a major feature of the short course.

"GOOD MAINTENANCE of buildings and plants is very important," he said, adding they are year-round concerns. It is poor psychology to slacken-up on maintenance of a motel even during off-seasons. Good propsective customers may pass by or drop in and think the place is definitely on the downgrade

In gradually attaining the sophistication of hotels, Dr Sebold suggested at least a little architectural help for the planning of motels. He said that most customers want more than "just a series of cells"

THE ARRANGEMENT of units should be attractive, he said. He favors a couple of entrances so that if the first is passed by in the rush of travel, there will be a second chance. Entrances should be wide and friendly. The office should be accessible: its location, of course, depends on the design and layout of the motel. There should also be ample temporary parking place.

Dr Sebold stressed that the character of a motel's setting should be attractive. He is strong for trees, for shade and comfort, and also for giving scale to a place. He likes to see shrubs kept in scale, prefers to see them with a natural appearance instead of in artificial ball shapes. He thinks flowers can be an added attraction, but neglected, they become detrimental.

DR. DONALD E. LUNDBERG, head of the restaurant and hotel management department, addressed the students on income taxes, operating expenses and the advantages and disadvantages of forming corporations. He spoke briefly on "tax evasion vs. tax avoidance" law got on the party slate for Junior representative over George Martin.

FOR SOPHOMORE social chairman Barbara Yost got on the slate. She defeated Irene Vamvax, Kay Kohler, Murray Durack and Betty Jane Sharp.

Mary Grace Shoemaker won the nomination for junior class social chairman by acclamation, as there were no other nominees for the position.

Secretaries of the respective classes ran close races also. Beverly Bisbee took the nomination for sophomore secretary from Beth Suggs, Pat Flynn, Tina Stahl and Pat Perez.

JUNIOR CLASS secretary nominee is Dot Johnson who edged out Marilyn Goble and Virginia Anderson in the voting.

Four women went out for senior class secretary. Sonny Meyer took the nomination away from Faye Miller, Janet Burroughs, and Ruth Ann Miles

SOPHOMORE treasurer nominee is Mary Louise Dee who copped the vote from Virginia Cooke, Ralph Johnson, Carol Neel, Barbara Lester and Dorsey Cooper.

Junior treasurer is a man, for a change in the voting. Harry Massey won the nomination from June Bishop, Jeanne Craig, Ruth Ward, Chris Holmes and Barbara Rudin.

SENIOR CLASS treasurer nominee is Audrey Oliver, who sided out Gloria Mickler as her only opponent.

Sophomore vice-president candidate for Student Party will be Harry Nirenstein who edged out Boo Crenshaw, Nancy Vaughn, Harold Stewart, Barbara Lynch and Jeanette Porter.

JUNIOR CLASS veep was a hard fight with Liz Vang coming out on top over Ann Yates, Jo Ann Hutto, and Bill Stancik

The voting pitch grew feverish at the Sunday afternoon convention in Longmire where the remaining nominees from Junior Class vice-president on had to be elected, due to the late hour Thursday night

SENIOR CLASS vice-president's spot was taken by a man again. Joe Parker. Parker took the vote from Ed James, Scottsy Crowther, Ardis Bourland and Betty Whitmire

The presidential nominations proved the hardest fought battles of the entire Sunday session. Sophomore place was fought for by Grsham Carothers and Ken Haskins, after Randy Church and Bob Upton were eliminated from the final re-vote. The race between Haskins and Carothers was heading toward a deadlock, with Haskins carrying a bare majority of the votes. Two-thirds vote was declared necessary in face of the circumstances and the matter looked hopeless when Carothers ceded the nomination to Haskins

DAVE COLLINS took the nomination for Junior Class president without much opposition. He climbed over Larry Beaty, Bob Aggelis, and Bob Poley to victory.

Last office was Senior Class president. Duane Gordon won the nomination from Colin English by a safe margin, closing the nominations

PARTY HEADS Bobby Drake and Charlie Miner made a closing address and called for a round of applause for those members of the administration who helped make the difficulties that had arisen through the conventions easier. Commended were Dean Katherine Warren who allowed the women delegates late permission Thursday night to get as far as was possible in the voting.

"Miss Warren even told me on the phone" Drake said, "that she hoped we would be able to get through with our business"

THANKS WERE also expressed for Dean Culpepper's and Miss Jane Addams' help in securing Longmire Auditorium on a Sunday.

The meeting closed with announcements of the rally for Student Party Candidates coming off Thursday night at the Amphitheatre

After the ceremonies, the fraternity attended the FSU circus.

Students Examine Stone

CAPITOL GEOLOGY SURVEY—Florida State University students are examining slabs of Tennessee sandstone used as exterior trim of a Tallahassee store with their geology professor, Stephen S. Winters. The sandstone was formed 250 million years ago along a seashore which extended into Tennessee. This same material floors an open court in the FSU Science Building. The group was in a class of 50 which inspected the capitol, other state buildings and various Tallahassee buildings. Left to right are Gene Kirchoffer, Martha Garrett, Lyda Yarbrough, Winters, and Jack Swike.

Geology Students Tell Age Of Steps

Florida legislators, daily hurrying up the worn-down inside steps of the state capitol, little realize they are climbing a staircase of 500 million year old Alabama marble.

Florida State University geology students took time recently to study the steps and interior capitol walls of similar marble. On a field trip with their geology professor, Stephen S Winters, the students examined natural stones used in buildings because Tallahassee lacks nearby quarries of rock exposures.

THE MARBLE was compared with the outside Georgia granite steps leading to the main front and back entrances of the capitol. Merely some 200 million years old, the granite is standing up better because it is harder and more resistant. Students learned the granite was formed about the same time as the Apalachian Mountains

Winters' 50 students visited other state buildings in the Capitol Square including the outstanding Supreme Court. They saw outside granite steps similar to those of the capitol, and interior Indiana limestone trim in the foyer probably 300 million years old. In the rotunda the students were impressed by the Minnesota dolomite limestone steps and dark green marble columns that could have come from Pennsylvania, but most likely came from France or Italy.

THE HOLLAND BUILDING housing the state road department, boasts the oldest rock in a Tallahassee building, according to Winters. Both entrance steps are a dark brown—Ortonville, Minn., granite from 900 million to a billion years old. Interior marble slabs of fine Tennessee marble, showing imbedded fossils, are about 400 million years old

The Caldwell Building, containing the state industrial commission and advertising commission, has Georgia granite steps outside and Tennessee marble steps inside — the marble 400 million years old—roughly twice as old as the granite

THE TALLAHASSEE POST OFFICE was given attention by the class because it uses more natural stone than any building in the capital city. The exterior is Indiana limestone, representing a geological period 300 million years ago when a shallow ocean spread over central United States. The rock itself consists of countless fossils. Outside steps and trim are a pink North Caroline granite, and both marble and limestone are evident inside the building.

Winters said even from such a limited field trip, which included Tallahassee store fronts and office buildings as well as state buildings, the students learned a little of earth history from the record in the rocks.

The Champions

HERE'S the Florida State Gymkana team which Saturday was the national AAU gymnastics crown in Chicago. The win was the fourth national title for Florida State gymnasts in the last three seasons. They copped the NCAA bantings in 1951 and '52, won the NAAU title in 1951. This year's team placed fifth at the NCAA but came back strong to win the NAAU. The victory was also the 10th national champion produced by FSU's nationally renowned Coach Dr. Hartley Price. Price turned out six national winners at Illinois before coming to FSU. Left to right, front row, they are: Alan Marcus, Dick Ireland, Dick Gutting, Bob Bollinger. Second row: Bill Koslow, Olympic star, Don Holder, Carmine Regna (co-captain); J. Regna (co-captain); and Olympic star Bill Roetzheim. Third row: Al Ruda, Jim Tanaka, Dr. Price, and Pat Signorelli.

Roetzheim, Gutting, Holder Capture Individual Crowns

The Florida State Gymkana team in their best form of the season won their second National AAU championship in Chicago over the weekend. The FSU gymnasts, who also won the crown in 1950, dethroned the Philadelphia Turners as national champs by scoring 55 points.

In Second, with 47½ points was the favored Los Angeles Turners and the Philadelphia team finished third with 35 points.

IN BEATING THE best gym teams from the United States and Cuba, Florida State was paced by Bill Holder who was high pointman with 19⅛ points. The New Jersey sophomore won the Indian Clubs events, finished fourth in the side horse, and long horse, fifth in the rings, parallel bars and all-around and sixth in the high bar.

FSU's two other individual champions were Bill Roetzheim in the side horse and Dick Gutting on the trampoline. Roetzheim also grabbed second in the tough all-around event behind Richard Stout of the Philadelphia Turners.

WITH THE victory in the AAU, Florida State now holds four national championships; two NCAA titles and two AAU crowns

The FSU men did not completely monopolized the meet as eight Florida State co-eds, competing for the first time in national competition won the drill team title. The team consisted of Connie Holder, Dorothy Rich, Barbara Vickers, Francis Stokes, Barbara Rinski, Gladdys Calvetti, Paula Rowe and Ann Vickers. In the individual competition, Miss Rich won a fifth place in the balance beam event.

THE FINE all-around performance of the Gym team was a radical change from their form in the NCAA meet last month. In this meet, FSU landed in fifth place as Gutting and Roetzheim were ineligible to compete

Richard Stout of the Philadelphia Turners was the only double winner during the two days of competition at the Chicago navy pier. He won the all-around and the long horse events.

State Splits With Hatters Play Fla. Southern Next

With a loss Friday and a victory Saturday, the Florida State baseball squad completed their home season and now have two games away left on the 1953 schedule. The Seminoles emerged from a nip-and-tuck series with the Stetson Hatters with a 12-9-1 year's record. They will end the 1953 season next Friday and Saturday with a pair of games at Florida Southern.

After losing a 1-0 pitchers duel to the Hatters on Friday, the Seminoles came back Saturday and won 9-6 in a game marred by 20 errors. In both tilts the Seminoles were held to six hits. They now have won nine and lost eight during the all-time series against the Hatters

IN THE 9-6 victory, the Seminoles were greatly aided by 11 Stetson errors and by the air-tight pitching of reliefer Wally Higginbotham. The Georgia freshman took the mound in the third inning with one out and after the Hatters had scored five runs Then in the next 6⅔ frames he held the losers to two hits and one run as he struck out 11. Higginbotham replaced starter Jim Atwood after he had given up five hits and five runs to the Hatters.

The Seminoles, capitalizing on the Stetson errors, posted two runs in the first inning, two in the second, one in the third and put the game on ice with three runs in the seventh inning. They added another score for insurance in the eighth

Billy Campbell, the Seminoles second baseman from Panama City, collected a triple which was the only extra base blow of the day.

IN THE CLOSE contest Friday, the Hatter's versatile athlete John Imgrund limited the FSU to six hits while his teammates posted their lone score in the first inning with the aid of a Seminole error. Imgrund, who also stars in basketball and football, had to be at his best to beat FSU starter Max Long, who held Stetson to seven hits. Long, a Jacksonville freshman, gave up the game-deciding run when John Bertzel singled to left, raced to third on Manny Yglesias' wild throw and scored on a single by Fred Eubeler.

The Seminoles had two good scoring chances in the fourth and eighth innings, but both were hung-led.

Besides Yglesias' error, the FSU nine were guilty of four miscues. Long struck-out five and walked only one.

Cagers Get Rest This Week From Spring Practice

Florida State's Seminoles wound up the first 15 days of their spring basketball grind Friday and looked forward to a week's vacation from the hardwood

Coach J K "Bud" Kennedy said the Seminoles will take this week off, then return for the final session of spring practice. Kennedy set Wednesday night, May 13, as the date for the Garnet and Gold intra-squad contest.

Eight lettermen and a host of yearlings up from last season's freshman squad, are currently working out. The Seminoles, who have concentrated on defense this spring, will take on their toughest schedule in FSU's basketball history next year.

Mademoiselle Features Article On 'Games for the Ungamely'

Hate gym? Can't stand outdoor sports? Dread the idea of games because you're a dud at them? Stop worrying! You'll have the situation well in hand this summer once you've read Games for the Ungamely by Stephen Potter in the May issue of Mademoiselle.

Mr. Potter advocates the "big bluff system" for those who are sad sacks on the golf course or tennis court, and no matter how ungamely one may be when wielding a baseball bat or volleyball, he says it's possible to pass as lady athlete supreme by the way one spectatorates.

POTTER sets out to show you how, without actually being able to play games, you can achieve the one-up position in any given games situation. "No good Gameswoman," he says, "will attempt to shine in the performance of a game she knows she is bad at. But she can often, and very successfully, give an impression of being good at games and the best type of sports girl without flexing a muscle."

Take tennis, for example. Potter's advice is never to creep timidly about the fringes of the court's but to walk boldly across one and test the surface with your heel. The procedure is: pull the net about. Talk about the "difficult background" and say something about a new patented ideal surface. Talk quite loudly. Don't during play sit admiring on the edge of a chair but lie relaxed or even flat on your stomach looking at the game in a "sideways" manner. It is possible with this approach to suggest that you have played yourself stale with games.

THIS Knowledgeable Watcher gambit can be applied to almost any other sport. But it's not easy and frequently needs real bookwork. If you are unable to read books, tricks can be used. For watching bridge, for instance, accentuate the immobility of your expression by having a cigarette permanently fixed between the lips and an obliterating pair of horn rims. "In Britain," Potter says, "we advise field glasses for watcher Gameswoman . . . Any suggestion that you were born and bred in the saddle or the paddock clears you of the necessity of having actually to play any game whatsoever."

Knowledgeable Watching is your best bet if you have never succeeded in making any kind of contact between ball and racket — have never held any games implement in your hand. You can be sure, however, that Potter's article includes the techniques for you if you're the type who actually manages to play games without falling flat on your face.

A CONSPICUOUS example is the Frith-Morteroy Counter in tennis. This is the techinque of allowing it to leak out, in the middle of the second set against an opponent who has been making considerable play with his strained kneecap that you have a decidedly rocky heart and aren't really supposed to be playing at all.

But don't indulge in this one unless really pressed. Potter says it will do "well enough for men, but this is not the century of weak hearts for women."

Phi Mu Alpha Elects Sanny Hasbrook Pres.

Epsilon Iota Chapter of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia fraternity, elected Sonny Hasbrock president recently. Pat Johnson will be vice-president and treasurer; Bill Head, executive secretary and historian; Sam Frank, corresponding secretary and Brownlee Waschek, alumni secretary.

University Credited Because of Efforts Made By Graduate

Florida State University has been credited recently through the efforts of one of its graduate students in starting a move toward better counseling in Florida's grade and high schools.

J. G. Wynn Jr., a graduate student in the Guidance Training Unit of the psychology department here has sent to each of Florida's 458 secondary schools a five-page questionnaire. The reports covering individual evaluation of each student along with information services, counseling, placement and group work in the school have been rapidly returning, according to Wynn.

OF THE PAPERS mailed, Wynn said, 47 per cent have already been filled out and returned by schools anxious to take advantage of the help being offered.

Wynn said much credit for the project goes to the FSU Office of the Coordinator of counseling and the State Department of Education.

RESULTS OF the study, according to administrators, could be important in showing colleges and universities where trained people in guidance are needed in the state. Also, it might help bring together the methods used in secondary schools and institutions of higher learning.

The present project, according to Wynn, will give administrators and people in the guidance field the first chance to see just what is being done in the field over the state.

All this, said Wynn, may well serve to institute a program to make guidance services more uniform throughout the state.

Dr. Wendell Can Talks to Sigma X On Tree Epidem

Frats Pay More For Small Dorms Under New Plan

The eight small dormitories used by fraternities will be rented from the university under a new plan which will change their status from the regular residence hall The proposal presented to an IFC meeting Monday night by the administration will require the fraternities to pay a yearly rental for the houses and all the expenses will be paid by the individual fraternities.

At the present, each occupant of the fraternity residences pays the regular $76 50 a semester fee and the university pays for all the expenses except food. This is the same price paid by all the other university residences, but it was found that the fraternities have been posting greater expenses than the dorms In other words the university has been losing money

THE NEW proposal was explained to the fraternity representatives by vice-president A. S Martin at the meeting also attended by Dr Culpepper university housing director Robert Breaer fraternity councilor George Heilman and business manager Rod Shaw

Under the plan, each fraternity house will pay a yearly rental of $5,388 36 which boils down to 14 97 a man per month The monthly rent for each house will be $598 Besides this the frater-

Building Gets House Action

The House yesterday adopted four resolutions drafted by the committee on Higher Education which give approval to the construction of buildings by Florida State which are financed by bond issues. The resolution also affects the University of Florida and Florida A & M.

Last week the House passed and sent to the Senate a bill to bring university construction under closer legislative scrutiny. Undr the bill the state universities will be required to receive legislative permission for any construction.

THE RESOLUTION gives approval to the $500,000 Florida State bond issue to finance the building of five small dormitories at Tallahassee It also okehed the $500 000 for construction of a teaching demonstration school with the bonds to be retired by revenue paid by the Leon County for use of the school.

However, before the House accepted the resolutions, the lawmakers entered into a sharp debate, which centered mostly on the University of Florida. The Gainesville school is floating a $1,600,000 bond issue to construct 18 small dormitories to be rented by fraternities and sororities Rental of the 18 houses is to retire the bond

THE MEASURE was also attacked by Rep. Stratton of Nassau who said: "It is an insult to the people of Florida that Legislature should build fraternity houses" The measure was pushed through by Rep Boyd of Lake

The debate started when Rep McFarlin of Jackson was asked: Will these small dormitories have Greek letters over the door?" He was given an affirmative answer by Boyd.

THE RESOLUTIONS were criticized by Rep. Surles of Polk who intimated that the measure may be in indirect violation" of the Florida constitution, which

The Danforth Foundation, a national interdenominational religious group, sends these girls to another college in a different region of the U.S for a year all expenses paid. There the girls enter into the camping activities of all the student religious groups. It is a year well spent in promoting good will among the denominations, and the girls, who must be graduate students to receive the award, may not take any graduate work in their major field during this year. The purpose of the Danforth Foundation Award is to build Christian and moral character regardless of religious denomination.

ELLEN, WHO graduates in June with a B S in Elementary Education, has been very active in student groups on campus.

During the past year she has been a member of Honor Court, Mortar Board, has served faithfully on the committees for Intelligent Faith Week, a member of Tri-Delta sorority, and President of the Episcopalian youth group at Ruge Hall.

Class Primary Set for Tuesday

Students Consider Amendments Also

Tuesday, May 12 spells P-R-I-M-A-R-Y day for Florida State's student voters as they go to the polls to elect their next year's class, judiciary and senatorial officers.

With 96 eager candidates packed into one sheet, the Tuesday ballot will read like a racing sheet with the voters playing the parts of the betters, marking out their choices to win

EXPENSE STATEMENT forms, which are required of all candidates on the ballot are available in the UGA office. All officers elected have to submit this form of how much money they spent in their campaign to the Secretary of Elections. Those not complying with this ruling, Soraparu said, will be disqualified and will not be allowed to take the office to which they were elected.

Voting areas, according to Paul Soraparu, UGA secretary of elections will be in the same locales as before Polls will be on the first floor of Westcott building the foyer of the Seminole Dining Hall and outside the Post Office at the Student Center. Saraparu stressed the point that rules say no campaign posters or literature may appear within 50 feet of any of these areas during elections on Tuesday.

POLLS WILL be open Tuesday from 9 a m till 6 p m. Help at the polls will include members of men's and women's Sophomore council. These people will answer any questions voters might have, Soraparu said, adding that the newly formed Men's Sophomore

Bill Establishing Freshman Curfew Referred to Court

Will the freshmen girls have to be in the dorms at 10 30 next semester? That is the question that is being batted about at present

The bill was passed by the University Women's Senate and sent directly to the Faculty Committee for approval The usual procedure of having the bill passed by a two-thirds vote of the joint senate, plus the customary signature of the president of the student body was overlooked

Senator Bobby Drake questioned the legality of such a move and sent the bill to the Honor Court The case, which was to have been pleaded on Tuesday night, was postponed because of the absence from campus of June Conyers vice-president in charge of women's affairs

The fate of the freshmen girls rests on the decision of the court as to whether the bills passed on women's affairs by the Women's Senate should be considered by the joint body.

Five Amendments Help Constitution

There has been much talk recently about securing a charter from the State of Florida, in order that the powers of FSU's now nearly-powerless student government could be broadened and extended. Until this becomes a reality, however, the only recourse for FSU's students is to try to plug the leaks in their much-amended student Constitution by amending it some more—to the extent that the faculty and administration permit.

Five more amendments will be submitted to the students for ratification in Tuesday's election, following four earlier ones ratified last month. All these amendments are good. The University Senate is inevitably restrained in its ambitions to propose amendments, and although the individual amendments may seem minor, their sum total means a better and more readable Constitution and, to some extent, a stronger student government.

For the benefit of FSU's student voters, the amendments that appear on Tuesday's ballot are as follows:

Amendment No. 5: "An amendment to the Constitution to redefine certain Executive Powers . . ."

This amendment changes the title of President of UGA to President of the Student Body, something long overdue, and, as a matter of consistency, drops the "affairs" from Secretary of Recreational Affairs and changes Forums Chairman to Secretary of Forums. It also repeals two superfluous sections of the Constitution and clarifies, but does not substantially alter, the powers of the President.

It is unfortunate that one of the most sensible changes was vetoed by the Faculty Committee. Due to an oversight of last year's Cabinet amendment, the incongruous situation exists where Senators need 1.0 averages but members of standing committees and undersecretaries of the Cabinet need 1.3 averages. This amendment had provided that undersecretaries and committee members would be minor officers, while Cabinet posts remained major. However, the Faculty Committee vetoed the measure.

Amendment No. 6: "An Amendment to Article III of the Constitution. To Revise the Legislative Branch."

The longest of the proposed amendments, it rewords in a much clearer and more concise form, the duties and powers of the University Senate, provides for the election of a Secretary, and tightens up somewhat the review powers of the Faculty.

Amendment No. 10: "An Amendment to Repeal Article VIII of the Constitution of the University Government Association."

This amendment repeals the Sandspur article of the Constitution. Much discussion has been given to changing the manner of selecting a Sandspur Manger, and this amendment would pave the way for further action next year by permitting the Senate to enact a Statute.

Amendment No. 11: "An Amendment to Article I of the UGA Constitution, Changing the Name of the University Government Association to Student Body . . ."

Probably he most controversial of the amendments offered this year, this amendment would change the name of the University Government Association to the Student Body and would permit graduate students to vote. In its third form, after two previously unsuccessful trips to the Faculty Committee, the University Senate unanimously endorsed this amendment.

Amendment No. 12: "An Amendment to Article V of the UGA Constitution, to Provide for the Filling of Vacancies Caused by Interning UGA Officers."

The shortest and simplest of the amendments, it gives legal sanction to a time-honored UGA practice: that of filling the position of an interning ofifcer with an interim appointment.

● FAIRER TREATMENT ARRANGED

Candidates in the coming class elections can be thankful to the University Government Senate that they will receive fairer treatment in regards to posters in the women's dormitories than did candidates in the UGA elections.

An absurd situation developed in the previous primary wherein only women candidates were allowed to post advertising materials in the women's dorms. Reasons for this ruling were rather sparse. The principle explanation given was that posters cluttered up the residence halls; while this may have been true, it hardly excused the inappropriate manner in which the matter was "solved." Male candidates with female opposition were put at a particular disadvantage.

It is to the credit of the fairer sex that they were the first to take action on the matter: women's Senate made a recommendation to the Dean of Women's office, from which the original directive issued, that changes be made.

The full UGA Senate took the ball from there, when a special committee, headed by Coyle Moore, met with the administration to effect a compromise.

The present arrangement is still rather cumbersome, but at least it is a definite improvement. Men candidates may put up signs in specially designated places, provided such places are not already taken up by women's posters or other material. Men are also requested first to take their advertising materials to the residence counselor of the dormitory involved or to a girl appointed to handle posters.

Provided they pass the above hurdles, men may have signs put on unofficial bulletin boards, bulletin screens or wires suspended in the recreation rooms

It would be wise if the elections committee or some other responsible group investigate this situation and work out better details for the future, but for temporary and welcome relief the student Senate deserves praise and gratitude.

● LEGISLATORS, THANKS

Florida State University may well be grateful to the 1953 session of the State Legislature for its refusal to make an appreciable cut in the appropriations asked by our school for the next two years.

Indeed, the Senate approved the exact amount recommended to the Budget Commission by the school administration. The $261,000 disparity between this and the amount approved by the House is now being compromised by a joint committee; the final amount decided upon will definitely be sufficient to insure a progressive and constructive program for the two years that lie ahead.

We, the student body, are the beneficiaries of this impending development of our school.

Thanks to the state programs designed to expand and improve Florida State University, we have seen our school move rapidly forward since its transition from Florida State College for Women in 1946.

This progress was somewhat encumbered by the outbreak of the Korean War and the subsequent loss of many male students. Nevertheless, the university has continued to grow and establish itself as one of the foremost schools in the Southeast.

For the stature we have attained, for the opportunity of further progress, we extend our appreciation to the legislators who have mada this possible.

THE SPECTATOR

TURNPIKE BILL RECEIVES BOOST

By WARREN COBB

The McCarty-backed bill to create a five-member state turnpike authority with power to build an 80-mile toll road from Miami to Stuart will come up to the Senate Monday. This bill is the result of a recommendation by the State Road Board, chairmaned by Richard H. Simpson of Monticello.

In an interview with Mr. Simpson, he explained the various aspects of this measure to me.

There has long been discussion of a proposed north to south turnpike through the state. This was inspired by the spectacular growth of Florida in recent years and the desire of tourists to visit all parts of the state.

The Warren administration advocated a turnpike from Jacksonville to Miami with a connecting branch to the West Coast. However, the previous administration also left an $8,000,000 deficit for the incoming Road Department along with their recommendation. But since January this deficit has been reduced by $6,000,000, leaving the department only 2,000,000 in the hole.

It was clearly apparent, however, that the Road Department could not possibly afford the construction of such a highway, the cost of which would range from $175,000,000 to $200,000,000. And it was also evident that the connecting branch to the West Coast would be economically unsound under any circumstances.

The Road Department receives seven cents on every gallon of gas sold from the state gasoline tax. Four cents of each seven cents, or approximately $48,000,000 per year, is used by the SRD for primary highway construction and maintenance. The other three cents per gallon goes for secondary roads.

It was therefore obvious that there was absolutely no use to seriously consider the building of a north to south highway with state funds.

One alternative mentioned, the four-laning of U. S No. 1, has been undertaken by the Board, but this cannot fill the need for a north-south turnpike

The only other alternative, says Mr. Simpson, is the proposal for a toll turnpike to be paid for by those who use it. Many other states have successfully utilized turnpikes to relieve traffic congestion of their highways.

In reviewing the possibilities of a toll turnpike, the Road Board sent a delegation to 1952 to study the Pennsylvania Turnpike and the New Jersey Turnpike. Both have proved very expedient and, moreover, they have both been extremely successful from a financial standpoint. They have created no "ghost towns," one of the fears of the opposition to a turnpike here in Florida.

The Pennsylvania Legislature is practically unanimous in each request to add to the turnpike there.

Florida does not have the large centers of population, the industry, or the vast number of vehicles operating in the areas visited by our delegation. But we do have large numbers of people coming to our state for recreational purposes. And, in addition, our agricultural economy is heavily dependent upon adequate transportation facilities for its very existence

The feasibility of such a venture to Florida rests on the assumption of increased traffic. If this increased traffic were to materialize, it would mean millions of additional dollars for our state.

There has been a difference of opinion regarding the route of the proposed turnpike The original idea would have had the route straight down the East Coast with a branch spanning the state between New Smyrna and Tampa

This is considered unfeasible by Mr. Simpson. He points out the impracticality of tourists going from Jacksonville to Tampa having to travel two sides of triangle to get there via the turnpike.

Mr. Simpson favors an inland route going somewhere near Orlando. This would make the turnpike only 14 miles further from Jacksonville to Miami than one straight down the coast.

And, more important, it would tap fruit and vegetable growing areas and thus make it more profitable to finance and operate.

There are two alternatives now facing the Legislature. One is the proposal by Simpson and the Road Board to construct an 88-mile toll road from Miami northward to Stuart as an experimental project. The other alternative is in the form of an amendment by Sen. Cannor of Iverness to the above bill providing for the construction of a tollpike running all the way from Miami to the Georgia line.

Sen. Gautier of Miami, author of the original bill, cast his support behind Connor's proposal.

Neither bill definitely fixes the location of the road.

The turnpike would not be financed by tax money. A toll of one and a half cents per mile would be assessed. Thus, it would cost $1.20 to travel the 80 miles between Stuart and Miami. This toll would probably be in effect for 30 years unless the traffic were havier than anticipated.

The revenue bonds — such as those used to finance the Mathews Bridge in Jacksonville — would be paid off by money from the toll. It would be a self-liquidating project. The road itself would be the collateral.

The primary opposition to a turnpike down the state is centered around the Daytona Beach area. The proposed pike would by-pass the center of Daytona by some four or five miles, and the business interests fear this would deprive them of considerable revenue.

The answer to their contention is, as Mr. Simpson points out and as the success of the Pennsylvania Turnpike illustrates, that this venture would probably induce more over-all tourist tr / 'c in Florida, which would more than compensate for any losses due to the by-passing of the centers of towns and cities along the way. Experience in other states indicates that this is true

We therefore wish Mr. Simpson every success in his plan to supervise, during the next four years, the most extensive road-building program in the history of the state.

THE FORUM

COLUMNIST URGES QUICK KOREAN PEACE

BY BRUCE GALPHIN

In the past few weeks some of the nation's bolder and less pressure-controlled newspapers have tried to point to the very alarming fact that many Americans look with horror on the possibility of peace in Korea

This "horror" stems from two points of view In one case, far too many Americans are afraid that if "peace breaks out" the function that the was has served, namely, to prime the economic pumps, will be destroyed. This is a case in point that what is good for General Moinrs is not good for the United States

The second school of thought on the matter is that war between Russia and the United States is inevitable and that we ought to get it over with as soon as possible.

But whatever the reasons some people have for dreading the end of the war, they seem to be in control of our actions in Korea The present United Nations policy is one which seems to do all it can to avoid a reasonable settlement of the Korean war.

It is difficult, almost impossible, to critize the United States on its policy toward Communism these days. To say that the United States has been wrong in certain actions is well night treason, and in say that in some cases the Communists have been right is ten shades redder than fellow-travelling.

Yet, some people, or rather many people, must speak up now and bring to light some very pertinent points or we will soon find ourselves involved in an unneeded, unwarranted and awesomely destructive war.

Our main trouble is that we have been carried away by our own public relations News, in a meaningful sense, is as accurate an account of the happenings as is possible. Public relations, by its very nature, selects out only the favorable side of the news, or in the absence of this invents its own.

We should not expect, then, for our armed forces public relations services to print stories of American-committed atrocities, but it is vital to our national sanity that the newspapers do print them. Yet most of the time the latter have been no better than the former. True, if you look between the ads on page 57 of the Times you might read that the United Nations finally admitted responsibility for the machine-gunning of two native children, but this is not news coverage, because earlier denials of the accusation were given front page prominence.

The point of this discussion is not to brand the United States or the United Nations the culprit in Korea. It is merely to try to destroy the childish, naive illusion that one side is all good, the other all bad. We must realize that war is hell, that war is brutal, not matter who is calling the plays.

If we can gain this more mature point of view, then certain stumbling blocks in peace in Korea will become meaningless. For instance, what if the Communists did mistreat many prisoners? This was a terrible thing, but did we not do similar terrible things? Would it not be far better to end the war and end this bickering about who did what to whom?

The Communists are not on their knees. If they were, then we could dictate peace terms, not matter how wise or unwise the terms might be As it is, however, after almost three years they are still strong. The situation demands more understanding more compromise than we have been willing to give, no matter how loud the cries of "appeasement" from extremists. No arrangement will be thoroughly acceptable to either side, but we do not live in a world of black and white, and all we can hope for is an improvement over the present situation.

Peace is not a dreadful specter. She is hard won and hard kept, but she is beautiful and fruitful.

MOVIE NEWS

"Salome" Brings Thrills Here

By AL PIERCE

Salome, bewitching, sensuous temptress of biblical fame is brought out of the darkened recesses of time and age to recreate for modern-day audiences her role as one of history's most seductive beauties, in Columbia Picture's "Salome" playing through Tuesday, May 12 at the State Theater.

Top billing goes to Rita Hayworth, whose impassioned Dance of the Seven Veils climaxes the screen epic, and Stewart Granger, adventurous new heart-throb to movie-goers whose performance in "Salome" puts another avid star on his screen triumph list. Co-starred is versatile Charles Laughton, more cruel, and licentious than ever before, delighting audiences with his portrayal of lustful King Herod whose blind love for his stepdaughter, Salome, leads him to consent to the execution of John the Baptist, touching off a controversy that change the course of the modern world's religion.

SUPPORTING Hayworth, Granger and Laughton is as fine a cast of characters as Hollywood's ingenuity has yet portrayed on the screen.

Judith Anderson plays the wicked Herodias, who uses her daughter Salome as a pawn to do away with John the Baptist who plagues her with his constant preachings against her and her sinful life.

Sir Cedric Hardwicke portrays the Roman emperor Tiberius Caesar who has banished Saloma from Rome and sent her back to her native Galilee as the movie opens.

BASIL SYDNEY, who audiences remember as the King in Laurence Olivier's "Hamlet" was brought from England to play the role of the man whose fateful decision ushered in a new civilization and a new way of life for the Christian world.

Religious counsel is Herod's high priest Ezra played by Maurice Schwartz, while Arnold Moss portrays Herodias' scheming councillor Micha. Rounding out the brilliant cast is Alan Badel, the Britsth import whose soulful eyes and story-to-peaceful countenance make John the Baptist an unforgettable character in the plot.

The action centers around the beauty Salome, who is banished from Rome to Galilee under escort of Claudius, (Stewart Granger), Commander of Roman legions to Galilee and secret disciple of John the Baptist whose preachings are feared by Herod and Herodias.

CLAUDIUS FAILS to obtain assistance from Roman governor Pontius Pilate for John. Salome, convinced by Claudius, of John's good works and faithful preachings, determines to ask his life as a boon. While dancing her fabulous Dance of the Seven Veils, however, her mother Herodias wins Herod's consent to behead John the Baptist.

Before the girl's sensuous dance is completed, John's head is brought into the hall, Salome denounces her mother and, with Claudius, quits the palace.

Herod, whose inherent fear that if John died under his hand he (Herod) would also die a painful death, seeks cringtos comfort from his high priest, Ezra, who prays instead for John the Baptist.

I have only one guide, and that is to fulfill your wishes to the best of my ability, and to our mutual benefit as members of the Sophomore class. I will always be available for talking over anything that you have on your mind, and shall do my utmost to see that you, the Sophomore class, are well represented.

Secretary

Dear Fellow Students of the Freshmen Class:

When I decided to run for Secretary of the Sophomore Class, many people tried to persuade me to run for an office which they thought I would have a better chance to win. My reply to them was that I was not running just for the sake of winning, but I had chosen the office of secretary because I had the ability and experience to fit me for that position I was secretary of many organizations in high school, the most important being Secretary of the Student Body and the Student Council. Since I have been here at college I have been working as a Secretarial Assistant to Dr Stone and Dr Goulding M job doesn't seem like work to me because I love to do secretarial work.

Should I have the privilege and honor to serve the Sophomore Class, I pledge my willingness to fulfill the duties of secretary efficiently and accurately.

My earnest desire to fill this office to the best of my ability.

Sincerely yours,
Beth Sugga

Men's Senate

Dear Freshman Class,

To be your Sophomore Class Senator, a person must be willing to work long and hard. He should despite his own prejudices and opinions, support the actions and movements which favor the majority He must desire to conduct himself in a method fitting to his position

If you believe that I am capable, I would like to serve as one of your Sophomore Class Senators I am no "machine politician," nor do I wish to become one. It is my desire to serve you in the Senate capacity so as to give better representation and stronger support for you—next year's sophomores Your Desires Are My Aims! Hoping to serve you, I remain

Sincerely,
Jimmy Joanos

Men's Senate

Dear Fellow Students:

Tuesday you will go to the polls to make an important decision—who will represent you to the Senate during the coming year. The decision is important because it will determine whether or not you will have an active representative student government

As a freshman Senator this past year I have strived diligently to represent all of the members of the freshman class As a member of a special faculty-Senate committee I worked to help solve the controversial Secretary of Labor bill, was Co-Chairman of the Senate Rules Committee, and spoke at seven career days in various parts of the State to publicize Florida State University F S U. is a great university, and it is my desire to help put it on top in the nation.

Someone has said that campaign platforms are just like the platforms on the back of street cars—not meant to stand on, just to get in on! My platform for this election contains three items. It is a platform on which I can stand and intend to fulfill if elected your Sophomore Senator.

1. I shall work for the publication of a booklet stating all the regulations concerning students
2. I shall work for student control of the activity fee to be delegated in the U G A
3. I shall continue to work for a more powerful student government with more responsibility

These are a few of the tasks that I am intrested in accomplishing as your Sophomore Senator. I have represented my class in the Senate faithfully and to the best of my ability this year and would appreciate very much the opportunity to serve you as your Sophomore Senator next year

Most Sincerely,
Coyle Moore

Men's Senate

Dear SOPHOMORES:

Student freedom is what I stand for. This freedom doesn't come by itself; if we want it, we're going to have to fight for it.

I was surprised to see that our U.G.A. Constitution has no Bill of Rights. If elected, I will present for Senate consideration an amendment to our Constitution which will guarantee fundamental rights to the students at F.S.U. I will wholeheartedly support legislation to protect infringements on these rights.

The students and their representatives to the Senate seem to unite for common cause only during campaign times. I feel that this union should continue throughout the year; therefore, I will maintain close personal contact with you o better learn what you want the Senate to do. I also think that the Senate should provide suggestions boxes, through which ideas and opinions would be brought before the Senate

I am for student control of student affairs. If you are, too, I would appreciate your support.

Liberally yours,
Hans Tews

Men's Senate

My Fellow Students,

This spring I am running for Sophomore Senate. I realize that we independents are going to have an uphill race fighting the professionals (student Party candidates). However my decision to run outside of the party for Sophomore representative to Senate was based on two reasons: (1) During my Freshman year I have participated actively in many campus activities, which I feel will help me to represent student opinion accurately, and adequately. These activities include Debating, (Varsity squad), Smoke Signals (Sports Editor), Forums Committee, Theta Chi Pledge and Class Secretary. (2) The planks in my platform are different from those of the party, because they are new, more specific, and not repetitious.

They are: (1) More Students represented in the Student Senate Instead of the present System which allows only three per class, the students should be represented by the number of people in each class. This will enable senate to cope with the added power and responsibility which it seeks, since there will be more active members. (2) Student control over the Activity Fee Money, with a published report every Semester (3) Strong participation of Student Senate to the matter of Women's regulations, so the girls can exercise their freedom as adults. If the Freshmen men are treated as men, why shouldn't the women have like respect from the University officials? (4) Senate should put a stop to the searching of men's dorms by any one other than the delegated students.

Sincerely,
Herb Lacavo

Women's Senate

Dear Editor:

I am running for re-election in Women's Senate and would greatly appreciate the support of the Freshman class.

I think it rather trite to make high-sounding political promises Rather, I prefer to be more practical and honest by stating that as a Senator I shall be willing at any time to listen and act upon any suggestions that you feel warrant attention. For I believe that your wishes and complaints should be of upper-most importance to a member of the Senate This was my concern when I suggested this year that the Senate look into the possibility of permitting all women to have 12 30 privileges on Saturday night.

With your support in this election, I will continue to work for you and your interests.

Nancy Graham

Women's Senate

To the Student Body,

Many of us freshmen girls, here on campus for the first time, experienced a sense of restriction. It seemed like there was a rule for everything—a rule for when we had to be in our own rooms, a rule for when we could type, a rule for when we had to be quiet, rules on how to dress, rules telling us where we might go on a date, and many more It was hard to remember all of them, and we found that mistakes we made first semester counted against us second semester. Some of these rules were necessary, some were in need of modification, while still others seemed like carry-overs from the days when girls weren't expected to think for themselves As a senator from the sophomore class next year, I will do all I can to revise the rules for women students and to have a list of off-limits places to be distributed among both women and men students.

We students pay $75 00 for student activities while only $12.50 is handled by student officials As a senator I will do all I can to have the student funds handled by students and have an account of the funds be widely distributed among the student body.

To increase student interest to Student Government I suggest that students outside of UGA be personally invited by Senate and Honor Court members to sit in on meetings. If elected, I shall seek the advice of several students before voting on any controve issue before the Senate.

Sports Chatter

Our Seminole nine has beeen somewhat of a disappointment ome of their faithful followers this year When the '53 season in its infancy. It looked as if they might equal the record set the '52 squad. Now, with only two games left before the season the only thing FSU can hope for is to keep the win column er than the loss column. This is somewhere around the mediocre quite a drop from last year.

Losing isn't the worst thing in the world, but It's a hard to accept matter-of-factly. The way the weekend games ed out, we must be getting used to it. Funny how the same two only one day apart could play such different brands of ball. ough both teams made errors Friday, they managed to hold the down low enough so the game woudln't be mistaken for bas-!!

SATURDAY'S GAME looked like two junior nigh teams playing the coaches in the dugout stomping their hats and swearing d start teaching Ancient history. In this "battle of errors," an bouncer was usually enough to land a batter safe on first.

The picture wasn't entirely black, though. Stetson was wild to put us back in the win column for Saturday's game Higgenbotham displayed a hot right arm in his role as relief He also showed he could hit the long one when he slammed foul over the left field wall.

A COUPLE of notable upsets turned up in the sports world week. Dark Star pulled in ahead of Native Dancer to take Derby crown, but the big one came when the Gymkana team through with a burst of glory to take the national AAU ampionship. (Incidentally, the Yankees lost a couple of games.

In the Gymkana meet, coach Price was hoping to slide from number 5 slot in which they were seeded down to first, "with ttle luck" All those horseshoes must have made lots of noise they hit rough spots in the road.

AL RUDA, who added points to FSU's score by placing in the Clubs twirling event, explained it like this. "Sometimes we're and sometimes not We were hitting in Chicago. In New for the NCAA Tourney), we weren't hitting."

From 5th place on paper to 1st place in the actual meet is a jump, so I'll take Al's word for it—they were hitting. And of their chances weren't lessened any by the addition of Gut- and Roetzheim in the AAU meet. Because of a strict eligibility they did not compete in the NCAA meet.

Indians Will Close Season At Southern

Mills Enters Fray as Leading Hitter; Saunders Takes Mound

By BOB TAYLOR

Gunning for wins number 13 and 14, FSU closea out its season with a two game set against Florida Southern at Lakeland today and tomorrow.

The Seminoles move into the series with a hot and cold 12-9-1 record. However, they have beaten the Moccasins the last seven times they have played them. This string runs back to the spring of 1950.

Chuck Saunders, the big sophomore southpaw, is scheduled to throw for State this afternoon. Ha has a 1-1 record. Freshman righthander George Hehemann (2-2) will probably start tomorrow.

Fireman Wally Higgenbotham, along with starters Max Long and Jim Attwood, are also ready for possible mound action.

Captain Cooter Mills goes into the Southern games leading all Seminole batters with a .333 average. Catcher John Cuesta is the only other Indian hitting over .300.

Billy Campbell copped the batting crown last year with a .394 mark, the all-time FSU high. Campbell is hitting around the .270 level this year.

Shortstop Ralph Blinn goes into the series with four home runs and 20 runs batted in. Lee Bailey holds the all-time FSU records in these departments with four homers and 21 RBI's. He set these records in 1851.

Blinn is not only a threat to wipe out these, but also unfortunately, he is close to a new record for individual errors.

Regardless of results in Lakeland, this year's team fell far short of the record-setting 1952 club which rang up a 17-4 season. The best FSU can do this year, would be a 14-9-1 mark.

However, the Seminoles have a young team composed largely of freshmen, and they won't lose a single man through graduation. So baseball fans can look to 1954 for better things to come from Coach Ralph Matherly's charges. With a year's experience under their belts, there is no telling to what heights they may rise next year.

With The Majors

By HAL LeVAY

Easy there you upstart Pittsburg Pirates, and stop throwing curves at the experts. Remember, you were the boys picked to finish last again this year. But that "ray of sunshine" forecast by Manager Fred Haney a week ago after dropping four straight to the Phils is blazing right into the eyes of the opposition. Fred put it this way at the time. "The Pirates aren't beating themselves. The Phils beat them. I see a ray of sunshine for our boys." So you took the cue and began beating the other teams — the Cubs two out of three . . . The Redlegs two straight and you laid the Cards out Sunday for your fifth consecutive victory.

You there, Johnny Lindell, Remember you're all of 36 now. But still you handcuffed the Cards on four hits. Then you had to pile it on Eddie Stanky's boys by doubling home — of all guys — Mike Sandlock who can match your years. Sure, you said you were tired after throwing that knuckler for eight innings. But then you went to your slider and managed to strike out Ray Jablonski and Vern Benson in the ninth.

Next man up — Frank Thomas. Let's see — what was it the experts said about you? Oh yes, can't hit a curve ball. Leo Durocher still mutters about that grand slamer you polled off Dave Koslo that produced a 8-5 victory.

What's this, rookie Carlos Bernier? In your ninth major league game you had the effrontery to tie a major league mark! Nobody bashed out three triples since Ben Chapman turned the trick in 1938 But you had to disturp the record books by equaling the mark last Saturday.

Paul Pettit, front and center. In your first major league start you came off with an 8-3 victory against Cincinnati. Johnny Hetki relieved you after you allowed only four hits in six and a third innings. But you were apologetic for leaving the mound. A blister on your heel, we learned later. Anyway, at least you said you were sorry. So was Cincinnati.

Heard through one tin ear: Some players never make the Hall of Fame, and then there are some like "Bobo" Holloman. "Bobo" mada his first major league start Wednesday night and pitched the St. Louis Browns to a 9-0 no hit triumph over the Philadelphia Athletics. Holloman faced 31 batters, striking out three. Only six men reached base safely against him, five on walks and one by his own error. He drove in three of the Brownie runs with a pair of singles. According to the record book, Holloman is the second pitcher to hurl a no-hitter in his first major league start. Charley Jones turned the trick for Cincinnati back in 1892.

nities will pay for all the expenses, which are now furnished by the university. This includes lighting, heating and the house mother's salary.

ACCORDING to Dr. Martin these expenses will amount to about $6 a month fo reach student. The vice-president said this figure was used by estimating the maximum operating cost of each house.

He said at this rate, the fraternity men will be paying about .20 cents a month more than what they pay now "besdes the privilege of living in their own house" However, he added, the amount of the expenses are the responsibility of the fraternities.

THE EIGHT new houses were constructed by the univeralty in 1951 and were built by the same bond issue which provided the funds for the Freshmen dormitory and the student center. Under the provisions of the loan the money is to be paid back in thirty years, but it was found that under present conditions the terms could not be meant. The eight fraternity houses' share of the debt it required to be $29,912 a year or 20% of the total sum of the bond issue.

The administration claims that under the present situation, the fraternities have been running-up greater expenses than anticipated One of the explanations for this was given by the fraternity's councilor Hellman who said most of the houses have electric ensignias and flood lights which boost the cost of utilities. Hielman added that Fraternity reaction to the plan has been "quite favorable."

THE PLAN has not yet been worked out in detail, and the Board of Control will have to approve it. But Dr. Martin intimated that approval is almost assured It will then go into effect next September.

One of the features of the proposal is that the fraternity, if so desired, may rent their houses during the summer to other students. The rent will then be credited to their account.

THE PRESIDENT of the Inter-fraternity Council, Jim Ball, declined to make a comment, saying that he "did not want to express a personal opinion" at this time about the change.

If it is okay'ed by the board of control, about 320 students living in the eight fraternity houses will be affected.

forbids tha state from pledging its credit. He went on to say: "Other fraternities and sororities have managed to build with their own money or their own credit.

Another opponent, Rep. Williams of Seminole added: "nearly every national sorority and fraternity has a national buildign fund. If a chapter has $25,000 and good credit, the national fraternity will loan the money."

THE MEASURUEUS were given strong support by Leon county's representatives Atkinson and Ballinger, who have always been ardent supporters of Florida Sttae

Atkinson said $60,000 has already been spent on planning various building projects, and Ballinger commented that fraternities and sororities in Tallahassee were renting sub-standard housing.

Trackmen Will Seek Vengence in Meet Sat. With Miami

The Seminole trackmen will try to even accounts with the University of Miami this Saturday when they invade Coral Gables for a dual meet with the Hurricanes.

Miami holds a 2-1 lifetime edge over the Indians — scoring one-sided victories in 1949 and 1950. There was no meet in 1951 and last season Coach Ken Miller's boys racked up their first win in the series.

Florida State, winners in 19 of 23 dual outings over the last four years, will carry a 3-1 mark into Saturday's meet. The Seminoles opened up the season with a win over Mercer, followed with a double whammy of Georgia and Georgia Tech, and last Saturday dropped their first meet of the year to the strong Loyola Wolfpack of New Orleans.

FSU will again look to versatile sophomore Carlos Fraundorfer of Tampa for a large share of their points. Fraundorfer picked up 13 points in the Loyola loss, although failing to capture a single first place.

Beaten soundly by Florida last Saturday, the 'Canes nevertheless boast strength in the quarter and half mile, and in all the field events.

The most thrilling races will probably be in the 440 and 880 yard runs. In the quarter, Coach Miller will send "Woody" Parker and perhaps captain Dick Mize against Miami's ace, Earl Welbaum. In the half, sophomore Bill Wagoner will oppose Welbaum.

FSU Golfers End Season Saturday

The University has been fortunate in having two "Danny Grads" visit our campus, each for a year in the past. Ruth Warrell was one who came to us from the University of Vermont, and Nancy Hope, was the other, who came from Michigan State College. Nancy has been Director of the Weseley Foundation at the University of Florida since she spent her award year at FSU.

IT WAS THROUGH a Danny Grad that Ellen became inspired to seek the nomination for a Danforth award. Ellen saya she met her while sick with the flu and that the girl told her so much about the Foundation and cheered her up so well, that she couldn't help but feel that here was the incentive she needed to make up her mind to try for the award. She applied for it and was nominated by President Doak S. Campbell, Dean Katherine Warren, Dr. Neel, the University Chaplain, and Dr Ralph Witherspoon. Ellen certainly deserves congralulations for winning the award and the best of luck in her work this coming year.

The Danforth Graduate Award is non-obligatory: all expenses are paid by teh Foundation and Ellen's only requirement is giving nine months of her time to the Foundation's purpose—to further Christian living and activities on a college campus through inter-denominational work.

Elect PHOEBE JACKSON JUNIOR SENATOR

★ ★ ★ If Elected I Promise ★ ★ ★

by going to the polls to vote Tuesday, and I ask you to vote for DAVE COLLINS for JUNIOR CLASS PRESIDENT.

Sincerely
Dave Collins.

Vice-President

Dear Sophomore,

The end of the year is approaching fast and I, like you must be doing, am rushing around trying to get all my work done before our exams start.

About three weeks ago I decided to run for vice-president of the Junior Class. I felt qualified to run because I have served on house council for two years. I was co-chairman of the sophomore hop. I was recently elected treasurer of the Florida Intercollegiate Press Association. I was a member of rat court, and I am a member of women's sophomore council.

I realize that when you are chosing your class officers you want someone dependable and one that shows leadership characteristics. I also realize what a big decision it is because often times you have two or three friends running for the same office. If this is the case with you then you must choose the one whom you think is most capable.

Please don't forget to vote Tuesday regardless of whom you vote for. I know you realize how very important it is to vote.

I will close for now and hope to hear from you Tuesday. Here's wishing you lots of luck on your finals!

Sincerely,
LIZ VANG

Treasurer

Dear Fellow Sophomores,

My running for Junior Class Treasurer shows that I want to accept the responsibility that goes with this office. For yes, it holds with its position the duties of maintaining the financial balance of records and money, and with my past experience and my interest in the office, I shall be able to carry out these duties. Furthermore, additional class duties come with this, for class officers must be willing to work well with each other and to accept any additional responsibility that mey be given to them by the class president or sponsor.

My experience as Business Manager of the Thespian plays in Orlando High School and my experience as a class officer this past year will help in fulfilling the duties of this office.

Two things I ask of you now: The first is to vote in these class elections, the ones that give you and our classmates the chance to elect the ones who will lead and help promote the class and its activities and who will be the ones who will ask your assistance in this. The second is to place your confidence in me when you vote on Tuesday. My appreciation will be great!

Sincerely yours,
Frances Helms.

Treasurer

Dear Student:

You know, as well as I, that it would be easy for me to write a platform outline slanting it either toward policies of the Student Party in order to gain its support or toward more conservative, anti-party views. But the aim of a candidate should not be to write detailed speeches—which the voter may or may not believe and which may or may not be true. His purpose should be to let the student voter know that he will do his job well.

FSU is my school; I, as much as you, want to see it grow in many ways. FSU has many advantages to offer its students. But it also has many faults—if it did not, our campus would be swamped with the total college population of the United States. I believe that most of these faults can be corrected through student co-operation and planning with the faculty. If students can gain greater outlet for their legislative and executive talents through the Student Party, that organization is a worthy one.

During the past year, I have been a member of the Funds Committee of UGA. Although I am now president of the Wesley Players, most organizations of which I have been an officer in the past have elected me treasurer. If I should be elected Junior Class Treasurer, I will try to express the intelligent opinion of the entire student body toward making our school a better place to live.

Doun Teal.

Women's Senote

Dear Fellow Students,

Time for elections is almost here again and it hardly seems like a month ago before we were caught up in campaigning last Spring.

I am running for Senate again, this time to be a Junior Senator. With these past two years of experience, I feel confident that I can do more for the school than ever before, for truly, "Experience, is the best teacher." It is definitely a qualification for Senate.

It does take a little time to take over responsibilities in senate work, and since my interest has mounted and my experience has taught me many things, I am again seeking the office of senator. I want to serve you all again.

So remember when you go to the polls next Tuesday that "For a bigger and better FSU, let Charis Coulter represent you!"

Sincerely,
CHARIS COULTER.

Women's Senote

Fellow Students,

Florida State is growing by leaps and bounds. The 50-Year Plan is well underway, the faculty has more famous people on it, Circus gets more attention from the nation's magazines each season, and it seems we're finally coming of age. That's why we need a student Senate that is coming of age also.

The student laws should be reviewed and revise to meet the urgent needs of a modern campus with a philosophy as futuristic as its new modern skyscrapers. That's why we need new people with energy and a willingness to work to achieva the kind of student government at FSU that we really want.

I feel I have the qualities that are needed in this desirable new Senate, and I want to try my hand at representing the students as they really should be represented. In the past I've had experience working with people in the Theater Dance Group, "F" Club, Sophomore Council, Sigma Alpha Iota, and in many music department projects.

I'm certain that with your support I can do much for the improvement of the FSU student government if you will help me. The Student Party gave me their support and now I want yours, that means I want the stamp of approval of each student of the University.

Sincerely yours,
Anne Hays

Women's Senote

Dear Sophomores,

One of the most vital parts of student government is your University Senate, for it is here that your wishes can be translated into concrete action. More privileges for the students and improvements over existing systems are both initiated in Senate, and it is necessary to have representatives in this body who are sensitive to the needs and desires of thair class.

Tuesday you will choose your representatives for next year. I ask you to seriously consider my candidacy for this office, on the basis of my past experience.

Serving as an appointed Sophomore Senator this year, I have had the opportunity to take part in the progressive legislation issued by Senate during second semester.

If you chose to elect me as a Junior Senator, I will strive to be a capable representative of our class and to serve each junior in bringing his opinion before University Senate.

Thank you,
PHOEBE JACKSON

Honor Court

Dear Students,

The Student Party gave me their support when they realized how eager I am to foster interest and action for the establishment of a strong Honor System at Florida State University. I've had experience in the student government of my high school and am interested in improving the lot of the students by acting as justice of our Honor Court.

I believe such a justice must be an average type of coed who realizes the problems and the backgrounds of the student when issuing vital decisions.

I promise to be fair, impartial and willing to devote all my energy to making our Honor System as workable as the famous one on the Campus of the University of Virginia.

If I'm elected the Honor Emphasis Week next year will really achieve more response and interest from the students.

Sincerely yours,
SUSAN (SUE) EARLE

Honor Court

To the student body of FSU:

There is no keener sense of justice than that possessed by each of us for our fellow student. It does work out that way in an organized society, at Johns Hopkins I have seen a student government, given free reins, make its own decisions and regulate its activities. FSU is probably the friendliest University in the South and it, too, has great capability in this direction. I am convinced that this spirit assures us success.

What, then, must we strive for? Progress, interest, and reorganization (if necessary) are all essential parts of our program. This year is an important one for us. Politics has grown; I have seen the judicial system grow with work on the Honor Committee. To meet the expanding needs of an expanding University, alone, [illegible] our thoughts to allow for progress. Let's not be shackled to old ideas by any type of subordination.

This, then, is my chief interest and I present it as my major qualification to you, asking you for your confidence in the election of the Junior Honor Court representatives. We must take University-wide action, with consideration for everyone. Let's do a good job—all the way!

Sincerely, very,
Bert Miller.

Honor Court

Fellow Students:

I am running for Junior Representative to Honor Court on the Independent Ticket. It is my firm belief that we can have a working honor system here at F. S. U. through the combined efforts of students and faculty. If I am elected, I promise to bend every effort to get the honor system to working better.

I would certainly appreciate your support in the election next Tuesday, but whether or not you vote for me, at least vote for the persons whom you think are most qualified for all the offices.

Sincerely,
Sara Whitehead

Judiciary

Dear Students:

As a candidate for the office of Junior Men's Judiciary, I will greatly appreciate your support in the coming election. I will strive to the best of my ability to carry out the high ideals of the Judiciary. I promise to be of assistance to the students at all times and will do my utmost to be fair and impartial in all cases. I will try to achieve and hold the prestige and respect that this office demands.

Sincerely Yours,
Mike Kish

Troffic Court

Dear Students,

Everyone realizes the traffic congestion difficulties we have here at Florida State, and also the parking problems of which everyone complains.

I believe that when the traffic court is staffed with capable judges these problems will take care of themselves. I want this court to be for the good of all of the students; to try to regulate the congested areas and to rid the campus of its parking problems. The court should not be an aggressive police organ extracting huge fines from the students. I realize the weaknesses of past courts and would like a chance to improve these conditions. I would appreciate your support in next Tuesday's elections.

Sincerely,
Jane Wardlaw

SENIOR

President

To Members of Next Year's Senior Class:

Many of you have urged me to enter next Tuesday's election as an independent candidate for Senior Class President.

My decision to do so is based to a great extent on my sincere belief that only by having at least two parties can we have true democracy at the University. Since at present we only have one party, I am running independently in order that you may have a choice and express that choice in true democratic style by your vote.

You have honored me as a Senator, where I have enjoyed serving you as Chairman of one of the Committees. I hope that you will consider my experience through the three years I have attended the University, together with the deep interest I have in the welfare of F. S. U. and those who attend, and vote for me for President of next year's Senior Class.

Sincerely,
Colin English

Men's Senote

Dear Friends,

As you may well know by now, I am seeking the office of Senior Senator. I feel that FSU is a growing progressive school that needs that kind of leadership to continue in the way it is now going. I feel that this can best be accomplished by the correct balance of student and administrative leadership and power. I do not believe however that an off balance in either direction will accomplish anything for studeots or administration.

A cooperative spirit between the students and the administration is, in the long run, the only workable plan of government for a college campus as ours. It will take a spirit of cooperation that we must seek to develop by good student administration relations, rather than strained and tense ones such as can be developed by an over aggressive attitude that some feel is necessary to get anything of value.

FSU is a school that will need many changes in the future in order to function correctly and these changes and revision of the school program need to be worked out efficiently and smoothly for the good of all. To this, I pledge my activities if elected a Senior Senator.

Paal Wragg

Men's Senote

Fellow Studeots:

This letter is written to those students qualified to vote for a candidate for Senior Senator.

Two weeks ago, if you'll remember correctly, I was defeated in the race for UGA President. My supporters did agree, however, that I had many excellent planks in my platform. The voters also knew that I fully accepted the platform of the Student Party. Rumors have it that those extra planks of my own are going to be incorporated into next year's U. G. A. organization. I'd like to be there when they are.

This would be possible if the students would vote for me next Tuesday for Senior Senator (The name? Chris Young). I sought the support of the Student Party in my race for this position and was accepted. (If you'll remember, delegates representing every facet of campus life by popular acclamation declared Bruce Galphin, Frank Shaw, and myself as the Student Party's three candidates for the three seats in the Senior Senate.)

I hope—if elected—to represent faithfully the students of the Senior Class of FSU next year in offering bills and recommendations which will best serve the interest of those studeots and all students. I will oppose any and all legislation which impartial survey shows that special-interest groups are supporting. I shall not be intimidated by administrative officials in matters which I know to be within the jurisdiction of the UGA.

I have confidence in the students of FSU. I want your support—your vote for me as Senior Senator. Tuesday, May 11, 1953 is Election Day.

Chris Young

Women's Senote

My Fellow Students,

I am a candidate for the office of Senior Senator in the coming class elections.

Experience is a foremost item needed for this office. I have obtained this experience and knowledge of Senate and Senate procedure through my coverage of Senate for the Flambeau. As I became interested in Senate, I wrote stories for the Flambeau and attended Senate meetings.

Recently, I have been appointed Associate editor of next year's Flambeau.

I am running on the independent ticket for this office of Senior Senate. I want to serve you, the students, and will at all times follow through with the very best of my ability.

Sincerely,
Margaret Horrox

Members of the Junior Class:

I am a candidate for the office of Senior Women's Senate, and would appreciate any votes cast my way. For the past year I have served you as a member of Women's Judiciary, to the best of my ability. It is my desire to serve you again in the capacity of senior senator, and I w appreciate your support.

Thank You
Patty Marti

Election Primary Set for Tuesday

Council will also help the Elections committee to count votes Tuesday night. The counting is open to the public and any student can watch the proceedings and returns as they come in from the audience's reserve section. Counting room for the Tuesday ballots will be in 303 Westcott, not Longmire Auditorium as previously announced.

Voting procedure will be essentially the same as always. To vote, a student must present his ID card to a poll attendant who will punch it and give him a ballot. Seniors may only vote on amendments and candidates for the Courts.

SORAPARU HAS called attention to the hanging of posters and other campaign literature inside buildings. He said students will have to refrain from hanging such material on walls of buildings inside other than on bulletin boards, without first getting permitting from the janitors of the buildings. All officers elected will take office upon taking the Oath of Office after the elections, except the members and chairmen of the courts who take over on the first day of the Fall semester next year.

Museum Shows Indian Dwellings In New Exhibit

A model of the first apartment houses built in America are featured in a new exhibit opening today in the Florida State University Museum, according to Dr. Hale Smith, museum director.

The model is of a communal house of the Pueblo Indians designed and contructed by FSU students. It highlights an exhibit on this Indian tribe loaned by the Same Fe, New Mexico museum.

The exhibit is free and open to the public. It will remain on display until Sept. 1.

Background materials and props of the Indian display were all made by FSU students. Taizo Miake, graduate student in art from Honolulu, directed the student work.

Miake was assisted by Russell West, Robert Steinback, Morgan Smith, Vincent Cremata, and Nancy Day.

Dr. Smith said the Pueblo house as modelled in the exhibit provides the Indians living quarters for 20 or 30 families, and sometimes a whole village.

Miniature gods carved of wood, coil baskets, ceramics, exhotic jewelry made of turquoise nad shells, women's deerskin legging, hand woven rugs, sashes and belts are included in the exhibit.

A metate and mano, stones used by the Pueblo for grinding corn, have been given to the FSU museum by the Santa Fe museum.

Veterans Group Assures Standards Of Counselors High

The standards for vocational conselors has been raised in a move to assure veterans of getting the highest possible calibre of counseling when they apply for training according to the Veteran's Administration.

Any new counselors hired will now have to have at least two years of graduate studies in fields of counseling or psychology, and at least two years of experience in counseling individuals in choosing vocational goals and in their problems of personal adjustment.

VA vocational counselors on the job before the new standards were announced will be encouraged to take further training to meet the new standards, V-A said.

VOCATIONAL counseling is a "must" for all disabled World War II and Korean veterans planning to take vocational rehabilitation training. It serves the purpose of guiding a man into a field where he stands the best chance of making good in spite of his handicap.

The two years of graduate training now required of VA vocational counselors must include courses in personality organization and dynamics (such as abnormal psychology and mental hygiene); counseling theory and techniques; psychological tests and measurements, and the study of occupations (such as job analysis, occupational information, labor problems, and the like)

The two years of experience must include work in counseling individuals in their problems of personal adjustment, counseling with respect to the selection of occupational goals, and applying special rehabilitation counseling techniques to the seriously handicapped.

Couple Reigns Over Prom's Annual Crowd

Queen Sally Kennedy and King Bobby Drake reigned over the annual Junior Senior Prom, the one dance of the school year that honors graduating seniors and comes as a tribute from the junior class.

The two honored students were elected by popular student vote last week in a campus-wide election. Included in the court were Ellen Avis, Mary Ruth Summers, and Barbara Brewton, senior women. Senior men were Bob Ryals, Paul Soraparu and Tommy Bowen. Junior members of the court were Carolyn Calhoun, June Conyers and Jean Northrup; Milton Carothers, Roy Stetson and Colin English.

Dr. Sam Neal, FSU Chaplain, crowned the coupe in the coronation ceremony.

A "comfortably large" crowd danced to the music of the Regents under garlands of Florida greenery and artificial flowers. The bandstand, according to many, was one of the "nicest ever seen." Three small fountains gushed water under multi-colored lights behind a flower - and - leaf-bedecked podium near the level of the dance floor. Decorations carried out the theme of the affair which said in large letters behind the bandstand, "Some Enchanted Evening," a fitting tribute to the "typical warm summer's night formal."

The junior-senior prom as we know it has come a long way from the "dark ages" in the life of FSU. Back when the school was Florida State College for Women, they had the prom, but it was an all-female affair. Girls danced with girls then, and not until some time later were the girls permitted dates with male escorts.

Party To Face Test In Elections Today

Primary Poses 63 Offices For Student Consideration

By AL PIERCE

Today's Class Election ballot, studded with independent names, will be no walk-away for the Student Party, say many on campus. Today's primary election will really be a primary, according to those who feel the independent candidates on the ballot will give those running under Student Party sanction a hard race

Campaigning will end for some and grow more intense for others who will continue into the final elections a week from today. Finals next week will determine who fills the 63 offices for next year's student leaders

ALL DAY today the three polling places will be open to voters. Students may cast their ballots in the first floor center of Westcott, the foyer of Seminole Dining Hall or in front of the Post Office at the Student Center. The booths will remain open from 8 this morning till 6 tonight. Members of Women's Sophomore Council," the girls in the blue and white," will be at polling places to hand out ballots and punch ID cards and answer questions.

Seniors will be voting only for court officers and amendments to UGA constitution which are included on today's ballot. Juniors, sophomores and frosh will, as always, be electing their class officers for the coming year. To make sure members of a class vote only for their class's next year's officers, attendants at the polls will check their classification on a master sheet.

PAUL Soraparu, UGA Secretary of Elections, has issued a warning that all campaign literature, including posters, must be removed from within 50 feet of the voting booths. He said any literature found to be within 50 feet of a booth will be taken down.

Counting of ballots will again be a public affair. All are invited to watch the vote-tallying which will take place this time in Room 303, Westcott beginning at 7:30. All official results of the Primary elections will be posted in Westcott as soon as possible after the elections, Soroparu said.

Motorists Reminded To Beware Of Westcott Parking Regulations

Motorists, beware of 15 minute parking areas in front of Westcott.

Recent parking survey made by the new Student Traffic Court show that out of 186 total violations since the middle of March, 47 per cent were in the Westcott area anr 39 per cent of these were due to overtime parking in the 15-minute parking areas.

ACCORDING TO regulations, the "first four spaces to the right and to the left, north and south, of the East Gate in front of Westcott Building are reserved for 15 minute parking for students and University employes."

Chief Justice of the Traffic Court Pinky Nowlin said that many students have not been displaying car stickers on their vehicle windshields, another violation of the Student Traffic Court regulations. As of last Friday, all campus police officers have been instructed to give students traffic tickets if they do not have stickers, he said

ALL STUDENTS who do not have stickers should register their cars with Don Farqueharson at his office in Room 104 Westcott Building Nowlin said.

Judging from the total number of past violations it is estimated that the parking violations would be cut in half if the students would cooperate and avoid these unnecessary penalties," Nowlin advised.

The Student Traffic Court, after a study of violations by areas, reported that 71 violations have been in the 15 minute zone and 16 in other zones just in Westcott, making a total of 87.

House Traffic Bill Question Inspires Alternate Proposals

A bill aimed at solving the knotty campus traffic problem was introduced into the state legislature last week by Representatives Dukes of Jackson and Keezel of Orange counties. The main effect of the bill would be to forbid freshmen and sophomores the use of cars on the campus.

Legislators Dukes and Keezel claim that their proposal would not only alleviate the parking situation but would also help raise the scholastic standards of freshmen and sophomores.

According to them the unrestricted use of automobiles "has resulted in traffic congestion, devoting large areas of the campus . . . to parking areas, the necessity to employ traffic officers at state expense and required the establishment of a student traffic court of doubtful legal validity to deal with traffic violators, all of which causes unnecessary expenditure of time, money and use of state property."

They would particularly deny freshmen and sophomores the right to use automobiles on campus because they find the scholastic records of these underclassmen "generally indicates that ownership, use and possesion of an automobile is not conducive (sic) to scholastic excellence." The representatives stated that many students use cars "purely for personal pleasure."

Students, faculty, administration and staff alike have known for at least two years that the campus traffic problem was growing more an dmore dificult; they have known some action was necessary to cope with the situation, and they should be grateful that the state legislature has been interested enough to consider it.

However, we humbly submit that there are other, more fruitful and perhaps more mature methods of dealing with the traffic problem on campus.

Clearly, banning the cars of all sophomores and freshmen from the campus would alleviate the present congestion. Just as clearly, though, it would be all the more alleviated if no student cars were allowed on campus. And if one of the reasons in proposing the House bill was to reduce the money spent by the state for traffic officers and student traffic courts, then obviously such reductions are possible on only a small scale if any large number of student cars remain.

And while in some cases operating cars may cause students to neglect their studies, the records are not at all clear as to whether there are more poor students among car owners than non-owners. Nor is there evidence that freshman and sophomore car owners are poorer students than junior and senior owners.

So the question of whether freshmen and sophomores should be denied permission to use cars reduces logically to whether all students should be denied this right.

Again we admit that this would be one solution, but we feel that the traffic matter should be looked at in another manner.

A university campus is very much like any other community. It is different from other communities of its population in that younger people predominate and in that it is more compact, but in essence its needs in regards to parking are just like any city's. Cities throughout Florida and the nation are today facing traffic situations such as they have never faced before. They recognize the rights of citizens to operate cars, though, and are spending a great deal of money to correct crowded conditions.

Universities are often eulogized as training grounds in citizenship. It is said that through student government, students learn many of the problems that will face them in the future. If we are to give more than lip service to this ideal, then it behooves to let a campus be run as nearly as possible to an ordinary community. To the fullest possible extent we should grant students the rights of any other citizen. The expense involved is the expense of good government .

The other courses open in handling the traffic problem are many. On this campus at least, parking facilities have been so expanded of late that it is doubtful whether any new lots will be needed for some time to come. Student government and the administration in conjunction could work out such things as rerouting of traffic. Repeated offenders of student traffic regulations could be forbidden to use their cars on campus.

The traffic problem definitely needs studying, but we feel better solutions are available than any wholesale restrictions on the use of cars by students.

● 10:30 BILL EXPLAINED

An issue which has brought much dispute and controversy on campus is the new 10:30 restriction for first-semester freshmen women. The bill has passed and will go into effect the beginning of next Fall.

As yet, no explanations have been made public regarding the reasons behind the bill's introduction or its passage. We would like to give some explanation as pointed out by Women Senators, so that their action may be better understood.

Women's Senate first began considering the matter because of the low scholarship. An unusually large number of first semester freshmen women receive unsatisfactories. A Senate committee was appointed and they began checking on the problem.

The Senators found that FSU is one of the country's most lenient universities regarding time limit on week nights. Also the freshmen have a hard time settling down to study since university life is all new to them.

Noise in the dorms is not conducive to study, especially the noise of the students coming in at 1 1o'clock. Since lights have to be off at 11:30 first semester, those coming in at 11 have no time for study, instead they must hurry to get ready for bed. With the library closing at 10 o'clock this leaves ample time for students to get to their dorms.

These are the points voiced by Women's Senate and the reasons given for passage of the bill. The rules were passed by Senate in October and approved by the Faculty Review Board in November.

Several students felt the rules unfair and took the case to University Court. The court was asked to consider the question on two points: (1). the rules were passed only by Women's Senate, and they were not signed by the President of UGA. (2). the rules were not brought before the entire Senate although indirectly affecting men students as well as women.

On the second point the University Court said "the effect on men students was insufficient to render the rules invalid on that account."

Regarding the first point, the court referred to the Constitution which says that Women's Senate and Men's Senate are "to handle all legislation pertaining to their respective sexes." The University Court felt this phrase sufficient for Women's Senate to have passed the rules.

Also the President of UGA has the power to veto or sign acts of the University Government Association Senate, provided that he exercises such power within 10 days after the passage of an act. The veto may be overridden by a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

The University Court considered the rules in question House Council Rules, since "the enforcement of them would be rendered by that branch of the judicial system." Since the Constitution "clearly excepts House Council Rules from consideration of University Senate," the University Court conceives that "the Constitution does not provide for a signing or veto of House Council rules by the President."

Based upon this reasoning, the University Court found the rules pased by Women's Senate valid.

This concludes the story of the new 10:30 ruling for first-semester freshmen women. We hope it has given you a better understanding of this situation.

● CABINET ENLARGED

One of University Senate's more progressive moves of the year took place last Tuesday with the passage of a bill to create a Secretary of State for the President's Cabinet.

The new Cabinet Member, if approved by the Faculty Committee On Student Affairs, would serve three main purposes. He would first be the reporter for all branches of the University Government, giving all official data and accounts of activities to the student publications. He would work in conjunction with the Public Relations Office in publicizing the workings of our University Government for sources outside the campus. He would serve as host for the government helping to organize conventions and campus tours, as well as arranging for the entertainment of official campus visitors In short, this cabinet officer is designed to serve as an assistant to the President.

Obviously the addition of a Secretary of State would relieve the president of plaguing chores which were never meant to fall under his responsibilities, but have done so through necessity. By virtues of being exempted from his surplus duties, the president could allot larger amounts of time and effort to the delegation of more imminent matters at hand. The addition of a new cabinet member would serve to effect greater concentration along more definite lines. The creation of a Secretary of State would be an immeasurable boon to the present executive system.

Printed below is the original bill as passed by the University Senate and submitted to the Faculty Committee on Student Affairs Wednesday:

BE IT ENACTED BY THE UNIVERSITY SENATE:

Section 1. There shall be an additional member of the President's Cabinet, to be known as a Secretary of State.

Letters to the Editor . . .

Caesar Answers

Dear Students:

I would like to take this opportunity to reply to the rather unpleasant political charges levied at me through two previous Letters to the Editor.

I am well aware that a certain percentage of my fellow students are in sympathy with these individuals who have claimed that I am guilty of fraudulent and corrupt political practices. This letter is not designed to condemn or crucify the people responsible for the presentation of the declarations antitled, "Caesar Criticized" and "Caesar Investigated". It has always been my opinion that as citizens of a democratic society each and everyone of us has the absolute right and privilege to express his thoughts in any manner that he may deem advisable, so long as his ideas are not instigated in such a way that the general public will be endangered from them. Certainly, the action initiated on the part of my assailants has not violated this cardinal principle

My sole purpose for preparing these statements is to attempt to reveal the actual facts and fallacies involved in this particular incident.

Sincerely,
Wayne Terry

Brutus Explains

Romans, countrymen, and lovers! Hear me for my cause, and be silent, that you may hear; believe me for mine honor, and have respect to mine honor, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom, and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Caesar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Caesar was no less than his. If then that friend demand why Brutus rose against Caesar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Caesar were living and die all slaves, than that Caesar were dead, to live all free-men? As Caesar lov'd me, I weep for him: as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honor him: but, as he was ambitious, I slew him There is tears for his love: joy for his fortune; honor for his valor; and death for his ambition.

Many hands are being wrung today over the class elections, but this is one election day which will affect ideas more than it will individuals With almost a hundred people running for the various offices, the students will have a really fair chance to decide the fate of the Student Party and a party system of government here at Florida State

If the Party survives the test of popular vote today, we can be sure that a political party system is here to stay. Whether it remains a one party system—tantamount to oligarchy—is ultimately up to the student body, but more directly up to the student leaders who started this movement several months ago.

Looking at the lighter side of life: Saturday night was "Some-enchanted evening" for Juniors and Seniors who went to the Prom. The decorations were the most attractive I've seen at any large dance this year. June McMillan and the Junior class social committee really deserve a round of applause for a very successful evening. The "Regents" surrounded by color-lighted fountians and a wishing well were keeping up their end of the evening with a fine blend of fast and slow songs.

It's going to be sad to see the seniors go in June . . . especially for those like yours truly, who have chosen the "five year plan" for battling General Ed. requirements in an attempt to graduate. Each year we see our best chums face the cold cruel world while we continue to be 3rd and 4th semester seniors.

Thursday night last week a small group observed the University Court hand down its first decision in two years on a constitutional interpretation. The medium sized uproar was created over the passage of 10:30 closing hours for freshmen women and the limiting of weekends for all women not maintaining a 1.0 average. The question was, were these rules—with out the signature of the UGA President — constitution. The answer given by the court was yes.

It is unfortunate that more people didn't attend the open hearing to witness the keen thinking and conscientious observance of responsibility to the student body which was shown by the members of the court.

The argument presented by Bobby Drake and Gene Lawler, who questioned the constitutionality of the rules, was mainly this: that the UGA senate was subject to a presidential veto, therefore it is only reasonable to presume that a division of this body, namely women's Senate, must also be subject to this veto. Unfortunately for the boys, what is reasonable to presume isn't always so.

This writer (I use the term loosely) thinks that the decision of the court was true to our present constitution and serves to point out one more of the many wide gaps in it. Constitutionally speaking there is absolutely no check on the legislation passed by women's Senate. If they have clerical difficulties (as they had this year) and the minutes are not posted, no one will have any way of knowing or questioning their actions on women's regulations until these actions are already passed about to go into effect.

When and if we draw up a ne constitution (which we bad need) we should look carefully to the matter of checks and ba ances so that students may fe more assurance in entrusting th powers of legislation and admi stration into the hands of a few

Speaking of our patched up co stitution reminds me that, the is no provision made in it for Summer Flambeau, which nev theless appears regularly eve summer session. The Editor is ually appointed and the staff sort of wanders in. Since they su vive on the Student Activity Fe seems the students should wake and see to it that the Summ Flambeau is regulated by respo ble student authority; otherwise is likely to be taken over by a hi er strata of authority (the s dent is at liberty to read betw the lines on this statement).

If we are inclined to get do in the dumps, especially near e am time, wishing our teach would break a leg or someth listen to this report on Stude Faculty relations at David College, N. C.:

A Professor was sitting in the library absorbed in a book on li and death Statistics when he rea a certain passage which caus him to raise his eye-brows i amusement and whisper to the student next to him, "Do yo know that every time I breath somebody dies."

The student looked back ho fied, "Well of all the . . . by gos why don't you take Sen Sen?"

So you see it could be worse.

WAR SPRINGS FROM ECONOMIC CAUSES

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Ever since people became vaguely aware of the world in which they live, they have contemplated the question of the causes of war. So fruitless has been their quest for peace that they have usually concluded wars are inevitable. This "sophisticated" point of view is very useful to them in that it has unburdened them of their responsibility to think about the matter.

The folklore of society is full of amazing myths about war, all of which form a reservoir of cliches from which people can quote automatically when asked to reason through certain problems.

The most outstanding and most respectible of these myths is that war is inevitable because of the "warlike" tendencies of human beings. This is analogous to saying dynamite blows up because of its explosive properties; that is, it is reasoning in circles.

What about the "warlike" tendencies of man, though? The Freudian school and other systems of apologia for the status quo have given such emphasis to this idea that it is firmly implanted in the minds of an overwhelming majority of people.

If warlike tendencies are to explain wars, then it follows that it must be "human nature" to be agressive: the tendencies must be true of all people. The evidence, however, does not support the assertion. There are small societies in the world today, isolated from the fast pace of Western civilization, in which people simply are not agressive. They look with horror upon fighting; they do not even try to best one another in games.

It would be far more reasonable to assume that the urge to go to war springs from the type of culture in which people live, for dwellers in nonagressive societies are biologically no different from Americans or Russians.

People go to war because they expect to get something out of it. In early times and even in primative societies today, that "something" is relatively very simple; better hunting or farming ground, cattle or water. This type of motivation for war need be of little concern to us, however, because it is conflict between large, civilized nations that is our problem today.

What would a big nation expect to get out of a war, then?

Russia, for instance, might gain mineral and agricultural wealth by conquering new lands Whether or not Russia might go to war, then, depends in part upon whether or not she is willing to foresake her program of internal improvement for the possible gains of a war.

For the United States, too, the causes are largely economic, but they are of a different sort. The U. S. has one problem in particular which Russia does not. In Russia, the wheels of industry are kept rolling at al times by the government, bu in America there are low points on the cycling of the free en terprise system when industr lags, firms go out of business and profits are low.

Unfortunately, war is profita to America in a business sens Periods of war have regula been periods of prosperity. No o is accusing big industrialists getting together and plotti wars, of course, but the realiza tion that war and prosperity hand in hand is in the backs of their minds and could easily pro vide a sort of subconscious mo vation.

This situation need not be tru for government in periods of eco nomic recession could provide a boost to the economy in the for of a public works program whi would benefit almost everyone But this would be "New-Dealism" or "socialism" and is still unacceptable to many people

Idealogical reasons are often cited as the causes for fighting a war: Russia and the United States could both claim to be fighting for freedom. For the most part, though, idealogical reasons provide the background for the propaganda a nation uses to keep its side fighting, not the actual starting of a war.

It is safe to say that if a mean could be devised for preventin people from making any prof from a war, wars would vanish.

SEMINOLE SOAPBOX

CAMPAIGN CRIMES BECOME SOAP BOX TOPIC

BY LIZ VANG

Today, election day at Florida State University, is the day 90 students have been planning for several days and even weeks. These students have spent hard earned money buying poster paper, paints, and other parafanalia which go into making up a campaign. They have labored long and tedious hours to produce posters, banners, and the like.

Few realize the money and hours involved in making a campaign a success For many students, the closest they get to a campaign is putting a check mark next to a candidate's name. They never stop to realize how the name got there, or why the student decided to run for that particular office.

When a student decides to run for office he is filled with excitement and anticipation. He plunges himself into a fervor of hard work and campaigning. He never for one moment during the campaign gives up hope that he might be the next one to be in office.

He sets down a plan of strategy to be used throughout his politicking and figures on the votes he might and might not get. He seeks the support of well known students on campus and selects one to give campaign speeches for him.

When the opening hour of campaigning arrives the candidate hastily picks up his great masterpieces in the form of posters and rushes around trying to find places for them to be displayed. He tacks them up, and then stands back and heaves a sigh of relief when he realizes that he had done all he can do and must now wait for election day.

Each day the candidate walks through campus admiring his posters. Then one day he looks and half of them are gone. All he thinks about are the hours of hard labor that have been wasted.

Perhaps the first thing that pops into his head is to go around and take down everyone of his opponents posters and destroy them. But then he realizes that just because his opponent or someone else belittled himself doesn't mean that he has to do the same.

The only thing that is left for the candidate to do is to go home and cry into a bottle of beer or pray long and hard that he will win the battle anyway. He is almost a shattered man. His hours of long labor have gone to waste and there is really nothing to live for.

The candidate realizes that the "poster-stealer" has struck. Consequently, the remaining days of the campaign are filled with dismay as the candidate sees votes slowly slipping away from him.

Another misdemeanor committed during campaign is the "name-calling". Perhaps you have heard one candidate slandering the name of his opponent. If a candidate during elections would spend more time "talking up" his own name instead of wasting time "downing" another, he might have a better chance of procuring the office.

These "crimes" committed during politicking should be handled like all other offenses on campus. First, the student body must realize the magnitude of this proble and then they must consider som remedies. Only when these crime are stopped can the campaignin on FSU's campus be considered success.

Tennis Team Beats Mocs, Also Record

Florida State's tennis team, by steamrolling the Moccasins of Florida Southern last Wednesday, chalked up their top record in the history of the squad.

Cosch Loucks' natters rolled up an impressive mark of 15 wins, marred by only two losses during the past season. Those came at the hands of a fervent Louisiana State and a violent Rollins crew

The previous high won-lost mark for a Seminole net squad has remained unshattered since 1949, when the chieftans went on the warpath with a 11-2 record. Only one member of the current squad will be lost via the graduatioo route—Dan Boda of Tallahassee.

Dan sparked the team in their latest triumphs.

Dave Kennedy and Joe Harris, sophomore mainstays, summed up the feelings and comments of the entire squad by saying, "It's an honor to play with a team like we had this year".

The weekend was closed with a beach party at Carrabelle on Sunday.

Indians Drop One, Win One With Mocs

Coach Matherley's Seminoles split the two game series with the Florida Southern Moccasins on their road trip last weekend, to end the '53 season with a 13-10-1 record.

In the Friday game, Moc centerfielder Hal Smeltzy poled a long homer with bases loaded early in the contest to put the game on ice for Southern. Smeltzy's 350 foot drive over the left field fence came at the expense of Max Long, who had just come in to relieve starter Chuck Sanders.

Charlie Senger, the Moc's knuckleball artist, went all the way in Friday's contest, allowing only 8 hits.

The only hit good for extra bases was a drive by John Cuesta that hopped over the left field barrier for a ground rule double. Cuesta also had a single in four trips to the box to lead FSU's hitters with a .500 average for the day.

Both teams were playing with the handicap of a revamped lineup. Florida Southern lost four starters through ineligibility.

Coach Matherly juggled his line-up somewhat, in an effort to get smooth teamwork that was so badly lacking in the Stetson games. Mills and Blinn switched posts, Mills moving in to shortstop and Blinn taking over the right-field slot. Cuesta moved down to first base, while Ashley took over his catching post.

The final score was 7-2

WIN FINAL GAME

In Saturday's game, the Seminoles bounced back strong to take the final game with a whopping 15-4 score.

In the first inning, three Seminole hits and four Moc errors gave FSU a five run jump. The Indians racked up six more runs in the fourth to take a commanding lead. The game was called at seven innings by agreement.

Freshman George Hehemann stayed on the hill for the full seven innings and allowed only nine hits to the hard-pressed Mocs.

Dr. Nafe Addresses Science Frat Men Wednesday Night

Dr. John Nafe, psychologist, will speak to the Sigma Xi Science Fraternity of Florida State University at 8 p.m. tomorrow night in the science auditorium.

Dr. Nafe is a visiting professor at FSU this semester with the title, Distinguished Professor of Psychology. The topic of his talk will be "Sensation, its neural and physical correlates." The public is invited.

Dr. Nafe has devoted his life to research in how people see, hear, taste, and smell; how they get information through the senses. During World War II he was with the Office of Scientific Research and Development.

He is a past president of the Southern Society of Philosophy and Psychology, was once head of the psychology department at Washington University, St Louis, and has taught at Harvard, Cornell, Ohio State, the Universities of Texas, California, Colorado, and Los Angeles State College.

Dr. Nafe is co-author of the "Handbook of Experimental Psychology," considered one of the most authoritative books on the subject ever published. He is now serving on the board of editors of several leading psychological journals.

Students Apply For Part-Time Positions In Summer School

Students who plan to attend summer school and who want part-time work on or off campus should file applications immediately, according to G. E. Tully, director of vocational guidance and placement.

"Summer openings for student assistants are already being reported by various departments on campus, and we want to fill these jobs as soon as possible," Tully says.

Library and clerical openings, as well as food service positions in the cafeterias, have been reported within the past few days. Student typists and stenographers will also be in demand this summer.

Trackmen Lose To Hurricanes

The University of Miami Hurricanes got off to a surprisingly fast start today and withstood Florida State's closing rush to edge the Seminoles, 66-65 in a bitterly contested dual meet.

Twenty points behind at the halfway mark, the Indians narrowed the gap when sprinting Woody Parker led a Seminole sweep in the 220 yard dash.

Parker also defeated Miami's ace Earl Weibaum in a thrilling 440 and held the lead which Captain Dick Mize handed him in the mile relay as he anchored the Indians to victory there.

When State's standout Carlos Fraundorfer—who placed in four events and was high man again with 14 points—won the broad jump, FSU led by 62-60. But Miami's Bartolovich triumphed in the javelin as predicted, despite a fine effort by State frosh Ron Weaver and Bob Verbannic.

Miami's first and third places in the closely-contested javelin gave her the minimum 66 points needed for victory in a dual meet.

The Canes' Walbaum, beaten in the stretch by Parker in the 440, came back to take a slow half mile after FSU's Bill Wagoner scratched, a victim of the torridly hot weather.

Wegoner was upset by Dillon of Miami in the mile. But sophomore Ken Jarrett, who ran third, came back with a crowd pleasing half-lap kick to win the two mile.

Grads Commissioned

Two Florida State University graduates were graduated from Associate WAC Company Officers Course VI at Fort Lee, Virginia

They are Second Lieutenant Eva Lucille Ossenkop, class of 49, and Second Lieutenant Evelyn Breedlove, class of 48. Both received bachelor degrees in education while here.

FSU President Dedicates Buildings At Virginia Women's College

Doak S. Campbell, president of Florida State University, dedicated three new buildings Saturday at Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg, Virginia.

Campbell delivered the dedicatory address and paid special tribute to the president of the college, Morgan L. Combs, who guided the building program.

This women's college is part of the University of Virginia. The buildings dedicated will be used for speech, music and graphic arts.

The progress of higher education in the United States is looked upon by other countries as "phenomenal," the FSU president remarked.

HE FOCUSED attention on the revived interest in cultural or liberal education, declaring that "we must look to the humanities for the permanent values."

Reviewing events of the past century, Campbell stated that up to the 19th century the American people were interested mainly in expansion and growth. Attention to art, literature, music and philosophy faded into the background. He set the end of the first world war as the time when cultural interests began to revive.

CAMPBELL SAID the arts are going through a period of confusing change. "Music is characterized by strange and disturbing dissonances . . . the painter who receives the greatest notice is one who exhibits the strongest revolt against symmetry and beauty . . . the written and spoken word have done considerable floundering in their search for literary merit."

HE ADDED, however, that this confusion may indicate that a period of cultural maturity is about to dawn. This, says the president, presents a challenge to colleges, for they must provide the base of understanding on which development must proceed.

University Court Validates Rule; Freshmen Women Get 10:30 Limit

The ruling that first semester Freshmen women students be in their dorms by 10:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday was declared valid by University Court. The first constitutional case of the year was presided over by Chief Justice June Tate at an open meeting last Thursday night in the Senate room. The Court was testing the legality of a rule passed by Women's Senate on Oct. 29, 1952, and approved by the Faculty Review Board in November of the same year.

Senators Bobby Drake and Gene Lawler asked the Court to consider the case on two points: the rule was not signed by the President of University Government Association and it was not submitted to the University Senate, although it indirectly affected the entire student body. They further added that the President's veto power added to the system of checks and balances necessary to all governments

JUNE CONYERS, vice-president in charge of women's affairs, countered with the argument that the Constitution clearly stated that the President only had veto power over legislation passed by the University Senate. She also said that the only legislation passed by Women's Senate that could be considered by University Senate were those rules affecting both men and women that were not House Council Rules. House Council rules were defined as those rules, which if broken, would be tried by the House Councils.

FURTHER arguments were brought up which were declared irrelevent by the Court, of the Unirelevent by the Court.

"THE UNIVERSITY Court was asked to consider the question on two points: (1) the rules were passed only by Women's Senate, and they were not signed by the President of UGA. (2) The rules were not brought before the entire Senate although indirectly affecting men students as well as women.

"On the second point the University Court was of the opinion that the effect on men students was insufficient to render the rules invalid on that count.

"ON THE first point the opinion of the University Court based upon the existing Constitution of University Government Associaiton Florida State University is as follows:

"The Constitution Article III, Section 3, part b., states, 'The University Senate shall separate at the discretion of the Vice-Presidents involved into two divisions to be known as Women's Senate and Men's Senate, these divisions to handle all legislation pertaining to their respective sexes, but to submit all changes in legislation (not rules for house councils) to the University Senate for approval by majority vote when called upon to do so by majority of University Senate.'

"The phrase 'all legislation pertaining to their respective sexes' is sufficient for Women's Senate to have passed the rules

"In re the President's power over legislation, the Constitution Article II, Section 2, part e., states, 'Have the power to veto or sign acts of the University Government Association Senate, provided that he exercises such power within ten days after the passage of said act by said Senate. Said veto may be overridden by a two-thirds vote of the University Government Association Senate.'

"The rules in question were classified by the Court as house council rules, since the enforcement of them would be rendered by that branch of the judicial system. In the event of a veto by the President as provided by the aforementioned article, the rules would be sent back to the University Senate which could override the President's veto by a two thirds vote. As Article III, section 3, part b, quoted above clearly excepts house council rules from consideration by the University Senate, the University Court conceives that on the basis of the provisions of recourse in the event of a veto the Constitution does not provide for a signing or veto of house council rules by the President.

"Based upon this reasoning, the decision of the University Court is that the rules passed by Women's Senate on October 29, 1952 and approved by the Faculty Review Board in November, 1952, are valid."

Derby Cup Is Given To Gamma Phi Beta

The third Annual Sigma Chi Derby that drew 500 spectators to the Hockey Field at Florida State University last Saturday saw the Gamma Phi Beta Sorority win a trophy for massing the most points in the fun-filled derby.

The trophy awarded the Gamma Phi Beta's is a three year rotating and will be kept by any sorority that wins it three times.

TROPHIES also went to the second and third place groups, the Kappa Alpha Theta's and Kappa Deltas, respectively. Other over all winners were fourth place, Sigma Kappa; fifth place, Pi Beta Phi's.

The contest started immediately after a motorcade through campus. The first event was won by the Sigma Kappa Sorority. The event was called "Hopscotch on Wheels", and consisted of rolling a tire half the length of the field then jumping into potato sacks and hopping the last half.

THE SECOND event was the "Blind Man's Banana". This event won by the AOPi's found a pair of blind-folded girls feeding each other a banana after peeling it.

The Gamma Phi Beta's won the "Egg Put." Here, a pair of girls standing at a distance of 10 feet pitched an egg, and with each pitch, one girl moved back 10 feet. By the process of elimination, the girl remaining won

THE NEXT game was the "Nag Water". In this contest, three girls with different size straws raced across a field and took turns sipping at some water in a pop bottle. When all the water was gone, the girl holding the bottle raced back. The winner oft his relay was Alpha Chi Omega.

A clothes race was called "Haber Dashers' Delight". Girls received a suitcase full of clothes, dressed, raced across the field and undressed, then returned the suitcase filled with the clothes to the next girl in the relay. The Tri Delts won this.

IN THE "Shoo Fly Pie." girls with their hands tied behind their backs attempted to eat chocolate meringue pies. The KD's were the victors in this pie eating contest.

The last contest was the "Mystery." Keys with the name of each sorority on each key were put in a box full of flour. The girls had to go through all the keys in the flour till they found the one with their sorority on it. It was during this contest that Bob Ducker, announcer, got a fist full of flour in his face from an excited contestant.

EACH ENTERING sorority received a trophy. There were also drawings held to distribute door prizes donated by town merchants.

Sigma Chi Derbies are held over the nation and are paid for by the chapters themselves for the entertainment of the students; there is no charge.

Next year, the Derby will be held in the fall rather than in the spring. Mac Huey and Merril Moore were this year's co-chairman of the affair, and Bob Ducker was the announcer.

Chairman Explains Ceramics Exhibition

Ivan Johnson, head of the Florida State University arts education department, has announced the opening of a Contemporary American Ceramics exhibit for a month's showing in the university art gallery.

Open to the public without charge, the exhibit features selections from the 17th Ceramic National, a showing sponsored biennially by the Syracuse Museum of Fine Arts.

JOHNSON'S DEPARTMENT has one show a year in the gallery; these demonstrations of ceramic and enameling-on-metal techniques are a representation of current work being done in crafts with a wide audience appeal

The exhibit shows a trend towards proper use of highly flexible and unlimited materials. A variety of subject matter, materials and design is shown in figures, bowls, plates, bottles, vases, spheres, panels, murals, miniature portraits and works of a mobile type.

INCLUDED in the exhibit are national prize winners and objects receiving honorable mention. These include ebony horse with blue-green incised design, a terra cotta and iron horse, a mosaic blue plate with intricate design and an earthenware fruit bowl.

William Watson, FSU associate professor of ceramics in arts education, has entered works in this Syracuse national showing in previous years.

Founded in 1932, the National Ceramic Exhibition was invited to Scandinavian countries and to England in 1937. The foreign exhibition circuit was financed by the Rockefeller Foundation in recognition of the international significance of showing all-American ceramic work abroad.

Art Dept. Says Cartooning Course May Begin in Fall

A course in cartooning is being planned by the department of art for next September, announced Prof. William Boughton. "It is safer to use the word 'tentative,'" Boughton said, "as it will depend on the number of students enrolling for it in the fall." However, many students have asked about such a course as it seems to fall right in line with those interested in commercial art, either as a hobby or as a career.

"Formerly," explained Professor Boughton, "cartooning was considered a poor form of art, but today it is not only one of the most respected professions, but also one of the most lucrative."

This course will add three more hours of commercial art training in the already expanding department of art. Other courses in this division are general commerical art courses, a course in the graphic arts of Silk Screen printing and advertising art.

"Although no prerequisites have been established," Boughton explained, it is advisable for the student to have a knowledge of figure drawing which will help him in the over-all effectiveness of his work."

As Radar Officer, is master of a new science and operator of the device that sees beyond human sight!

As Aircraft Performance Engineer Officer, is the one who "keeps the plane flying", the man who knows his plane inside and out, who keeps it fit for the skies and sees that it stays there!

If YOU can accept a challenge like this, you'll take your place beside the best—you'll find your future in the clouds!

TO BE QUALIFIED you must be single, a citizen, between 19 and 26½ years old, have had at least 2 years of college and be in tip top physical shape. If this describes you, then YOU, too, can qualify. Today!

Federal Group Includes FSU On Cost of Education Studies

The United States Department of education, in a move aimed at the rising cost of higher education, has sent out questionnaires to 100 colleges including Florida State The school, in cooperating with the government, will send the polls to about 400 FSU students picked at random.

The nation-wide study of the costs students incur during college is comprised of a random sampling of 35,000 full-time undergraduates The study at FSU is under the direction of W. Hugh Stickler, who called it "very meaningful."

The survey also has the support of President Campbell who "strongly urged" that the 400 students cooperate, because of its importance.

The extensive, three page questionnaire, contains four categories: academic background, expenditures, sources of funds and family income. Under students expenditures are such items as room rent, clothing, church contributions and fraternity and sorority dues

Co-ordinator Stickler, reported that the survey is very important to education in the United States "Parents, federal government, teachers, colleges and students themselves" said Stickler, "have expressed concern over the pyramiding costs" facing college students. "These groups feel that because a college education is so expensive many can not go who should."

He added: "it's about time we know what it really costs."

The questionnaire will be sent out today and the students will have until next Friday to complete them.

Specifically, the U. S office of Education is examining the patterns of student expenses and the sources of funds to meet these expenses They are also giving special attention to the relation of family income to decisions regarding college attendance.

Commenting on the questions about family income, Stickler assured the students, that the information would be "confidential" The findings will be sent direct to Washington.

Senate Opens Debate On Proposed Charter

Concerted effort to obtain a Charter for FSU's student government got under way this week with the opening of formal debate in University Senate The already much-discussed proposal is to obtain a grant of power from the Board of Control or possibly from the State Legislature

As outlined by Gene Lawler chairman of the Senate Constitutional Committee, the timetable would run something like this: first the University Senate will approve the proposed document, which will then be delivered to President Campbell for discussion by the University Executive Council and submission to the State Board of Control. The Student Body would have an opportunity to ratify the document probably sometime early next fall, if all goes well.

LAWLER TOLD the Senate that President Campbell, in an interview this Monday, had given assurance of favorable consideration of complete student control of the entire Student Activity Fee one of the provisions of the proposed Charter. Other important provisions, according to the Senator, were greater freedom for the Student Senate, definite powers for the student courts, freedom of expression for the student publications and a functioning student government for the Summer Session.

The charter presented had been approved by the Senate Constitutional Revision Committee Most major differences between the charter and the present student Constitution were found in the articles on Finance Judiciary and Summer Government.

ACTION TAKEN by Senate so far has included approval at the Tuesday meeting of Article I: the name, jurisdiction, franchise and purposes of the Student Body; Article II: the Legislature and Article III: the Executive Action taken at the special called meeting of Senate Wednesday included approval of Article V, Summer Government, and Article VI: Class Organizations. The Senate had already endorsed the plan of Article VII: Finance, giving the Senate complete power over the Student Activity Fee, but the exact wording has yet to be approved

The most discussion was caused by the proposed Article IV: Judiciary, which would have made constitutional provision only for Honor Court and left the other courts to be set up by Statute. A Clerk of the Honor Court was also provided for, which aroused considerable discussion, with June Tate, retiring Chief Justice, participating

THE COURT PROBLEM was referred to a special committee, which was to have met last night, composed of Senator Lawler, chairman, with Senatore Bobby Drake, Terry Stein and Barbara Thomas, Chief Justice June Tate, Chief Justice-elect Richard Jackson, Chairman-elect of Judiciary Yvonne McCarthy and Women's Vice-President June Conyers.

Senate will convene again next Tuesday for the last regular meeting of the 1852-53 Senate to put the final approval on the charter

Not connected with the charter but of special interest to students, was a resolution presented by June Conyers, women's vice-president. This resolution, which recommends the addition of the Presidents of the Senior and Junior classes and the Secretaries of the Sophomore and Freshman classes to the Artist Series Committee was passed unanimously. Formerly, only the Men's and Women's Vice-Presidents served on this faculty student committee, which is appointed by President Campbell. It was hoped that the addition of the four class officers would insure better student representation.

Final Vote Decides Four Class Offices

Candidates for all but four of the Class elections offices took decisive tallies that make them next year's leaders in the Tuesday Class Elections primary.

This makes a final election Tuesday necessary

NEARLY 1,200 Florida Staters went out to the polls Tuesday, according to election returns. Freshmen votes for their next year's sophomore officers tallied some 460 strong: Sophomores electing their next year's Junior class officers were almost 375, and Juniors choosing their next year's Senior officers were over 320 in number. The 1 200-vote figure includes this year's seniors votes for constitutional amendments, court and judiciary members.

TUESDAY'S RUN-OFF ballot, said Paul Soraparu, UGA secretary of elections, will include the names of candidates vying a second time for four offices.

For Senior veep, Tuesday's final ballot will name Charles McDaniel and Betty Whitmire McDaniel got 118 and Whitmire 103 in the primaries

RUNNING AGAIN for junior class treasurer will be Harry Massey, who received 145, and Donn Teal who gleaned 96 Tuesday. Massey is a Student Party candidate

Another close race coming up Tuesday will be for Sophomore Veep between finalists Mary

Glee Club Plans Last Performance Next Wednesday

The Annual Spring Concert of the Collegians, men's glee club, will be held next Wednesday night in the Opperman Music Hall. Presentation of ID cards will secure admission.

In preparation, the glee club serenaded dorms and sang at the Speaker's Ball in the Suwannee Room last night.

"FROM NOW ON," explained Director J. Dayton Smith, "the Spring concert will be the only Collegians concert on the FSU campus. Our Christmas concert will be discontinued in favor of an annual tour through the state."

The glee club, known throughout the south for their Spring concert in which novelty songs and humorous parodies compose the majority of the program will present this year "Tchaikowsky," the novelty tune made famous by Danny Kaye; "Pore Jud" and "Kansas City" from the hit musical, "Oklahoma", "Play that Barbershop Chord," and such old standards as "Let My People Go" and "Yesterdays."

"WE PLAN to include, said Pres. Jack Watkins, many of the songs that received acclaim when we serenaded." Among these is "It's A Grand Night For Singing" "It's a Big Wide Wonderful World," and "St Louis Blues." As is the custom of the group, "The Hymn to the Garnet and the Gold" written by Choral leader Smith will also be sung

Associate Professor Returns from Clinic

Dean Johnson, of Marriage Counseling Service and Associate Professor of Social Work in Florida State University's School of Social Welfare, has returned to FSU after an eight weeks leave spent in Omaha, Nebraska

He was invited to Omaha by a medical group to study the operation of its clinic, and to serve as a consultant working cooperatively with the doctors.

Enthusiastic after the experience he thinks there is a definite need for a joint type of public service in which physicians and marriage counselors work together.

Johnson was on leave in 1851 from FSU for specialized study and an internship in counseling at the well-known Menninger Psychiatric Clinic in Topeka Kansas.

Since the spring of 1949 when Johnson came to FSU he and the staff of the marriage counseling service at the University have provided counseling for several hundreds of persons in the marital and pre-marital fields

Government Seeks Additional Powers

At one time or another, anyone who has thought deeply about student government is distressed by the seeming futility of it all. The Flambeau itself has given no little space to this sort of discouragement.

The principal theme of these outcries has been that student government simply has no real authority to handle its problems. Any measure of importance has had to go through a review board set up by the same administration which grants power to student government. All too often new legislation has not been able to survive the ordeal.

The growth of political responsibility at this university thus hangs precariously on the hope that students can obtain the machinery to put the ideal into practice.

To obtain this goal of responsibility, student government is taking the big step of seeking a charter from the State of Florida. It hopes thus to have its power granted by a body superior to the university, a body not subjected to direct pressures on campus.

The charter is not a brand new idea here, of course. Many students have been looking with a jealous eye at the charter granted to the University of Florida by the State Board of Control, and one of the planks in the campaign of present UGA President Mary Ruth Summers was to work for a charter.

President Summers, assisted by Bob Ryals, Bill Dunn, Gene Lawler and many others, has worked diligently toward fulfilling her promise.

The charter has four main points. It grants students control over the disbursement of the activity fee. It assures the student senate reasonable freedom from the Review Board, defines definite powers for the student courts, and promises freedom of expression in the student publications.

Student government officials have visited the attorney of the Board of Control, Attorney General Ervin and several other state officials for consultation in the matter. They were encouraged to believe Florida State could get anything the U. of F. has in regards to a charter.

A week ago today, and again last Monday, President Summers and other representatives of student government consulted with University President Campbell. Campbell said he saw no objections to placing the activity fee under student control. He said he was in favor of greater freedom for the Senate, although he said the administration cannot abrogate its review rights.

Campbell promised to send the charter to the Council of Deans as soon as the document was presented in its final form. He agreed to call a special meeting of the body if necessary, and to present to the Board of Control anything requiring the latter's approval.

Students are anxious to put the new plan into operation, however. If the special Senate-Court committee studying the charter last night had success, the Senate should approve the last sections on Tuesday.

There is fear that delaying tactics will pigeon-hole the charter indefinitely, and real thought is being given to the possibility of submitting the plan directly to the state legislature.

Student government feels further progress is impossible without additional powers.

● GOALS PRACTICAL

By DAISY PARKER

The heading, "Goals Ideal", which the Editor assigned to a guest editorial on the Honor System submitted to the Flambeau two weeks ago prompts this second one, "Goals Practical."

FSU student generation after student generation wail, "What can we do to make the Honor System work? We may and we can get students to accept the ideal; but what can we do to make the ideal practical?" Our answer is always the same; and we still insist that it has not yet really been followed.

First, the Honor Code should be explicitly but succinctly stated. Second, the Honor System should not be "overloaded;" it should be concerned with those offenses which are clearly "dishonorable." Petty administrative regulations should not be part of the Honor Code. Third, every student and every faculty member should be given opportunity after opportunity to know the actual machinery and functioning of the Honor System. Fourth, students must accept it as their duty to protect the Honor System; it is their moral energy that must be expended to make and preserve the Honor System, however great faculty inspiration and guidance may be. Fifth, it seems almost too obvious to say that the violations of the Honor Code must be handled promptly, uniformly, impartially and impersonally.

It is most assuredly true that the Honor System is more nearly a spirit than a code. The spirit, however, must built on and backed up by a code carefully and fairly achieved, painstakingly worded, conscientiously administered and zealously defended.

● INDEPENDENT EDUCATION

The recent decision to remove the Stetson Law School from DeLand to a larger city sharply defines one of the most critical problems in our educational system today.

This problem involves the difficulty privately-owned institutions of higher learning are having in their struggle for survival.

Stetson, a typical private university, can ill afford this loss of its Law School—for that is virtually what its removal entails. The Stetson Law School was the backbone of the university. It was long recognized as one of the foremost in the South. With its removal to Jacksonville or Tampa, Stetson is certain to suffer.

The regression of the Stetson Law School—and the regression of many independent schools—may be largely attributed to its inability to compete financially with state-supported schools for the services of professors.

This dilemma faces innumerable independent colleges and universities. And it is a dilemma that is also of vital importance to the students of such state-financed institutions as Florida State University.

For the only recourse open to these independent institutions, in the event endowments from individual benefactors are not sufficient to maintain them, is reliance upon federal funds for support. This would jeopardize the independent liberal education system that has been of such enormous importance in our country's political and cultural development.

The decrease in these endowments may be traced to the pressure exerted by the government through graduated taxation against the wealthy philanthropists who provided them.

The threatened decline of these institutions should encourage resistance in state schools to any movements toward standardization and regimentation of the academic curriculum. We must preserve the essence, if not the substance, of the independent educational system.

ADDED READINGS SPICE DRAMA PROGRAM

BY BRUCE GALPHIN

The main fault of this year's speech department productions is that there have been too few of them.

When the roses are handed out around campus for excellence of achievement, the speech department's dramatics division certainly deserves an armful. The polish and vigor of this year's plays are testimony enough that the direction has been inspired, the actors enthusiastic. People who have attended these performances have been treated to as nearly professional work as could be hoped for on a college campus.

But there is a very small limit to the number of productions which can be staged during a semester. The cast and crew of The Taming of the Shrew spent something like two months preparing for the excellent end product.

This paucity of performances is unfortunate, because plays are not simply two or three-hour diversions for audiences; they can be works of art that rank at least as highly as other forms of literature; they can be poigant commentaries on society, and they unquestionably enrich a person's general cultural background.

It is therefore reasonable for a liberal arts college to present a full program of drama as a part of students' well rounded educations. But again comes the practical objection that it just can't be done.

A program of readings, however, is a solution which has many people excited. Readings are not new on this campus, of course, but the recent presentation of The Lady's Not for Burning has given considerable impetus to the cause.

Director Allan Thomson of the English department, together with some top-flight faculty and student theater veterans, proved conclusively that the Christopher Fry masterpiece loses little punch without full staging.

It can be argued, of course, that the cards were stacked in favor of this particular reading, i. e., that the cast was particularly experienced and that the play itself better than others to reading. No doubt there are certain plays which do not lend themselves well to the reading technique, but there certainly is a wealth of those which do.

And the point is that the performance was arranged in something less than two weeks. It certainly is not improbable that two readings a month could be given should the speech department undertake such a program.

The advantages of a readings program are definitely numerous. As mentioned before, it would give students a rare opportunity to acquaint themselves with the best in drama. For participating students, it would offer much more. In the first place, more people could participate than can at present under the system of major productions only. Student actors could get the "feel" of plays by working with veterans, and if the readings were done as part of class work, students could surely get as much experience as they do at present under certain other speech courses.

Perhaps I speak on a subject wherein I know far too little to assume such authority, but I think the readings idea is so full of potentialities that it should be fully explored and certainly not forgotten.

LET'S FACE IT

INNOCENT GROUPS DESTROY CIVIL LIBERTIES

By GENE LAWLER

One of the alarming things about our American society today is the accelerating disintegration of our standards of freedom of expression and opinion. Attempts at repression are made against nearly every unpopular idea of unconventional activity, and techniques formerly regarded with abhorrence by most Americans have become accepted in the campaign against free speech and independent thought.

Much has been said about the anti-Communist hysteria generated and exploited by men like McCarthy, Jenner, and Velde. Perhaps their success lies to some extent in the fact that the U. S. is today a garrison state, fearful of enemies from within and without.

There is no alibi, however, for the destruction of our civil liberties done by well-meaning religious and fraternal groups. Elmer Rice, who is a playwright, novelist, stage director, and chairman of the National Council on Freedom from Censorship, a subsidiary of the American Civil Liberties Union, recently cited numerous examples of damage done by supposedly public-spirited citizens just in the field of entertainment: the theater, radio-television, and movies.

For example, to quote Mr. Rice: "Page one of the New York Times, for March 5, shows a photograph of members of the Hotel and Club Employees Union, picketing the Vanderbilt Theatre because Midsummer which is playing there, contains an unsightly chambermaid. In response to this demonstration, the play's program now contains this note: 'The character Rosie is intended to bear no resemblance to actual hotel maids of the present day. The producers recognize the fact that the 7,000 maids who are members of the Hotel and Employees Union, Local 6, New York, are industrious and able.' The same Times story tells of a protest by Thomas L. Sidlo, as chairman of the committee on public relations, of the American Bar Association, against 'certain lines disparaging of lawyers or the legal profession' in Arthur Miller's current play, The Crucible. The lawyers whom the play disparages were participants in the Salem witch trials of 1692. . ."

Several years ago, Broadway got a laugh out of the attempts of apple growers to censor a play in which a character detected traces of arsenic spray on an apple he was eating. In view of the above examples, however, such a report would cause no laughter today.

Other cases are too numerous to compile: "In Peoria, the American Legion attempted to prevent the showing of Arthur Miller's celebrated Death of a Salesman, for the reason that the author was listed in Red Channels. . . . Local units of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have prevented performances of a musical version of Uncle Tom's Cabin. Margaret Webster had to withdraw The Merchant of Venice from her projected repertory because of threats of Jewish campus groups to boycott the entire program.

"Providence, R. I., because of Roman Catholic influence, recently refused to license Tobacco Road (which ran for seven years in New York and toured the nation for at least ten.) When the producer defied the ban and obtained a court injunction, he was promptly indicted for presenting an immoral exhibition. In Chicago, the police, by threats of license revocation, barred Sartre's The Respectful Prostitute. . . For two years or more, Jewish organizations prevented the exhibition of the film version of Oliver Twist in this country."

Perhaps it is time we stopped having the jitters about every breath of adverse doctrine or criticism. It might be better for us to recover our courage and sense of humor and to rediscover the practice of free and unlimited expression before it is too late.

MOVIE NEWS

Comedy Team Appears Next

By AL PIERCE

The riotous comedy team, Martin and Lewis, cavort through their latest film hit, "The Stooge," running till Tuesday, May 19. The laugh-fested "Stooge" is packed with sober reflection and a bevy of yesteryears song hits. Highlighting the show's musical theme is Jerry Lewis' side-splitting take-off on Maurice Chevalier singing "Louise."

The "Stooge" tells the moving story of the ambitions and heartbreak of Dean Martin, a song and dance man with show-business in his blood. Martin thinks he can build his career on his own ability while Jerry Lewis, the Stooge, is the unappreciated half of the act who is forced to take a back seat to the reflected glory of his partner.

NOT UNTIL Martin is made to realize that Jerry plays an important role in the team does the plot come to its climax.

OPENING NEXT Wednesday and continuing through Saturday, May 30, at the State is "Thunder in the East." Combining hard-hitting adventure with a top-flight cast, "Thunder In The East" stars "love-'em, slug 'em" Alan Ladd in his characteristic role of the two-fisted adventurer who alternately finds himself in the midst of a broiling conflict and then in love with the film's heroine.

Con-starring with Ladd are Charles Boyer and not one but two beautiful, exciting women, Corrine Calvet and Deborah Kerr.

THE STIRRING story of love and violence is set against the background of a revolt-ridden Indian province. Ladd is again, as in so many roles before, the soldier of fortune who flies a plane loaded with munitions into the revolt-torn province with the idea of making a quick profit. But, when a high government official, powerfully portrayed by Charles Boyer, refuses the shipment because of his belief that the only way to fight violence is by peaceful means, our hero finds himself involved in the midst of the raging conflict.

Ladd first has a heart-warming love affair with beautiful Deborah Kerr who plays a blind English girl caught up in the tides of revolution. She cuts the affair short upon learning that Ladd's interests in the stricken area are motivated by his mercenary endeavors, and he turns to seductive Corrine Calvet for consolation.

HELPING EVOLVE the plot to its exciting, suspense-filled climax are such screen notables as Cecil Kellaway, Mark Cavell, John Abbott and Philip Bourneuf. Also, John Williams, Charley Lung, Leonard Carey and Nelson Welch.

This is screen entertainment of the highest degree—and speaks for the talents of Director Charles Vidor.

"TONIGHT WE Sing," a screen extravaganza filled with great names in the operatic world, comes to the Florida Theater Sunday following this week's showing of "Come Back Little Sheba."

"Tonight We Sing" is based on the career of Sol Hurok, the Russian-born immigrant who became the world's foremost concert impresario. The melodious cavalcade of unforgettable music combines the talents of Ezio Pinza as the great Feodor Chaliapin, Tamara Toumanova as the incomparable Anna Pavlova, Isaac Stern as violinist Eugene Ysaye. Also, Roberta Peters, Anne Bancroft, Byron Palmer, David Wayne as Hurok, and the voice of Jan Peerce.

AGAINST THE background of such famous operas as "La Traviata" and "Faust," the movie blends the warm story of the Huroks and the lilting story of a young operatic star's romance. United in song are the voice of Jan Peerce, Roberta Peters, newcomer to the Metropolitan, and Byron Palmer, another new operatic star, who scored successes in Ray Bolger's stage hit "Where's Charley?"

Directed by Mitchell Leisen, "Tonight We Sing" comes forth as a multi-million-dollar production of musical and dancing talent well-worth seeing.

Former FSU Student Is Finishing Training

The Fleet Home Town, Naval news center, reports that Mack Watson, a Florida State University graduate, is completing carrier pilot qualifications on board the small aircraft carrier USS Monterrey in the Gulf of Mexico.

Watson, who entered the Naval Aviation Cadet program upon graduation, has completed a schedule in military, academic, physical and flight training. He is now ready for a four months course in combat type aircraft, the final step to the Navy "Wings of Gold."

Scholarship Offered To Woman Student

Miss Katherine Warren, Dean of Women, has announced that the Jacksonville Panhellic Association has plans to offer a scholarship to some Florida State University Junior or Senior woman from Duval County who might need financial aid to finish her college work.

The amount of the scholarship would be $500 each year, $300 a loan and $200 a gift. There would be no interest on the loan.

Dean Warren received this information from Mrs. McCarthy Crenshaw, 3855 St. Johns Avenue, Jacksonville 5, Florida.

Mr. Glover Tully, Director of Vocational Guidance and Placement, has all the information pertaining to this scholarship.

Letters To The Editor. . . .

Caesar Continues

Dear Students:

This is the second in a series of "Letters to the Editor" by Wayne Terry, Vice President of Men's Affairs, in reply to the recently published articles entitled "Caesar Criticized" and "Caesar Investigated." These statements have been written and presented in compliance with the Flambeau's policy of placing a two hundred and fifty word maximum on each letter appearing in the paper at a given time.

The following constitute the major facts behind the accusations embodied in the declarations attacking "Caesar":

1. I did take it upon myself as a member, delegate, and elected candidate of the Student Party to contact one Hans Tews of the Freshman Hall for the purpose of determining whether or not he was definitely planning to seek the party nomination for a class office.

2. I did suggest to him that if he was a prospective office seeker for a position on the Student Party ticket that it would be advisable, in fairness to numerous other candidates, for him to either consider resigning as a voting delegate, or assume the status of an alternate delegate. Final action on the matter being left to the discretion of the Governor of the Freshman Hall.

3. I did incorporate the words "Board of Directors" in the note card left for Hans. However, it was most certainly not written with the intention of conveying the impression that this individual was attempting to employ high pressure techniques. It was so presented as to, under any ordinary circumstances, cause the receiver to consider it as a wholesale jest.

4. I did include the telephone number of the Magnolia Hall pay phone as a source for contacting me, a representative of the Student Pary, if any further details or explanations were desired by the receiver in regards to the prescribed note. Any impressions or findings other than these were assumed without due basis by the individuals in question. Perhaps they were mere figments of the imagination?

"Caesar's" third installment will attempt to uncover the primary fallacies contained in the "Brutus Oration" that were instigated to assure the fall of the alleged Roman Empire.

Sincerely,
Wayne Terry

Methods Criticized

Dear Editor:

We feel that a great injustice has been done to the supporters of at least one of the candidates for class office. This candidate was running for one of the multiple offices, and "lost" by a slight margin of votes. When a recount of the votes was requested, a spokesman for the Elections Committee replied that there would be no recount in this particular race. When asked how many ballots were cast by this particular class, he replied that the ballots had not been counted, and that they did not intend to count them.

Without the knowledge of the total number of ballots cast, how could this committee know definitely that any of the candidates had a simple majority? It is our understanding that the Elections Committee decided on their rules of procedure after the votes had been counted!

What is to be lost by spending a few minutes extra (to recount the votes) for the ascertainment of a fair deal for everyone? Is there something that someone is trying to hide? Is the Elections Committee so naive as to believe that groups of human beings are infallible?

Thus, with these, our opinions, suspicions, and criticism in mind, we would appreciate it if the Elections Committee would reconsider their methods and judgment in this election.

It has been our experience in the past few weeks that one can receive recognition in his protests against such irregularities as this only by bringing these things to the attention of the students-at-large. Therefore it is with much regret that we must resort to writing this letter.

Sincerely,
Bruce W. Fletcher,
Wallace Norton.

Thanks

Dear Freshmen:

I hereby would like to express my thanks and gratitude for the support you gave me during the past election. Indeed, I am very grateful to you, my freshmen classmates. I also would like to thank Coyle Moore, Jimmy Joanos, Gordon Gaster, and Herbert Lacayo for the clean and fair campaign they waged against me. I am certain that Gordon, Coyle, and Jim are well qualified and also were well chosen by you. I further would like to express my hope that they will be able to be of help to you and fulfill all the things that are expected of them. Again my hearty thanks for your support and my best wishes and congratulations to Jim, Coyle and Gordon.

Sincerely yours,
Hans W. Tews.

DREAM DORM COMPLETED

New Men's Dormitory Finished With Snack Bar and Sun Decks

By JAYLEEN ROBERTSON
Assistant Feature Editor

Over 435,000 bricks, 11 stories high, 282 rooms, lounges, snack bars, elevators, sun deck, bicycle garage and every Joe College's dream come true . . . That is the new men's dormitory just recently completed at an approximated cost of $1,400,000.

NEVER AGAIN will FSU be referred to by young men seeking the college of their choice, as "the college with temporary housing in barracks for men." In the past 7 years since FSU has been co-ed, there has been an acute problem of housing for men. This year, however, the boys can say goodbye to West Campus and hail the modern age in their new streamlined dorm—(it even has round porthole windows with square panes, if you can figure it out).

EACH room accommodate two boys and altogether will house 564. Last year this time there were already 133 room applications by men attending FSU in the Fall. This year so far, 288 have applied, perhaps indicating that the number of men on campus will continue its steady increase as it has in the past 7 years. In 1946, there were 350 men enrolled at FSU and at present there are more than 3,000.

THE NEW dorm is out of this world, or at least one feels he is when on the roof overlooking all of Tallahassee. John Blackburn, counsellor for the dorm, says that next year they will probably be holding dances on the sundeck. There is a library room for study also located on the roof.

THE elevators run on a "jump stop" principle, in that they will stop only at administrative unit floors—floors 3, 6, and 9. This will only require walking one flight of stairs up or down to reach any floor in the building. Each administrative unit has a large lounge, although there are lounges on every floor, though somewhat smaller. Offices, and counselors' rooms are located on these floors, plus the regular rooms for men students.

The snack bar, located on the main floor, is something unique in a dormitory. It features a built-in band stand, a huge fountain in the center of the room, and striking murals with a modern flavor painted by FSU's art department. The snack bar will be a soda fountain and lunch counter combined. No hot meals will be served, but sandwiches and coffee will be a standby the boys will welcome having.

Circulated ice-water fountains are well distributed throughout the building. The building itself is cool due to its construction, ventilation, and design.

EACH room has a fair-sized closet and a half closet over a chest of drawers for suits. There is a wash basin and mirror in each room and the beds are something new—designed for the best sleeping and comfort with foam rubber mattresses. One bed is built over a number of built-in shelves with a step-board that folds out into an extra writing desk. A huge double desk and a small round table that has swinging compartments, which make it a clothes hamper as well as a table, are two other luxury items.

A bicycle garage in the basement, with ramps leading to it from the outside will be an encouragement for bike transportation to and from the central campus.

THIS IS the second modern building to be built in FSU's rapidly expanding campus under the 50-year program. The boys have been getting the rewards thus far, but with the Geology building already under construction, and the others planned for next year, it won't be long before the girls, too, will have a new skyscraper to brag about.

SPEAKING OF girls, there have been some 150 students, girls and boys in Tallahassee from other cities for the "Know your Government" trips being sponsored throughout the state while the legislature is in session. They have been staying at the new dorm and were its first occupants. The dorm will be open to students this Fall.

Sports Chatter

Racqueteers, we love you!

Just as clouds covered the sun of the sports world at SU. just as our baseball and golf teams were finishing ather mediocre season, and our almost invincible track m was being clobbered at the hands of the Hurricanes, reak appears in the overcast.

hat's right, another record. Another high mark for teams of the future to shoot at while the present squad mbers are saying, "Now I remember when . . .".

he main thing that makes this ray of sunshine burn brightly is the fact that only one member of this year's m will be lost in June. Dan Boda, a Tallahassee boy, get his sheepskin, while the rest of the team will be k shooting at their own record. The squad has only junior, Jack Egan. All the rest are either freshmen or phomores.

In the past season Boda was something of a mild sensa-n, racking up 16 wins against only 1 loss. The only ver that came close to his record was sophomore Dave nnedy, with 15 wins and 2 losses.

In their last meet with Florida Southern, who, inciden-y, were Dixie conference champs, the Seminole netters ndly trounced them, 9-0. FSU was bounced from the ie conference for giving athletic scholarships. The an's two losses came at the hands of Rollins, former ional champs, and LSU, Southeastern Conference run-r-ups.

The fact that the last meet of the track team in Hatties-rg is to be played at night should be a decided advantage Coach Miller's boys. For the meet with Southern, his m will be somewhat short, as he is taking only 13 men the trip. A small squad is much more susceptible to t fatigue than a large one, so the night meet looks like Godsend.

Evidently, the Miami sun was too strong for them on last meet. Or was it sun? Anyway, they lost a match rted with the Seminoles in a slump, and when they ally started clicking, it was too late. 1-point losses are ays hard to take, especially after you've just gained trol of a situation. Too bad they can't go down on the ord books as half-losses.

If the Garnet and Gold basketball game is a preview of at's to come next fall, Jerry Oler will be giving Ham Wernke a run for his record. In the game Wednesday ght, Oler scored one more point than Wernke, which is usual, to say the least.

Wernke, however, with 10 points, doesn't seem to be in serious slump. Could be we've got two big guns instead one on the team.

Track Team Meets Southern Saturday

The Florida State University trackmen close out their dual cinder season Saturday night in Hattiesburg, Miss., when they go against Mississippi Southern in a meet that will mark the first track encounter between the two schools.

Nipped by a single point by strong Miami last week, Coach Ken Miller's Seminoles will be looking for their fourth win of the campaign against Southern, a comparative newcomer to Dixie track circles.

THE INDIANS opened with a rush this year, bowling over Mercer in a dual affair and Georgia and Georgia Tech in a triangular meet before losing to Loyola and last week Miami.

However, despite the fact that the Mississippians are engaging in their first full season of track activity since the war, Miller says that he expects an interesting and close meet with the Southerners.

MILLER POINTS to the fact that he will be leaving behind two of his biggest point-getters, ace quarter-miler Woody Parker and star distance man Bill Wagoner in addition to consistent point-men Tom Sebring and Jack Kulzer.

Miller said that he was purposely holding out Parker, a Seminole workhorse all year, to rest him for the Georgia AAU meet next week, while Wagoner has quit the squad. Sebring and Kulzer are staying behind to make up school work.

SOUTHERN, the same outfit that gave the Seminoles so much trouble on the gridiron this past Fall, was roundly trounced by Miami in their first meet of the season.

Swimming Meet Taken By Delts

Delta Tau Delta snared the intramural swimming crown Wednesday night to take the lead in overall points for the all-intramural Balfour trophy. Sigma Chi ran a close second, running neck and neck with the victors until the final event.

Mead of Lambda Chi came in ahead of Phi Delta Theta's Long to take the 50 yard free style event. The 50 yard backstroke was won by Valentine of Sigma Chi, with PDT splashers coming in second and third.

The Phi Deltas rallied for the 50 yard breast stroke, with their boy Long taking first and leaving second to Eddy of Sigma Chi. PDT also took the 200 yard free-style relay, with Sigma Chi as the only real competition. PDT swimmers were Abner, Stokesberry, Sistrunk and Lone.

Kappa Alpha entered the race for diving competition, with Royster taking first place with a booming 118.5 points. Fadigan and James, both Phi Delts, were second and third, with 91.5 and 81.2.

Sigma Chi placed first in the 150-yard medley relay, with Theta Chi coming in second. Sigma Chis swimmers were Valentine, Eddy, and Haskins.

Total points for the meet were:

With The Majors

BY HAL LE VAY

A COUPLE OF QUICK ONES

Couple of years ago a Chicago radio announcer interviewed Rogers Hornsby. The greatest right-handed hitter of the sport had just completed a season in the Texas League. The announcer gushed with flattery for J. Alvin Gardner, the elderly president of the league.

"What an inspiration Mr. Gardner is," panted the announcer with an excited reverence. "He's the grand old man of Texas baseball . . . the most beloved man in the Lone Star State. To know him is to love him. I suppose you love him as much as all of us do, Rogers."

"I know him," Hornsby replied, "and I don't like him."

The announcer changed the subject.

Every time I read about Clint Courtney being a bustling ball player I remember what George Selkirk said. The old Yankee outfielder managed Kansas City and Courtney was his catcher.

"I like fighting ball players," Selkirk said, "but this guy fights with his own team more than he does with the other guys."

Baseball people are mystified by Ford Frick's recent tirade against gambling. Best explanation is that the players coming to Cincinnati have been hanging around the gambling joints, a short cab ride across the bridge in Newport and Covington, Kentucky.

The old pitcher, Frank Gabler, who is now an umpire in the California League, recently described the first time he reported to the New York Giants in Pensacola, Florida. Gabler was in uniform but he was dissatisfied with the terms of his contract.

"Is this a major league salary?" he asked Bill Terry, who was the Giant manager.

"Are you a big league pitcher?" demanded Terry.

The young pitcher rubbed his hand across the letters of his blouse.

"I got a big league uniform on," Gabler said.

"That uniform fits a lot of guys," Terry replied.

Gabler didn't hesitate.

"Give me the contract," he said.

Augie Galan, handsome Oakland manager, who has all the qualifications for a model husband except a wife, explains his bachelorhood at 41 this way:

"I guess too much night baseball has ruined my social life. All I ever meet is umpires."

AF Takes Swim Meet from Nagy A.

The Air Force meteorology students and Nagy Hall splashed it out at the women's gym Wednesday night for the dormitory swimming championship. The Air Force won, 58-57.

As they were the only two teams competing, the losing team was assured of second place, but the match was still close. By taking the swimming meet, the Air Force is now on top in overall points for the dormitory trophy with 570 points. The Trojans are second with 508.

In the diving event, DeWitt of the Air Force took first place, with Mallnow and Stafford, both of Nagy Hall, coming in second and third.

The Air Force took first place in the 50-yard free style and the 50-yard breast stroke, with Joern and Comstock doing them in 27.2 and 30.4 seconds.

Nagy Hall took first in the 200-yard free style relay with a timing of 2 minutes, 2.7 seconds. Their swimmers were Mallnow, Stafford, Hibbard and Reynolds. Reynolds also took first in the 50-yard backstroke in 34.7 seconds.

Joern, Comstock and DeWitt took first place for the Air Force in the 150 medley relay in 1 minute, 39.2 seconds.

The dormitory tennis and golf tourney starts Monday, May 18.

Vollyballers Return From NIC Tourney in Nebraska

The Seminole volleyball team returned Monday from a 9-day jaunt in which they competed in two tournaments, the national intercollegiate and the national open.

In the national intercollegiate the Seminoles placed fifth, being led by UCLA, Earlham, George Williams, and Waseda, in that order. They defeated Iowa State 15-0 and 15-3 to secure this berth.

THE INDIANS fared slightly worse in the national open. The major contestants in the open were pro and semi-pro teams from the west coast. Most of the matches they played were fairly close, however.

Howard Gould made 1st team All-American in the National intercollegiate meet. He set new school records for many areas, breaking the record held last year by team mate Ronald Hambrock of 367 points in 103 games. This year, Gould made 381 points in 78 games. Dick Bagge, with 115 total points this year, made second team All-American.

IRONICALLY ENOUGH, Gould has made more errors this year than his team mates. He erased his last year's mark of 242 errors for a 244 error mark this year. He also erased Hambrock's old mark of 136 total points for a season by racking up 144 points during the past season.

The volleyballers have competed in 5 tournaments this year, placing near the top in all of them. They snared first place in the state AAU Tourney, second in the Pensacola open, third in the Knoxville and Mid-South open and fifth in the national intercollegiate.

TWO OF THEIR outstanding dual matches this year were with Albany and Columbus, Georgia, both of which they won. Albany was Georgia state champion.

Individual records for the season were:

Player	Kills	Err'rs	Aces	Blk	G	TP
Gould	381	244	26	12	78	143
Hambrock	370	173	14	13	74	139

Garnets Beat Golds In Intra-Squad Tilt

The Garnets brushed the Golds in a close, 86-62 contest in the West Campus gym Wednesday night.

The full-dress regulation game, which gave Seminole boosters a sneak preview of things to come, concluded 18 days of Spring practice, the amount prescribed by NCAA.

The Garnet team, captained by Ham Wernke, was led in scoring by Jimmy Oler, with 19 points. Wernke came in a close second with 18. Westhafer and Artmeier led the Golds with 12 and 11 points. Westhafer, the second best scorer of last season, was captain of the Gold team.

In a special half-time feature, Ham Wernke was presented a Helms Athletic Foundation All-America team award. Last season, Ham meshed 468 points in 22 games for a 21.3 average, the best in FSU history.

Coach "Bud" Kennedy said the Seminoles have enjoyed their most successful Spring basketball drills ever, in which they have stressed defense — their weakest point last year.

Eight lettermen are returning to the squad in September with Senior Bob Pence the only absentee.

Newly elected University Government officers for next year will be installed formally Thursday evening May 21, at 7:30 in Longmire Auditorium. The ceremony is public and all University students are cordially invited to come to both the installation and the reception immediately following to meet their officers.

President of UGA Mary Ruth Summers will preside over the installation ceremonies and will hand the gavel over to next year's top man, Milton Carothers, who won a landslide vote in the recent popular elections. The evening's main speech will be delivered by Dr. J. Broward Culpepper, FSU dean of Student Welfare. Dr Culpepper will tell installes of the rigors they'll come up against in their new positions as University leaders, stressing their importance in determining the success or failure of student government and self-regulation at school.

CHIEF JUSTICE June Tate of University Court will do the actual installing of officers. She will pronounce the ceremonial phrases to the new president of UGA, the three vice-presidents, the four class presidents, the members of the three courts — Traffic, University and Judiciary—and the 24 newly elected senators. Leaders' Characteristics Stressed At Conference

by ORCHID ALONSO

"There are two main characteristics of a real leader. One, he is going somewhere, and second, he can persuade others to go with him." Such was the theme of the keynote address by Dr. Wayne Minnick at the Mortar Board-ODK sponsored Leadership Training Conference held at Camp Flastacowo last Saturday and Sunday.

Dr. Minnick, associate professor of speech, who was presented to the group last Saturday by Katherine Skogstad, co-chairman of the conference, went on to explain why these two characteristics were so important. "In respect to my profession," Dr. Minnick declared, "I say very carefully that a real leader very definitely needs skill in speaking and writing"

HE ENDED his inspiring narrative with the thought-provoking question, "Are you going to be a real leader?"

Mary Ruth Summers, UGA president, had earlier paved the way for this in her opening talk when she told the audience that the college student is vital to our country today. She summed up her statement of the need for leadership in colleges with the reminder that "the student who slides through college is the man who slides through life".

THE LEADERS then gathered in discussion groups for panel discussions. The first groups that met for informal discussions were large general groups that gathered to speak on various interests. Student Government was headed by Mary Ruth Summers and Dean Culpepper. Public Relations and publications were directed by Bill Dunn, with two administration officers, Mr. Roy Flynn and Dr. Royal Ray, present. Jo Neil Proctor and Dr. James Carr presided over the group interested in organizations.

Later, groups for special offices were held. Presiding at the meeting for presidents was Ellen Avis, assisted by vice-president A. B. Martin. June Conyers and Dean Katherine Warren led the group for vice-presidents, secretaries were led by Marcia Morris and Elizabeth Lynn; June Tate met with the court members; Mary Ruth Summers presided over cabinet members; and Nancy Day led the House Presidents and Governors.

AN INFORMAL panel discussion by the faculty and students was followed by a humorous skit on parliamentary procedure by Mortar Board and ODK. Members of the cast included S. M. Davis, Bob Ducker, Arlene Amend, Kappy Skogstad, Ted Steinmeyer, Dick Bradley and other members of the two organizations.

Following the skit was an informal campfire discussion. Dr. Paul Reynolds and Mr. Roy Flynn participated in this

FOLLOWING breakfast on Sunday morning there were summaries given of all the discussion groups, followed by a worship service led by Dr. Sam Neel, FSU chaplain.

The conference ended at noon after dinner with a final address by Kappy Skogstad.

Columbia Refuses Recognition Of Discriminatory Organizations

Following a student referendum, Columbia University has decided to refuse recognition to fraternities and other organizations with discriminatory clauses in their constitutions

The action was announced recently by the Committee on Student Organizations, a student-faculty-administration group. It says the university will withdraw recognition by October 1, 1960 to all groups except those of a religious nature which deny membership because of an applicant's race, color or religion

According to the New York Times:

THE BAN strikes directly at the discriminatory practices of some fraternities, which have been a hotly debated issue not only at Columbia but also in colleges over the country since the end of the last war and the heavy influx of veterans to campuses

The prohibition is similar to that already in force at Amherst College, the University of Connecticut and Dartmouth College, and one projected for the University of Michigan. At the University of Connecticut four of the eighteen fraternities severed ties with their national organizations as a result of the ban. They were the chapters of Lambda Chi Alpha, Sigma Nu, Kappa Sigma and Sigma Chi

TWO OF these — Sigma Nu and Sigma Chi—have local chapters at Columbia University that have been reluctantly enforcing the discriminatory provisions of their national organizations. Two other fraternity chapters at Columbia — Zeta Beta Tau and Alpha Sigma Chi—are in similar position.

AT OTHER colleges where no formal ban has been enacted, there has been a series of revolts by local chapters against the policies of the national fraternities, revolts that have usually ended either with expulsion or resignation of the chapters. The most recent of these was the February expulsion of the Williams College chapter of Phi Delta Theta for pledging a Jewish student.

The Columbia action flies directly in the face of a resolution adopted last year by the National Interfraternity Conference which declared that "any attempt to restrict or regulate" the right of a college fraternity to choose its own members was "an inadvisable interference with the fundamental right of free association guaranteed by the United States Constitution"

THE committee resolution, passed unanimously on Friday, follows:

"Recognition on the Columbia campus shall be withdrawn from any fraternity, social organization or other student group that, after Oct 1, 1960, is compelled by its constitution, rituals or government to deny membership to any person because of his race, color or religion

"THIS resolution shall not apply to a student group that is organized in good faith for devotional purposes or for the study or propagation of a religious faith"

In an accompanying statement, the committee declared that Columbia wished to protect the student's freedom "to select friends and associates according to personal interests and tastes" against "interference by persons or groups outside the university."

THE STATEMENT added that "the committee sincerely hopes" that the discriminating fraternities "will assure the freedom of choice for its members at Columbia well in advance of the date now finally fixed."

Members of the committee are Nicholas McD McKnight, Dean of Students at Columbia College; Dwight C Miner, Professor of History, Walter Gellhorn, Professor of Law; Richard Chapin, chairman of the Columbia University Student Council, and Victor Crichton, outgoing chairman of the Columbia College Board of Student Representatives. A sixth member, Assistant Provost W Emerson Gentzler, did not participate. He is on vacation in England.

ATTEMPTS to eliminate discriminatory fraternity practices have provoked continual debate on the campus. In November, 1950, the college student board, acting on a referendum, suggested that the committee set a 1956 deadline.

In 1951-52 the committee questioned sixteen national organizations represented on the campus as to whether their laws contained discriminatory provisions. Last month the interfraternity council, Pamphratria, noted "the involuntary discrimination forced on Columbia chapters by their national constitutions" and asked the committee to relay the university's attitude after a student referendum.

Profs To Be Rated By Students Soon On Official Sheets

Students will have the opportunity to evaluate their professors in the near future, announced Bill Hess at a recent Cabinet meeting

Evaluation sheets will be distributed to the Deans of the various Schools who, in turn, will distribute them to the teachers in their respective departments. It will then be completely up to the discretion of the individual teacher, the use he makes of these sheets

The sheet to be used comes from Purdue University and was considered by Hess' committee a superior rating scale.

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS By Dick Bibler

"If you think we're busy now—you should come in sometime when it ain't final week."

EDICT ISSUED

For the second time since this campus opened its gates to men, the University administration has placed off limits a local beer-serving drive-in.

We sympathize with Westcott in its stated reasons for the actions, but because we are in favor of increased responsibility for student government, we find the action taken a bit arbitrary.

First of all, the administration, through a notice sent out by Dean of Men Otis McBride, observes that "the effect upon the academic standing of students who spend their evenings at . . . drinking beer and engaging in activities far removed from study" is bad.

Unquestionably this is true, but it is also true of other beer-serving establishments and the countless other ways that students who don't want to study avoid the chore.

Second, the notice states as a reason for the ban: "Offenses occurring at . . . as reflected in court actions and newspaper reports." This is a much more serious charge and merits student consideration.

The point we are trying to make, however, is that we regret seeing the order come as it did. The edict in one paragraph says that men "are requested on their honor not to go there." Later on it hints that honor might not be enough: "Under the authority of the Board of Control, the President and other designated officials in the administration, the University would no doubt have the right to say that men students who patronize a restricted place could be asked to withdraw from school."

We feel, though, that whether it is a matter of honor or not, it should be up to student government to take action. It is regrettable both that a step backward for the rights of men has been taken and that it was taken so abruptly as it was.

On the one previous occasion when the University made a similar ruling for this same establishment, the two parties reached an agreement and the drive-in was put back on limits. We hope that the administration will again effect a compromise, this time with the advice of student government, and that henceforth students have more voice in such matters.

HOLIDAY GONE

Students who like their holidays to come fast and furiously will mourn the passing of the week between semesters next year. The new catalogue reveals that registration for the second semester of the 1953-54 school year will fall on the Monday and Tuesday after Saturday of exam week. Students will get out a week earlier, however.

The revised system was approved by the Council of Deans, the Executive Council and President Campbell.

Charles H. Walker, Florida State University Registrar, outlined to the Flambeau several reasons for the change.

He noted that FSU closes its doors in the spring quite a bit later than do other universities. This is a disadvantage to students seeking summer employment and those planning to attend such things as National Guard camp. It was felt, too, that students would rather study a week in a cooler month than June.

Another reason Walker offered was that Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays are already quite close together, and that an additional week in February was too much at one time.

Having registration fall so soon after exams will entail a number of problems, of course. Students will not be sure whether they have passed their courses by the following Monday, for instance. Walker said some system would have to be worked out for dropping and adding to handle this.

He said it was possible that by next February a pre-registration system, such as the one at Gainesville, and such as suggested by student government two years ago may be in effect.

Students no doubt will miss the week's relaxation after a hectic exam week, but on the whole the change seems a wise one.

SIGNS TAKEN

Campus pranksters and their warped ideas of humor are at it again, and this time the Phi Mu sorority will have to finance the comics' fun.

Friday afternoon City Police placed ten reserved parking signs around the Phi Mu house in order to assure parking places for the attendants of their district convention.

Monday morning all signs were gone except one and the frame of another. How the culprits managed to leave a sample is unknown. Perhaps they had their hands full.

At any rate, these signs were put up as a courtesy to the Phi Mu. The fact remains that total responsibility for their loss falls upon the Phi Mu house. This very fact turns what may have originally been just a prank into a malicious deed.

The Phi Mus have requested that these signs be returned to the front of the house. It seems a small favor to ask in the face of the consequences. Surely, replacing the signs some night after dark would be a small task for the persons who smuggled them, so easily, away.

Actions such as these which were hatched over the weekend are the very actions that prompt close administrative supervision and rigid rules. We howl with pain at close surveillance, and then we prompt closer surveillance. Students, let's grow up, it is time.

LEADERSHIP MEET, SENATE SHARE SPOTLIGHT

By BEVERLY LACAYO

Ouch! Your columnist is at this moment nursing a burnt back from the past weekend at the beach. The scientists (of the Flambeau staff) tell us that the sun is just as hot one place as it is another, but my observation has been that it's the hottest when you're out in it so be careful!

There was one note of disturbance at the otherwise inspiring leadership training conference held at Flastacowo by Mortar Board and O K D this weekend: that was the lack of attendance by the newly elected "leaders" of the student body. Last year there was a much larger attendance in spite of the fact that it was a rainy weekend. Since the Student Party Candidates were for the most part elected, it seems that the Party should have been a little more on the stick and gotten their people out there to take advantage of what was offered in the way of guidance to the new officers. What happened to the promises of increased interest in student government? Or did this just mean increased control by a few?

The conference was given a tremendous impact thru the welcoming speech by President of UGA Mary Ruth Summers. Her challenge to those present to provide the world with true leadership by training for it when in college, had a very real and full meaning to those who have observed what she had acgilshed this year as President. Homage paid those present throughout the conference to the meaning of leadership, and the marks of a true leader, while among them was a girl whose enthusiasm, drive, and amazing capacity for service will not be soon forgotten at Florida State.

There are many who graduate every year of whom it can be said that he or she is an outstanding person; but far fewer are those who can be accredited with helping to make this an outstanding University. This Fact must have struck each Cabinet member during the last official Cabinet meeting, as the President summed up the activities of the past school year.

This year has seen the initiation and success of the Cabinet as an advisory board and aid to the Executive branch of the Government, the polling of the Student Body on their interests and opinions of their University, the lowering of prices in the dining hall thru concerted effort by students, the initiation of another period of orientation for the students in February, the birth of an above board political party instead of cliqueish blocks as have been around in the past, the passage of elections laws to run the elections in a uniform and fair manner, the participation in Career Days for high school students both here and out of town, and the drawing up of a new constitution for the purpose of securing a charter which will give the students more power and freedom to handle what concerns them.

Here we go on the constitution agin. The Senate is working busily on it so that they may submit it to the Board of Control over the summer. The grapevine has it that the Senate is once more being overly optimistic about what they will be able to obtain in this manner. My guess is that there is one jungle and a couple of oceans standing between the work of the Senate and the Board of Control.

Last week a committee composed of both Senate and non-Senate members ironed out the Judiciarl article of the new constitution. One of the points of disagreement was the matter of how many justices of the Honor court should concur for a decision of a matter brouaht to them. Chief Justice Tate thought that the constitutional revision committee had been too restricting on the court by fixing their decisions at a minimum of five justices or four justices and the chief justice concurring.

The conversation was going haywire and parliamentary procedure had fallen by the wayside when someone said in a loud voice, "We can't always have all the members of the court present and so a concurrence of five is sometimes impossible!"

A louder voice, "Members of the court should always be there!!"

Louder still, "Yes! you never hear of the U. S. Supreme Court deciding anything without all members voting!!!"

Silence . . .

June Conyers (in a stage whisper), "But they get $25,000 a year for it."

Hmm . . . maybe if the students got to handle the activity fee . . . It's nice just thinking about it isn't it.

McCARTY PROPOSES STATE TAX COMMISSION

By WARREN COBB

Last week the State Purchasing bill passed the House by a 71-17 margin and the House Committee on Governmental Reorganization decided to sponsor the McCarty-endorsed plan to consolidate tax collecting agencies under a three-member state commission.

This favorable reaction to tax measures advocated by Governor McCarty must lead to an examination of another controversial and vastly important proposal advanced in his message to the State Legislature April 7— namely the establishment of a State Tax Commission.

McCarty's statement regarding this was as follows:

"The inequity or inequality of valuation and assessment of taxable property, not only between individuals within a county but also, as between like properties in the several counties in Florida, has been recognized as a problem of major proportions.

"We have too long neglected or failed to establish uniform principles of evaluation to correct this inequality. We should have, in my opinion, a central authority removed from pressures of local politics, with power to make necessary research and comparisons, and to establish just and uniform standards of evaluation, with direction to instruct and assist the local tax assessors, and where necessary, to compel equalization within and between the counties. Equalization does not mean higher taxes, but comprehends a leveling and adjusting process, having as its objective, just and equitable assessments. It will not and must not jeopardize Homestead Exemptions.

"It is my firm belief that fair equalization of the burden of taxation, on tangible and intangible property, can best be obtained by the establishment, through legislative enactment, of a Tax Commission Authority charged with the duty and power of establishing such uniform guiding principles of evaluation and uniform and equal rates of taxation."

This proposal was greeted unfavorably by numerous legislators. Sen. Bronson of Kissimmee said, "I can't go along with . . . the State Tax Commission." Said Rep. Tom Cobb of Volusia, "I . . . do not believe that a statutory tax commission can dictate to constitutional county officers."

The need for some revision of the tax structure is obviated by the striking disparity among the assessments of the various counties. Some counties assess at 80% of actual value, some at only 30%, etc.

Actually, there is now a law on the books, passed during the Holland Administration, which requires county tax assessors to assess at 100% of market value. However, this law had no enforcement provisions and no one complied with it.

As a consequence, county tax assessors have consistently under-assessed property in their counties for political reasons and so that their counties may derive more money from state appropriations, since the need of the counties is determined by the total tax valuations. This method of determination discourages 100% assessments.

In order to avoid this pitfall, a proposal has been made to determine the wealth of a county, and therefore the amount of state contribution, in proportion to the sales tax collected in that county. This would seem to be a more desirable method in that it would eliminate one of the main causes for under-assessments.

It should be noted here that under-assessments do not reduce taxes. The amount that property owners pay to the county is determined by the millage rates set by county officials. If the assessments are low, the millage rates are correspondingly high to make up the difference for the county budget.

Another reason the county tax assessors give for not complying with the existing law requiring 100% assessments is that the fluctuation of values in inflationary and deflationary periods makes determination of the actual cash valuation of property impossible. This is a rather feeble explanation.

The real reason for under-assessments is simply that a great many voters have small homes, tax-exempt up to $5,000 by the Homestead Exemption Law, and are therefore given a big break by low assessments.

Thus the people owning homes assessed at less than $5,000 (in spite of the fact that their market value may be around $10,000 or $12,000) pay no county taxes—except in those few cases where they help to pay off outstanding bonds floated by the county before the Homestead Exemption Law went into effect.

These people, then, are receiving county benefits and services for which they do not pay in taxes. The entire tax burden falls on those persons owning business property, unimproved property, and homes assessed at more than $5,000.

These people are naturally for uniform 100% assessments in accordance with the existing law so that this burden may be more equitably distributed.

On the other side of the fence, many small-home-owners contend that the purpose of the Homestead Amendment was to induce non-residents to build in Florida free from taxation. Many did build small homes assessed at less than $5,000 on the strength of that amendment. Now, they say, it isn't fair to raise assessments in contravention of the premise upon which they originally built—i.e., that their property would be tax-free.

What this argument fails to consider is that their property has greatly increased in market value, that they are enjoying the community benefits pro gratis, and that it is no advantage to induce non-residents to establish themselves in our state if they do not share in the financial support of the community with the residents who own property and more expensive homes.

The question, then, is how to effect uniformity in county assessments.

One measure was introduced in this session to enforce the existing law pertaining to 100% assessments by penalizing counties refusing to comply with it by withholding state appropriations to that county.

This measure is rather drastic and it is very doubtful that it could pass. It may have already been killed in committee.

This leaves the alternative of McCarty's State Tax Commission. It would require considerable organization and call for a much clearer definition of its powers than offered in the Governor's address.

But it would distribute the tax burden more evenly, and it would, as McCarty pointed out, largely remove taxation from the pressures of local politics.

Unfortunately, the pressures of state politics are likely to prevent the enactment of a bill to establish it.

MOVIE NEWS

'Thunder In The East' Plays

By AL PIERCE

Alan Ladd has toted a veritable arsenal of shooting irons since he blasted his way to fame as a psychopathic killer in one of his first screen efforts. However, the facts show that action and not homicide has been Ladd's movie specialty.

Shooting from both sides of the law over the past years, the rugged star has bagged a tremendous total of screen victims, killing them with lugers, six-shooters, rifles, machine guns and any other steel muzzled instrument of destruction that was on hand.

Yet, in the same period of time Ladd has not relied exclusively upon firearms in his screen foragings. He has also racked up an impressive record of pummeling, belaboring, gunching and bludgeoning scores more of assorted antagonists, now in his latest action-filled adventure film, "Thunder in the East" opening tomorrow at the State Theater, Ladd continues in his own brand of movie mayhem.

Co-starred with Charles Boyer, Deborah Kerr and Corrine Calvet, in a stirring story set against the background of a revolt-ridden Indian province, Ladd is embroiled in the intrigue and violence stemming from a raging campaign of terror that threatens to engulf everyone in its path.

When he flies a load of munitions into the war-torn country Ladd finds himself caught square in the middle of a raging battle. His attempts to sell the contraband only serve to deepen the chasm between the opposing forces and ultimately results in Ladd's taking an active part in the fray. With Ladd in the conflict the suspense mounts until it erupts in a powerful dramatic climax.

The shattering action that punctuates "Thunder In The East" affords Ladd the opportunity to once again display his world-famous "Love 'em, slug 'em" brand of acting.

"Tonight We Sing," the musical extravaganza based on the career of Sol Hurok plays through tonight at the Florida Theater. Against the musical backgrounds of "La Traviata," "Faust," "Boris Goudenov," and "Madame Butterfly," the operetic musical blends itself in with the tender, moving love story of the man who put great names in show business before the American public at prices they could afford.

David Wayne portrays the man of musical vision who brought such great names in music and dance to this country as Pavlova, Chaliapin and Ysaye. Ezio Pinza, called the world's greatest living basso, plays the famous Russian singer, Chaliapin. Tamara Toumanova who has danced with every ballet and opera company in the world, pirouettes her way through the difficult role of the great Ann Pavlova, ballet star legendary; while the inimitable Issac Stern, presently the world's only living violinist, exclusively makes his acting debut on the screen in the role of Eugene Ysaye, the famous violinist of the turn of the century.

"Tonight We Sing's" tag billing also goes to Roberta Peters playing the Met star, Elsa Valdine, Anne Bancroft as Emma Hurok, wife of the impresario, and Byron Palmer, handsome product of his first Broadway bit, "Hollywood on Ice" who plays the young suitor of Elsa Valdine in a lilting romance. Palmer's off-screen voice is that of Jan Pearce, one of the Met's leading tenors and one of the most famous operatic mentors of our times.

Under Mitchell Liesen's direction, "Tonight We Sing" blossoms forth as a multi-million-dollar aggregation of musical and dancing talent; something everyone should see.

Public Safety Office Informs People of Traffic Conditions

Parking problems on the automobile-packed Florida State campus may be a big headache to students, traffic court and faculty at large, but before tearing out hairs over the situation, and emitting anguished cries of "I'm innocent!" victims of FSU's new traffic regulations will do well to look at a larger scale problem.

The state of Florida has no little problem when it comes to thoughtless parkers, reckless drivers and would-be "Barney Oldfields." In fact, as soon as you become the proud owner of an automobile, the State Department of Public Safety has the "goods" on you.

Encouraging news comes from the Public Safety office regarding accidents in Florida. Lieut. C. E. Taylor, publicity liaison man between the state and the Florida public, said recently that accidents have dropped 25 per cent in the past year.

Taylor said this year's tally of 3,543 accidents shows the large reduction that has been made in last year's total of 4,713 highway mishaps. He attributes the decrease in part to the intensified activities of the Department of Public Safety which, he said, performs two major functions.

The driver licensing division issues all of Florida's drivers' licenses and has the job of examining new drivers on the state's roads.

"Many people now driving think their licenses are secure," Taylor said, commenting on incompetent drivers. "This is false security, because our department re-examines drivers whose ability is questionable."

He went on to say that if the driver or prospective driver doesn't meet the "somewhat rigid" requirements of the state his license is suspended or refused.

An important part of the licensing department, Taylor said, is the Driver Improvement and Control Program. He said the cut in the accident rate for the year could be largely attributed to this program's workings.

"We maintain a permanent file on every licensed driver in Florida," Taylor said. "If and when a Floridian has an accident," he continued, "the police or court handling the case sends detailed reports to us to put in the file."

He continued that the driver is then sent a notice that an account of his accident or violation has been entered in his file. When three such records accumulate the offender may have his license suspended or he may have a hearing. Or he may merely get another letter like the first three.

The accident Records section, Taylor said, receives records from all the courts and police areas in the state.

"Eighty-five per cent of t people in the United States w lingly abide by the law," Tay stated, "and the remaining per cent fall into the violati category." He hastened to e plain that the majority of the "15 per centers" never willing wanted to break the law.

"Three per cent of these 15 accident-prone people or in oth words, those who willfully disob the law," he said.

He added that the other per cent are unintentional lators.

"Our job is to cater to people abiding by the law," said, adding that accidents ha three elements in the Depa ment's eyes. The vehicle, the roa way, and the individual are contributing factors. It is up the department to decide ho much of one and how little another factor to count in an cident.

The lieutenant said the bigge portion of the department's ef fort is pointed at the huma element.

When asked if Florida's uniformed men in the highwa patrol could arrest a driver pas ing through the limits of a tow Lieut. Taylor said this can done and is done. But he sa the highway patrol is mostly con cerned with enforcement rural areas and on highways.

Letters To The Editor. . . .

Caesar Ends

Dear Students:

This is the third and final statement by the Vice President of Men's Affairs, Wayne Terry, in reply to the declarations entitled "Caesar Criticized" and "Caesar Investigated." These articles have been presented in compliance with the Flambeau's policy of limiting each "Letter to the Editor" to a maximum of two hundred and fifty words.

As previously promised, I will take this opportunity to disclose the numerous fallacies embodied in the recent accusations hurled at "Little Caesar."

1. I did not in any way seek to or conspire in the so called "rigging" of the Sophomore Senate nominations and/or any other nominations made at the Student Party convention.

2. I did not attempt at any time during or prior to the convention to establish a "bloc" of delegates for the purpose of supporting an alleged "Terry Ticket" which was non existent.

3. I did not and do not believe that my position enabled me to be responsible for the nomination of, or the defeat of, any one seeking party endorsement. I am firmly convinced that those who were victorious, were so on their own personal merits alone.

4. I did not "stuff" the Magnolia Hall delegation with personal "stooges" as has been charged. The representatives were selected from every area of the dormitory and reflected a variety of student opinions. When the delegates were not in attendance they left instructions with me for the casting of their ballots. The delegation was thoroughly legal in the maximum extent of the word.

5. I did not at any time utter such statements as "Ya better not step on the Big Politicians toes because they will slap back real hard." or "Boy, I feel like a Hot Mountain tonight." These are once again solely the contrivances of my opponents.

6. I did not take any part in the alleged Landis delegation "shake up." In fact, I am afraid I know of no such reorganization in that delegation. Was there one?

7. I did not plan to run for the office of University Government Association President next year. Not because my opponents feel that I would be defeated before I even started, but solely because I believe that I do not possess the necessary qualifications for that position.

8. I do not plan to resign any of the offices that I now hold on the Florida State University campus.

There, "Friends, Seminoles, and Countrymen," you have the entire case of this disagreement that I am pleased to say has been very successfully straightened out by the parties involved.

Unfortunately, I am afraid (contrary to some beliefs) that your "Little Caesar" and his "Mark Antonys" will return to F.S.U. this Fall bringing back with them their foremost desire—to continue to strive to present liberal and progressive legislation for the benefit of you, the Student Body of Florida State University.

I would surely appreciate and welcome any questions and inquiries concerning not only this matter at hand, but anything that you feel I might be able to help you with concerning your University Government Association.

Sincerely,
Wayne Terry.

Curfew Needed

Dear Editor,

Three questions to the administration:

1. If the University is permitting outsiders (and state legislative officials) to "party" in the Suwannee Room, why isn't curfew put on these shindigs? After all, mere children live dormitories surrounding th balloon filled room, and they d have to sleep, you know. Many of us are learning to hop th bunny hop while lying paralle on a hard slab of mattress.

2. If no drinking is permitted to students on or off campus why go blind when wild adul pull out a bottle? It certainly not a pleasure for 18-year-old to be serenaded by raspy 40-yea old men after a night of merri ment.

3. Won't some one please tak out the Party Room exhaust fan That mechanical piece pulls every sound and smell into my 8x1 room. By the way, all of the previous University sponsored parties combined smelled immaculate compared to a Thursday night really truly adult party.

This type of thing is very discouraging to J. C.'s who try to live a god example for those w try to help.

JANET KELLEY.

Thanks

Dear Classmates:

I wish to take this opportunity to express my most sincere appreciation to my classmates who helped me in my recent campaign and to thank you for giving me the privilege of serving you as your sophomore Senator. During the coming year I shall make every effort to represent your interests in the Senate fairly and sincerely. I realize that as a Senator I will be charged with the responsibility of helping to make decisions that will affect your life here at the university, and I shall serve you to the best of my ability in attempting to bring about the greatest benefit to the university and to the student body.

Most sincerely,
COYLE MOORE.

Student Interprets Problems Of Armed Conflict in Korea

(Note: This article is an interpretative analysis of a current world problem. The Flambeau hopes to present more articles in this vein in the future.

By WARREN COBB

The current speculations on a settlement of the armed conflict in Korea and the consequent resumption of an unsettled co-existence of Communism and the Western World must lead to a critical re-examination of the heretofore accepted "policy of containment."

This was the policy initiated by Truman, Acheson, et al. in March, 1947. It was designed to prevent the expansion of what was then the Soviet orbit. It proposed a global coalition of non-communist countries — a policy of alliances between the United States and her allies.

IT SEEMS apparent today that this policy has failed. Since its inception the whole of mainland China has fallen within the communist regime, we have all but lost South Korea, Indo-China, and Malaya.

Why has containment failed? This is the question we must answer if we are to obtain a true estimate of the world situation that now exists.

FIRST, IT must be pointed out that the policy of containment was a purely negative one; it was based on static defensive action which does not provide retaliation against the invader. It invites communist sorties and aggression by assuring the Kremlin that this aggression will not incite general conflict. In this way, you are permitting your adversary his choice of battlefields.

Second, the policy of alliances presents a distasteful choice to many neutral countries. This is especially true in Asia, where technological development has resulted in insurgent revolutions against the old regimes and Western imperialism and in a nationalistic fervor for independence.

FOR THIS reason, our proposed alliances against the communists and even our Point Four program are regarded with suspicion and distrust by these countries.

Third, the allies who have ostensibly joined us in advocating a policy of containment have been extremely timid and reluctant to assist in its enforcement, lest it result in extension of the conflict and finally in all-out war with Russia. This reluctancy to provoke the Kremlin is due, in large measure to the vulnerable geographic and military status of these allies.

FOR THESE reasons, this policy has become unfeasible to the free world.

What, then, is the alternative to containment?

Some maintain that the only alternatives are all-out war or Soviet domination of the globe. This, however, is not necessarily the case.

Jersey Bounce--Rocky Landing

By DAVID DREIS

Jersey Joe Walcott just won't give up! The former champion unseated from his throne last Sept. 23 in Philly by Rocky Marciano, again lit his birthday candles in Chicago Stadium last Friday night and had them blown out by the "Rock" in 2:25 of the first round. However that's not the last of Walcott (nee Arnold Cream). Again the sepia slugger is calling "raw deal."

"His eyes were glassy," was the way Marciano described Walcott after his right uppercut had sent the Negro's body in the direction of the floor Walcott, who claims the referee didn't give the full count and pushed him down when he tried to get up, said, "It was ridiculous. I wasn't hurt at any time. I guess it was a lefthook and a punch-push, or something, that knocked me down. I could have gotten up at the count of two."

The crowd of 13,266 shouted their disagreement when the decision was announced. There was controversey here—especially from the fans who shelled out 50 greenbacks for their seat. All was confusion to the extent that the ring announcer gave the wrong time. He said the time was 1:25, a minute off.

"I heard him count seven," Walcott told reporters. "I started to get up, but he pushed me down and waved Marciano the winner."

Commenting about the punch which sent the Negro to the mat, Marciano said "There was a lot of beef behind it. I must have hit him the best possible shot When I heard the count get up to eight, I realized this fellow wasn't going to get up He hadn't even looked at the referee"

Walcott's manager, Felix Bocchicchio, blazed away at the commission, and said, "In Philadelphia when Marciano got knocked down, he got a clear loud count Nobody heard this count, they just whispered it."

Newman sitting five or six rows back said they heard the "whisper." Everyone agreed the fight aftermath was better than the fight which had brought the odds down to 3-1 in favor of the "Rock."

It seems strange that the gladiators would choose Chicago for a championship fight.

For one thing, Chicago was the place that Jack Dempsey unsuccessfully attempted to regain his title and was given the "long count" Since this was a perfect example of the historical jinx that no champion has ever regained his title and being that that was Walcott's aim it certainly provides food for thought

Walcott has officially put in a complaint to the boxing commission, and claims that "the movies will show everything." If it does prove support for the pappy guy, a return match is a certainty although manager Al Weill, has stated that challengers Roland LaStarza or ex-champ Ezzard Charles are on the program in the very near future.

Students Envied By Patriarchs; Television Replaces Studying

(MHaterial for this articel comes from the Daily Bruin, student newspaper of UCLA and released by the Associated Collegiate Press)

EVERY ONCE in a while we hear some patriach of the past tell us how fortunate we are to be living in the 1950's where all the potential of the world has been molded to bring us the finest educational facilities.

This tale invariably involves a contrast between the plush circumstances of the modern world and the rugged conditions of the days "when I was a boy"

THE STORY pours forth in voluminous detail and each hardship is recounted at length—the two-mile trek through rugged country to a crumbling and poorly heated schoolhouse, study by candlelight and the crushing weight of countless chores

The time has come to call a halt to such talk and to distill from loquacious nonsense the blunt facts. True, we have more comforts and more conveniences today than were available to our father or their fathers, but these same "higher standards" have bred a new race of hazards

TAKE, as an example, television. Did our parents ever have to contend with such a monster? The poor student is trying to study, but television blares forth over the whole household and floats through every door and barrier, so that he can find no escape from its unyielding din.

If television were only a matter of pictures, there would be no problem You could turn your back on it and forget the whole thing. But, it has sound . . .

MEN THERE are a whole host of gilded attractives whose sole function seems to be to grasp out at the collegian and lure him from his higher purposes

How, in the face of this enormous conspiracy to distract him, is today's student going to dig out his book learning? Certainly it takes a higher caliber of character than was needed for a two-mile hike to school each morning

ALL IN ALL, we're inclined to think that the conditions of the past were more conducive to securing some knowledge and doing some thinking than are the baited comforts of our time.

Music Teacher Writes Piano Students Book

Rebecca Rodenberg, instructor in piano at Florida State University, the composer of a newly-published book of piano pieces for beginning students Entitled "From Singing to Playing" the volume contains sixteen short pieces simple enough so that the child can first learn them as songs, and then learn to find the notes on the piano keyboard

The teaching approach of this book is one of the new ideas used by modern piano teachers to make the beginner's first piano practice more simplified and interesting than formerly. The basic idea, according to Miss Rodenberg, grew out of her experiences in teaching beginners in the piano normal classes at FSU.

The book is published by the Boston Music Co., of Boston, Mass.

Numerous forfeits marked the dormitory intramurals last Wednesday, with all the dorms racking up a total of 4 forfeits. One of the games between Senior Hall and the Moccasins drew a double forfeit The Cats failed to show up for their game with Magnolia, and West Campus gave one to the Yankees for the other two

Benson and Artmier batteries for Nagy Hall, teamed up to hold the Baptist Student Union scoreless as they walloped them 12-0 Register and Johns were batteries for BSU

The Air Force Meterology students and the Trojans, leading contenders for the dormitory all-intramural trophy, slugged it out with the Trojans coming out on top 7-3 Batteries for the Trojans were Bryant and Stone, while Conn and DeWitt held down the major starting slots for the Air Force. Mills, Cuesta Tie For Batting Honors

Captain Billy (Cooter) Mills and catcher-first baseman John Cuesta, who carried on a see-saw race for Seminole batting honors all season, finished in a dead heat for Florida State's '53 batting championship.

Official 24-game averages released Saturday show that Mills, a junior from Tallahassee, and Cuesta, the Seminoles' Spanish-speaking star from Tampa, wound up with identical 319 averages

The smallest Seminole player —he weighs only 135 pounds— Mills colected 29 hits in 91 appearances as a leadoff batter. The small-but-deadly rightfielder played in all 24 games.

Cuesta the stocky pepperpot who batted in the clean-up spot, had the same number of hits—29 —in the same number of trips to the box Cuesta played in one game less than Mills

Mills drew more bases on balls than any other player walking 26 times for a new FSU record. He gave opposing picthers headaches because his small size made him tough to pitch to He also tied centerfielder Bob Hudson for the most runs scored with 22

Cuesta led his mates in doubles, banging out five, and in the least strikeouts for a regular. He fanned only twice this spring

Mills and Cuesta replace second-baseman Billie Campbell, who took the batting honors on last year's Seminole team when they rolled up a record of 17 wins with only two setbacks.

Both Swim Tourney Scores Protested

In the swimming meet last week, after Nagy Hall had filed a formal protest against the Air Force Nagy Hall was declared the winner

The protest was filed after it was found out that one of the Air Force contestants had swam for Texas A & M College A board of judges decided that Nagy Hall was right in their complaints and disqualified the score of this particular event, which gave Nagy Hall the championship

The dormitory score was also protested but has not yet been through the regular channels for a decision.

WE MUST realize that the Soviet empire is much larger than the democratice coalition It is composed of about 750,300,000 people We do not hold the preponderant power at this time necessary to thrust back communist expansion wherever and whenever it may occur The Soviet empire is now overextended and the welfare of our country depends upon its reduction in both Eastern Europe and Asia.

This reduction does not imply the alternative of all-out war Rather it defines the necessity of a "policy of diplomancy," as advocated by Walter Lippmann

THIS POLICY would entail encouraging the nationalistic movements in the neutral countries, wherein lies the balance of world power; it would avoid compelling them to make an unqualified choice between the two existent world powers, for this "expedient" compulsion serves to antagonize and alienate these countries

It would also involve the encouragement of defection of communist satellite countries, following the pattern set by Tito in Yugoslavia That unrest and potential disruption are present in these countries is indicated by the recent programs and shake-ups instigated by the Kremlin

NATIONALISM within these countries, or Tito-ism, could very well be the key to a new and progressive foreign policy, one which is based on positive and rewarding commitments, and one which could reap the benefits of international independence

FAMOUS LAST WORDS

Dorm Sage Hopes Tomorrow Is Better

By RON MARTIN

It is written that, "He who seeks shall find" and that's exactly what you are, a find. It usually happens in the middle of phy. sci., history 102, or basket weaving 1193 Somebody wants a cigarett and neither a "Please Do Not Disturb" nor a locked door will keep them out. The quest usually starts out something like this

"Man, sure is a hot night"

"Yah"

"Hitt'n the old books, huh?"

Long and obvious silence which leads to much shuffuling of feet and spasmatic coughting.

"Ya wouldn't happen to have . .

"On the dresser, take two and enjoy life."

You settle back now to faultings, foldings, and unconformities. It's been a real pleasure to be able to sit in your own private room with it's quiet atmosphere and home-like appearance and study for the big one coming up Wednesday. You're just about ready to turn the page and find out the exciting details on way the volcano burped when in walks the room mate.

Now he's a likeable fellow and very friendly. So friendly that he invites, it seems, half the dorm in for a session of everything from how to win the "police action" in Korea to the unmentionable details of the girls they took out last night. As the conversation continues, you are awakened to the fact that here in your midst are intellectuals the like of which the world has never seen. You say to yourself, "Ah! intellectuals! People who shouldn't marry because they won't enjoy it; and besides they shouldn't reproduce themselves."

Studying is a serious business with you but to them it's a necessary half hour a day. The cry of hunger breaks the session up into a stampede out the door and the near breaking of hinges as it slams shut.

Peace has finally come to room 316 and you're on your way to greater heights in the whirl of education. But not for long. Just as you are about to indulge in more of Krauskopf, in walks FSU's answer to Bob Hope. The latest jokes and wise sayings are this character's personality. Even if his jokes were funny, you couldn't out laugh him. As you slowly count to ten, he notices the deep silence that has filled the air since he came in and he quickly leaves.

Now the night's vicious circle is complete. Erosion marches on as the night air is suddenly filled with a crash, a tinkle of broken bottles, and loud guffaws. The Tau Tau Taus have just initiated their last pledge. Finishing touches are laid to the evening's business with a charming rendition of Seven Lonely Nights, a capella. The concert ends with the straining of engines and the screeching of breaks as Tau Tau Taus, brothers all, burn off into the night in search of high adventure

You glance at the clock. One A M ! You still have to chapters to go, but heavy eyes refuse to read any further. So you close the cover of phy. sci. and vow that tomorrow night will be different, but you still keep your fingers crossed.

Indiana Student Paper Claims Draft Weakens American Spirit

The following article appeared in the Ball State News, student newspaper of Ball State College, Indiana and is reprinted with the permission of the Associated Collegiate Press.

Today our leaders insist on preparedness. They say we must be ready to meet aggression, we must be strong economically and militarily. They forget that spirit of initiative and determination which is so important.

SINCE 1948, the young men of this country have continually been subjected to the draft. On the surface this draft seems necessary. And now that we are engaged in a seeming winless and endless conflict, the draft does seem absolutely necessary. But what is it doing to our young men?

Stop and listen to the comments of those who have seen recent military service, and more especially those who are awaiting call. Are they determined patriotic citizens, eager to strike a blow against the enemy? They will fight, yes, and undoubtedly do a good job. But do they have the motivation that is so vital in winning a conflict?

DO THEY have the fighting determined spirit so characteristic of Americans in the past?

This draft has done something to the youth of our nation. It has destroyed the spirit of democratic freedom and the will to achieve great heights in its defense; it has left a listless acceptance of something that has to be done something that has to be borne

BUT THIS attitude is not consistent with the American way of life. How can we win without that basic spirit, that strong feeling to rise and defend our country?

Maybe we better stop and think about this matter some before we find ourselves in a rut from which it will be too difficult and too costly to rise.

LOOKING LIKE a bombed-out cathedral, 43-year-old Westcott Auditorium becomes a skeleton as workman demolish it, making way for a new, more modern structure. Condemned two years ago for unsafe foundations, the building has been settling into ancient Indian trenches discovered in the Westcott area. "Sidewalk Superintendents" include both students and faculty. Result: much tardiness to classes.

Campus Face Lifting Hits FSU's Historic Landmark

Architects are having a field day as Florida State University continues getting its face lifted. Youthful sidewalk superintendents gayly watch as buildings go up and others come down on FSU's picturesque campus Not to be daunted by all this activity, Westcott Auditorium has gotten into the act.

BRICK BY brick, piece-by-piece, memory by memory, the building that has seen some 40 classes of graduates march forth into the world from its doors is being systematically reduced to dust and rubble to make way for a new Westcott. Sturdy walls and stubbord oak beams groan under the tremendous impact of the crane's steel "ball and chain," quiver for an instant as onlookers hold their breath, then topple to the ground, ending a forty-three year reign as the setting for artist series productions. Sandspurs and their forebears, the Odd-Even demonstrations, lectures and large scale theatrical productions.

Westcott Auditorium's story has taken happy and sad turns alternately since it first appeared on campus. Its doors have opened to scores of shining faces of those eager to make a success of their class's Odd-Even events, the grandmothers of our present-day February Sandspur productions.

WESTCOTT'S walls have rung to the sounds of some of the world's greatest artists Both audiences and building laughed at some and listened with serious intent to others. Fritz Kreisler thrilled Floridians with his violin virtuosity here. Eleanor Roosevelt wove a spell around hundreds with her eloquence as she spoke from the famous podium Percy Granger had Westcott audiences rolling in the aisles "way back when" with his carefree, completely new comedy piano act. Granger brought a show packed with unusual musical stunts to FSU that many old timers have not yet forgotten.

Thousands of FSU and FSCW graduates have accepted their sheepskins and moved the familiar tassle onto the other side of the mortarboard as they stepped down from the stage and into their roles as America's hope for a better tomorrow Legend has it that, during one graduation ceremony, Westcott's floors rocked to the laughter of hundreds during a very somber part in the program.

IT WAS A hot June night and the doors were open wide to the stage to catch every possible breath of air. The diplomas were being given out and the name Marion Hale had been called. Before she could get there, however, a stray Pekingese, all of 18 inches long, bounded up the stairs and across the stage to the podium. The audience rocked as the would-be graduate sat looking expectantly at the dean who stood completely lost for words with the diploma in hand.

Built in 1910, the original auditorium was only as long as the front face of the stage. Later, in 1922, the stage and back part were added. Then Nature played a prank

THE BUILDING'S walls developed large cracks suddenly soon after the addition was made Upon investigation, it was found that

Road Workers Find Bridge Built By British in 1700's

Remains of an ancient bridge, possibly built during the British occupation of Florida, 1763-1783, have been found in the St. Marks River, just east of Newport.

The old beams, of fatty pine, were pulled from the river by a State Road Department construction crew preparing the bed of a new bridge to span the river.

DR. HALE SMITH, head of the Florida State University department of anthropology and archeology, and his students examined the findings

They found the beams contained hand-drilled holes about the size of silver dollars, indicating the bridge had been mortised and doweled together, an early construction technique

DR. SMITH came up with the 1763-1783 date for the bridge. He said several years ago his department, using diving equipment, had discovered British materials—broken clay pipes, dishes, spoons, etc. —on the river bottom west of the bridge site

The anthropologist said no British materials could be found east of the old bridge site indicating the bridge was present during the British occupation, making it impossible for English ships to go further up the river

AN OLD NEWPORT resident, who has lived in the area 50 years, said he believed the old bridge was built before the war between the states.

Now the old bridge piers are under several tons of limestone used as the foundation for the new bridge.

Tews Granted Vote Recount By Honor Court

The University Court Tuesday night ruled that Elections Chairman Paul Soraparu had violated election laws and should grant a recount to Hans Tews, who was defeated in the Sophomore Men's Senate race, but that this ruling was not to be taken as a precedent in similar cases to the future.

However, while the court was out debating the legality of Soraparu's refusal to grant a recount, the Elections Committee head made public the results of a secret recount which had been made on the race concerned. The results of this recount were identical with those of the original count.

THIS CASE resulted from the protest by Bruce Fletcher and Wallace Norton over alleged inefficiency in the counting of the votes and the refusal by Soraparu to grant a recount to Tews when it was requested Wednesday night, the night following the tallying

Soraparu gave as the reasons for this refusal the Elections Committee's opinion that the margin by which Tews was defeated—38 votes—did not warrant a recount He emphasized that the Elections Committee was not opposed to granting recounts, but was opposed to setting an undesirable precedent.

THE RESULTS of the disputed race showed 473 votes for Coyle Moore, 452 for Jimmy Joanas, 333 for Gordon Gaster and 295 for Tews.

Fletcher asked Soraparu for a recount the next night and was refused. The request was repeated Thursday and Friday

THE COURT, consisting of members Nanette McLato, Richard Jackson, Bob Woodrich, Ann Slater and Chief-Justice June Tate, heard both sides of the case presented by Soraparu and Fletcher.

Fletcher maintained that Soraparu had violated the election laws in failing to announce all authorized election workers prior to the vote-counting Soraparu contended that the Elections Committee had the authority to set up suitable regulations at its own discretion in the absence of constitutional provisions. He then asked

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS — by Dick Bibler

"I get an 'F' in his lecture course but at the same time he gave me an 'A' on my knitting."

● PARTY DISSATISFIES

There has been a noticeable expression of widespread dissatisfaction among students lately with the methods employed by the newly formed Student Party in nominating its candidates.

It would appear that there is some justifiable basis for this dissatisfaction.

The purpose for which the Student Party was formed—the purpose of invigorating students' interest and participation in their student government—is a laudable one. It should be noted that it has succeeded in that purpose to a considerable extent.

But, unfortunately, the actual functioning of the party machinery is somewhat less admirable than its expressed purpose. Nominations of candidates are, in many cases, the result of an unintelligible trading of votes by the delegates in order to abet the chances of their own candidates. In most cases the delegates do not even know the candidates they are juggling to suit their own purposes.

For this reason, the party threatens to degenerate into a mere political chess board for exhibitionists and would-be campus big-shots.

The student body would be doing itself an immense disservice should it allow this to happen.

For the political party, properly organized and smoothly functioning, has impressive potentialities on our campus. We have long been in need of some system to inject interest in our student government and elective offices.

One possible solution to the undesirable situation mentioned above would be the separation of nominations and selection of party candidates. In other words, the meeting for nominating candidates could be held at one time and the meeting for selecting between these various candidates at some later date.

Let us continue to organize and support the political party system here at FSU. But let us be certain that our party (or parties) is truly representative, that it is the authentic expression of the concerted student opinion behind it.

For if it is not, then it is shorn of all value and meaning.

● OFFICERS OBSERVE

Each spring as elections are climaxed with the traditional installation services for the new officers, the oldster's congratulate, handshake, and look with hopefulness at their successors. And each year at this time, a pep talk is published, urging the newly electeds to continue the vigor exercised during their campaigns into the duties and responsibilities of their respective offices.

This year we had hoped to omit the traditional words of wisdom, thinking that the leaders of our government had full cognizance of the heavy responsibility they undertook in representing their classmates.

However, from the turnout at the recent, excellently planned and provided for ODK-Mortar Board Leadership Training Conference, it appears that a mistake in confidence has been made. For on this Saturday past, few faces were to be seen other than the two and three year perennials who had come as usual to instruct and offer the benefits of their experience to the students who soon would be facing identical problems and utilizing identical sources of information. With slight exception the successors did not come.

Those of you who were elected in the recent primaries have a definite duty and obligation to learn, to the best of your ability, the functions of the office you shall be holding and to perform those functions first, regardless of other committments and ties. Most of you, when a candidate for office, stated with good intentions "If Elected I Promise . . . ". It is time to make those intentions and promises sincere and valid.

Incoming officers who have failed to take advantage of the proffered help sessions have missed their valuable opportunity. It is to be hoped that they will immediately eradicate any lack of knowledge along with lack of interest and responsibility. Otherwise, a rocky road lies ahead.

By this time the oaths of office have been taken. Let them have meaning. Remember now your promises and dare not forget your obligations. You were elected in good faith. Serve your student body in the same good faith; and good luck in your endeavors.

● TRANSPORTATION NEEDED

The trials and tribulations that one dormitory has gone through to get transportation for a picnic serve to point out a definite need to those student politicians on campus who claim to want to serve the student body.

Last year Magnolia hall rented a university bus for transportation to their annual picnic, but when they tried to obtain one again this year, they found a new ruling had gone into effect forbidding the use of shuttle buses for long trips.

University officials say that the buses are in too poor condition for use anywhere except around campus, but Magnolia residents protest that these are used as well as athletic buses for certain athletic events.

Next the dorm residents tried to rent trucks to take them to their desinaion, but the university said it could not take responsibility under these circumstances.

Finally, the Magnolians decided to make two trips in cars to Silver Lake, but the University would not sanction this place. That left only Camp Flastocowo.

This tale of who is perhaps of not too great importance by itself, but it does indicate the need of an improvement in the transportation system. There should be at least one bus which is available to group and class outings.

COLUMNIST DEBATES FREEDOM OF PRESS

By BRUCE GALPHIN

People everywhere dearly love the beliefs they grew up with, whether these cherished ideas be true or completely fallacious. In America, where political philosophy is steeped in the tradition of Jefferson, Paine and other great liberals of the late eighteenth century, we have some particularly noble notions.

In particular I refer to the idea springing from the eighteenth century greats and kept alive by nationalistic propagandists today that our press is unbiased.

We hear continually how fettered is the press of the Soviet Union and how free is ours. Personally I have no doubt that our press has considerably more freedom of expression — more freedom to dissent — than does Russia's but it is important to understand how cold reality places great limitations on us.

It is interesting to notice that the constitutions of both the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. guarantee freedom of the press. It is only in practice that restraints are placed on newspapers. Detractions from these theoretical liberties fall into two general categories: those of internal structure and those of actual pressures. I shall discuss the latter first.

When trying to explain why American journalists can exercise more freedom than their Russian counterparts, people offer all sorts of imaginative reasons. They attribute it to our better system of economics, to our more idealistic press and even to the natural betterness of the American people.

The reasons are, of course, complex, and I do not seek to oversimplify them, but I suggest there is one consideration which will give us a great deal of insight into the problem: namely, let us see who controls the press in the two countries.

If the government directly influences the press of Russia, is it surprising that there is little criticism of major government politics in the Soviet press? And if business dominates the American press, is it surprising that our newspapers and magazines generally support those persons and groups who are friendliest to business? I think it is because there is not complete conformity of point of view among business interests and because these interests do not entirely dominate the press that we Americans have more diversity in our press.

Even so, it is distressing that varying points of view are usually available only in poorly circulated publications such as Nation and New Republic.

Many people are at least vaguely aware of these pressures, however: what does come to them as a surprise is that the actual function of the press makes impossible that other aspect of an ideally free medium of information: lack of bias.

How many times in years past have we heard people cry that the Flambeau should not be so biased? They seem to think that such a thing as an unbiased newspaper exists. Lack of bias is impossible, though, even if we rules out of consideration the slanting of news.

For the reporting of news is like any other written or verbal account of actuality is that it must select some facts and discard others. Even if a reporter does not intentionally leave out facts which contradict his own point of view on a matter, he naturally must make decisions as to what to delete, and his choice might be quite different from another's.

The things which most bias reporters, however are their own backgrounds of information. If a man is a reporter just for a living and wants above all to please his superiors, if he is not acquainted with the underlying movements in our society, then he will definitely be biased. He will never look below the surface for more news: indeed, he will not be aware that more exists.

The education of reporters is thus one of the keys to a good press. But a good press is not an unbiased one. It is to be fully expected that a man accustomed to looking at society from a definite point of view will flavor his reporting accordingly. It might be added that a bad press is equally biased, for being non-critical is, in effect, to support the status quo.

It is perhaps disconcerting to see some of our cherished beliefs, even noble ones, reduced to nothingness, but it contributes materially to our maturity to do so.

TURNPIKE, UNIVERSITY EXPENSES DISCUSSED

By WARREN COBB

Although the Senate has now passed a bill creating a toll turnpike authority empowered to construct a super-highway the length of Florida's East Coast, have also approved a proposed constitutional amendment to prohibit the use of state funds for any tollpikes

If these measures pass the House it will mean that the Turnpike Authority will have to undertake this enormous construction program in the same manner that a private corporation would — i.e., financing through the issuing of self-liquidating revenue bonds. The state would not be liable for these bonds

This action by the senate is contrary to a suggestion offered by the State Road Board regarding the financing of this construction. This suggestion was that the money from the sale of automobile license tags (other than that going to schools by constitutional amendment), which is now being diverted into the General Fund, be appropriated to the turnpike for a little over three years, thereby eliminating the interest charges incurred by the issuing of bonds. This pay-as-an plan would save 50% of the total expense of constructing the turnpike. We would get twice as much highway for the money spent. The tolls collected would then go back to the General Fund, and all accounts would be squared.

But the proposed constitutional amendment approved by the Senate would make this impossible. It would seem to be a flagrant case of "false economy." If an expensive state-long turnpike is going to be constructed, rather than the limited turnpike recommended by the Road Board, then why not build it as cheaply as possible?

This may seem a reactionary question to many modern legislators, but to me it seems good sense.

Another item that should be of considerable interest to students of this university is the recent declaration by Rep. Keezel of Orange County to the effect that expenses in state universities are entirely too high.

This problem was brought out during the hearing before the House Committee on Higher Education regarding Keezel's bill to recommend to the Board of Control that it prevent all freshmen and sophomores at state-operated higher institutions from having cars. Keezel maintained that this was an economy measure for mothers and fathers sending their children to college.

What he failed to mention was that such economy is none of his business. It is entirely a personnel proposition for the parents themselves to decide

The committe rejected this bill — and rightfully so — but many members agreed with him that college expenses are excessive.

Rep. Smith of Indian River pointed out that a student can attend the University of Miami as cheaply as he can a state university, even though the state "put millions" into its universities

Keezel said, "I don't know where the poor people can go to college in Florida . I've voted for every appropriation that comes along for the universities and you have created a thing down there (referring to the University of Florida) where a poor man can't go to college."

Whether or not Keezel is justified in this charge is of tremendous importance. It should be remembered that unless it is economically advantageous to do so, many prospective students are not going to choose our university or the University of Florida. They are going to do what so many high school graduates in the state have done in the past — migrate to out-of-state schools.

Perhaps there has been too much concern with impressive, but expendable, school enterprises and too little concern with saving the student money.

MOVIE NEWS

Adventure Is Movie Motto

By AL PIERCE

Florida Staters are in for a gala wind-up to the Spring semester as far as the movies are concerned. A bevy of stars will descend upon 'ol Tally Town the next few weeks offering burners of the midnight incandescents happy release from term-paper and finals tension

Dynamic Alan Ladd continues to thrill his audiences with his gun-slinging, rugged-loving portrayal of a Yankee flyer in the mysterious Orient until Sunday at the State Theater. Co-starring with Ladd are notables Charles Boyer, Deborah Kerr and Corrine Calvet. These and a cast of hundreds help evolve the plot of "Thunder In The East" into a thrilling, suspenseful drama of Eastern intrigue and torrid love-making

Ladd, as the American flyer attempting to unload a cargo of munitions to nourish a seething revolt in a remote Indian province finds himself embroiled in the revolt, actively fights for one of the sides, and falls into and out of love with two beautiful women also caught in the revolt-torn province.

Altogether, "Thunder In The East" provides an evening of rapid-fire, warm entertainment worth seeing.

Coming to the State Theater Sunday, May 24 and playing through Tuesday, May 26 is "Tropic Zone", an exciting tale of intrigue and violence set against the colorful background of a tiny Central American "banana republic".

Starring Ronald Reagan, Rhonda Fleming and Estelita, the torrid Technicolor adventure explosively recounts the deadly conflict between two opposing factions battling for supremacy in the banana raising industry. Reagan plays the two-fisted adventurer who aids Rhonda Fleming, the owner of the largest independent plantation in the area who is slowly but surely being driven to bankruptcy by corrupt neighbors attempting to get their hands on her land

When Reagan steps into the fray the tenseness of the plot mounts until, in a shattering climax all the pent-up fury of both sides is unleashed for one last mighty effort to emerge the victor.

Aiding Reagan and Miss Fleming in their fight against the overwhelming odds are Estelita as a cabaret performer and Noah Beery, Jr., who portrays a devil-may-care airplane pilot. Grant Withers creates a hateful mood about him with his role of the nefarious bully who carries out the orders of his corrupt ring-leaders trying to acquire Miss Fleming's land

Replete with explosive sequences including battling with knives, fists, hatches and guns, "Tropic Zone" is enhanced by a romantic triangle that develops between Reagan, Miss Fleming and Estelita, with the two women parrying for Reagan's attention. Estelita lightens the turbulent action with peppery songs and dances.

Directed by Lewis Foster, "Tropic Zone" promises to be an outstanding film that will set audiences in Tallahassee talking.

"Off Limits" suggests exactly what it is—a riotous film starring a new comedy team, Bob Hope and Mickey Rooney in the roles of two funnymen, as the MP's who become mixed up with beauteous, siren-like Marilyn Maxwell and Eddie Mayehoff. "Off Limits" plays until tomorrow at the Florida Theater. Don't miss it.

Coming to the Florida Theater Sunday and playing till Tuesday, the 24th is "Treasure of The Golden Condor." A stirring adventure film on a grand scale "Treasure" stars heart-throb Cornel Wilde and Constance Smith in a fabulous adventure story set mostly in the ancient, fascinating and dangerous land of the Mayas.

Captures in Technicolor in "Treasure" are scenes of dangerous Mayan locales, taken on location, and probably never before seen on the screen.

Set in the late 18th century, "Treasure Of The Golden Condor" contrasts the polished manners of French court life with the primitive, menacing existence of a Guatemalan jungle. Wilde, young and adventurous, forced to leave his native France, meets Finlay Currie, possessor of a treasure map, and his lovely daughter, played by Constance Smith. They go together to search for a fabulous hidden cache and, after a perious journey, find themselves in a time-worn jade-and-emerald city in what we now know as Guatemala. Before the trio finds the treasure, however, they share a score of breathtaking adventures.

Highlighting the picture are Wilde's battle-to-the-death with a huge boa constrictor, a traditional ceremonial dance and the first showing of the beautiful, mysterious Guatemalan interior.

Featured along with Currie in support of Wilde and Miss Smith are film notables Walter Hampden; Ann Bancroft; George Macready; Fay Wray, a film star of the thirties, Leo G. Carroll, and Konstantin Shayne.

"Treasure Of The Golden Condor" is written and directed by Delmer Daves who, along with the co-stars and Currie, braved the jungles of Guatemala on location to bring the adventure film to movie audiences. For action and warmth, for historical scenery and beauty, don't fail to see "Treasure Of The Golden Condor" at the Florida Theater, Sunday through Tuesday!

SUCCESSFUL applicants will be commissioned as second lieutenants in the Air Force Reserve. In midsummer they will be ordered to duty for a 9 to 12-month course in meteorology at one of several well-known U. S. colleges and universities

In addition to the weather training, the officers will attend a short basic officer training course before assignment to active duty in an Air Force weather station

WHILE ATTENDING the government-paid weather training, students will receive full pay and allowances of a second lieutenant. In the case of a married student, this amounts to about $350 a month, for a single officer slightly less

Application forms for a direct commission and weather training are available by writing to the Commanding General, Air Weather Service, Washington 25, D C

THE PROGRAM is administered by the USAF Institute of Technology. Some of the schools participating are the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, New York University, the University of Chicago, Pennsylvania State College, the University of California at Los Angeles, Florida State University, the University of Washington and St. Louis University.

Tews Granted

the interpretation of Gene Lawler, who authored these laws in the Senate, and the opinion of Attorney-General Tommy Simmons. Both agreed with Soraparu that the Committee had this authority

THE COURT ruled in favor of Soraparu on this point

Fletcher then presented his reasons for believing that there had been discrepencies in counting the votes. Wayne Terry, a member of the Men's Sophomore Council who had assisted in counting the votes, offered support to Fletcher's contention by asserting that there had been considerable "confusion and turmoil" during the counting

JIMMY EVANS, former senator offered the opinion that a 7 per cent error, which would have been necessary to have caused Tew's defeat, was extremely unlikely.

Soraparu had previously pointed out that the committee had conducted a recount in which there was only a one-vote margin between two candidates, even though there had been no request for such a recount

FLETCHER THEN requested that the court rescind Soraparu's denial and direct him to grant a recount to Tews.

The court retired to consider the evidence and then returned the verdict that Soraparu had violated the election laws and should grant the requested recount

IT WAS THEN that Soraparu presented to the Court the results of his secret recount, conducted by Tom Simmons, Gene Lawler, Arnold Adams and himself, which had again shown 333 votes for Gasler to 295 for Tews. This recount had been taken Friday, May 15.

This concluded the case

FLETCHER afterward made the statement, "We didn't expect enough of a change to elect Hans. But we felt that if a student felt the need for a recount, it should be granted him. We're happy now."

Veterans Administration Tells Of Credit Control Removals

Veterans Administration has spelled out what the recent removal of credit controls on GI loans means to the home-buying World War II or Korean veteran.

The action, effective April 25, 1953, and authorized by the Housing and Home Finance Agency, removes the last vestige of credit controls which were applied to GI loans under the Defense Production Act.

IN ADDITION, VA said it has removed restriction on how the per cent gratuity payment made to veterans who obtain GI loans may be applied. The gratuity payment made by VA equals four per cent of the guaranteed portion of the GI loan up to a maximum of $160. Previously under credit controls, the gratuity had to be applied to reduce the principal amount of the loan.

Now, the lender and the veteran may also apply the gratuity in other ways, for example, to pay the first two or three installments on the loan, or to pay all or part of the first yea taxes and insurance.

THE REMOVAL of credit co trols means that under VA re ulations it is now permissi for veterans to obtain GI ho loans with no down payment a with a repayment term up to years.

VA amphasized, however, t since VA guaranteed loans a made by private lending inst tions, the lender makes the d cision as to the term of the loa it makes.

THE AMOUNT OF down pa ment and the length of the payment period are matters to agreed upon between the vete and the lending institution ma ing the loan.

Prior to the action remov controls, veterans were requi to pay at least 5 per cent down most cases, and the maxim loan was usually restricted 20 or 25 years.

CREDIT CONTROLS were f applied to GI loans in 1950 sho ly after the beginning of t Korean conflict as an anti-infl tionary measure

Sports Chatter

The track team, who had its ego slightly shaken in ast meet with the Miami Hurricanes, will go marching gh Georgia tomorrow in a final attempt to add s to FSU's sports record. Their participation in the gia AAU meet will be the last action the '53 squad will They have posted a 4-3 mark in meets this year.

the Miami meet, several close ones were called in favor e Hurricanes that would otherwise have reversed the e of the meet. Against Mimai, the Seminoles have r had a close event called in their favor. Some of the members have stated that "the only way to beat ami is to pull a lead so hig that the officials don't a choice of ways to call it."

BIG WALLY HIGGENBOTHAM, who moves like a azy tabby except when his arm goes over for a pitch, the pitching honors on the Staff this season, although arted only two games. The appareut slowness with n he moves is deceptive, to say the least. In addition ing the best Seminole relief pitcher. he can rally "lay wood" to a ball when he connects. Wally is a freshman year, so he should be chunking the Seminoles out ms for another three years.

Ed Lockard had a perfect, though brief, won-lost rec-. In 4 games, he was credited with 1 win and no losses a 1.000 percentage. Lockard dropped from the squad e middle of the season.

IN THE PAST YEAR, the football team had a major in marring an otherwise good percentage record in all sports. They pulled the overall percentage down 601 with their 1-8-1 record. Congrats to the Tennis n and Swimmers for their .882 and .875 percentage.

Coach Veller's name is beginning to be a familiar sight e athletic magazines. He recently finished his third cle of the year. Time must be hanging heavy on his ds since he has gotten rid of the headaches and compli- ons that go with being a football coach.

FOOTBALL TAKES a great stride forward next year n the players will live in a sepearate dorm and eat at a ning table. Might be a good idea to have lights out at rtain hour, too. Even so, Senior Hall will never be the e.

With The Majors

NIOR MAKES NIOR GRADE:

the age of 24 James Gil- Jr., a former bat boy and er has been playing profes- l ball for ten years. He over at second base for the klyn Dodgers in his major e debut this year, and by predictable sign can easily e Rookie of the Year, if not year's Most Valuable Player e him, Jackie Robinson, a mpion in every sense of the held down second base does Jim Gilliam feel about ing into Jackie's shoes?

"I DIDN'T," he said the other before the Dodgers left on a road trip "I guess our manager, Mr Dressen, thought I could help the team on second base and Jackie could help on third. I didn't know I'd be on second. I didn't even know I'd be with the Dodgers this year They didn't give me a contract until the day before the season started."

Jim's calm is his characteristic mark He's a natural athlete A rangy kid, with powerful hands, be chokes up three inches on his bat, and at the plate his quiet confidence outwits and outwaits veterao pitcher. He's been on base in every game he's played this year, drawing 22 walks, and now hitting .308. He runs like a deer and is preseotly leading the National League in stolen bases with 8

AS FAR BACK as he can remember Jim never had any other dream or desire except to play baseball. At ten he was playing it on amtpy lots, and for the next three years he was was bat boy for his home town team, Nashville, Tenn.

At 14 his mother bought him his first glove, which he used wheo he was hired to play for a local team called the Crawfords, owned and managed by a man named Paul Jooes Jones brought Jim into the Southern League when it was formed, and at the tender age of 17 he found himself playing for the Baltimore Giants

HERE IS WHERE he got the nickname "Junior" since be was by far the youngest member of the team Re was with the Giants for four years before the Dodgers scouted him and sent him to Montreal He played third base for Montreal, and whenever an outfielder aot hurt Junior took his place

It was George Scales, coach of the Baltimore Giants, who taught Jim how to switch hit six years ago "It was tough learning it the first year" said Junior. "But hitting left handed I didn't miss so many curves"

MORE IMPORTANT to Junior than learning to switch hit was meeting a young pitcher on the Baltimore team named Joe Black They roomed together then. They moved to Montreal together They parted sadly, but hopefully when Joe preceded Junior to the Dodgers. They room together now

Does Junior go to Joe for all his advice?

"Oh, no. I'll go to anyone who can help me"

Educational Costs Studied in Survey

Florida State University is cooperating with the United States Department of Education in a study of the costs of college education.

Four hundred undergraduate students will be queried on academic background, expenses, source of funds, and family income. The poll at FSU is being supervised by Dr. W. Hugh Stickler, director of educational research.

Dr Stickler terms the survey "very important". He said, "Parents, the federal government, college administrators and students themselves have expressed concern over the rising costs facing students. Because a college education is becoming so expensive many cannot go to college who should."

Interest in Shakespeare and the first Elizabethan era has taken Dr. Rogers, since her graduation from Cornell University, to various noted centers of research. She has worked in the Congressional and Folger Shakespeare Libraries in Washington, and at Cambridge and the British Museum in England. The present coronation year revives memories of her stay in England in 1937 when George VI was crowned. The same year gave her glimpses of Mussolini in Rome and Hitler in Berlin. Directing European tours for college students was a regular summer diversion for her during the heyday years of these dictators.

Dr. Rogers is currently chairman of the Spenser-Milton Section of the South Atlantic Modern Language Association and treasurer of the Leon County Council of English Teachers. Her campus activities at the University have included membership on the Graduate Council and on the Curriculum, Honors and Creative Arts Committees. During her next vacation she plans to explore more materials on Shakespeare and his age.

Trade, Industrial Teachers Enroll For Short Summer Courses at FSU

More than 300 trade and industrial teachers have registered for Florida State University's two summer short courses in this field to be taught by distinguished vocational educators from Wisconsin, New York, Ohio, Kansas, Georgia, Texas and Florida.

A majority of the registered teachers are from Florida, but the Southeast as a whole will be well represented in the three week courses scheduled for June 15-July 3 and July 6-July 24, according to the director, Dr Victor Schmitt, FSU professor of education.

TO MEET STANDARDS set up by the Smith-Hughes Act and by state departments of education, the specialized teachers must periodically attend such short courses to maintain certification.

Highlighting the courses will be radio and television servicing and an alignment institute. General Electric, Philco, Admiral, Sylvania, Westinghouse, RCA, Hickok and Sprague Corporation will furnish consultants and demonstrators, showing new equipment and techniques in servicing and alignment of radio and television equipment.

TWENTY-FIVE subjects, with slight variation, will be offered for both short courses. Visual Aids-Non Projection, Applied Vocational Psychology, Public Relations, Trade Shop Management and Control, Organization for Diversified Cooperative Training and Day Trade Related Instruction are among subjects to be taught.

FSU is cooperating with the state department of education, trade and industrial division, in offering the short courses.

ROBERT WELCH, former state supervisor of vocational education in Wisconsin; John Brophy, Cornell, Robert Reese, state supervisor of vocational education in Ohio; Jacob Ruppert, state supervisor of vocational education in Kansas; Mary Ellen Olivero, Columbia, Wendell Heaton, Florida state improvement commission; Herman Hinton, state supervisor of trade and industrial education in Florida; Rufus Pulliam, sta pervisor of guidance servic Georgia; and F. TRIPLE THREAT MAN

The Brains of the Team

Teamwork can work miracles. In a football game the man who sparks these miracles is the quarterback. He's the man who calls the signals. There's a man who calls the signals for an Air Force flying team, too!

They call him an Aircraft Observer.

Do YOU have what it takes to become an Aircraft Observer?

It isn't easy. It's tough. You have to be a MAN to qualify as an Aircraft Observer. But when you are one, brother, you're SOMEBODY! The success or failure of a mission involving over a million dollars worth of flight equipment depends on you.

THE AIRCRAFT OBSERVER IS THE SOMEBODY WHO:

As Bombardment Officer, is number one man on a bombing run, the man who controls the plane in the target area!

As Navigation Officer, is the pilot's guiding hand on every flight!

As Radar Officer, is master of a new science and operator of the device that sees beyond human sight!

As Aircraft Performance Engineer Officer, is the one who "keeps the plane flying", the man who knows his plane inside and out, who keeps it fit for the skies and sees that it stays there!

If YOU can accept a challenge like this, you'll take your place beside the best—you'll find your future in the clouds!

TO BE QUALIFIED you must be single, a citizen, between 19 and 26½ years old, have had at least 2 years of college and be in tip top physical shape. If this describes you, then YOU, too, can qualify. Today!

HERE'S WHAT YOU'LL GET! The world's best training. Good food and plenty of it. Uniforms, flight clothes, equipment. Medical and dental care. Free insurance. Flight training in Uncle Sam's greatest aircraft.

AND THEN, AFTER GRADUATION, you'll win your silver wings, and earn more than $5000 a year as an Air Force Lieutenant. You'll enjoy an adventurous, exciting career with a hand-picked crew of real men. You'll be THE BRAINS OF THE TEAM, A TRIPLE THREAT MAN . . . as a Bombardment Officer, as a Navigation Officer, as a Radar Officer, as an Aircraft Performance Engineer.

Caldwell to Deliver Talk at Graduation

Branscomb Conducts Baccalaureate On Preceding Friday Night at 8 P.M.

Dr. Harmon White Caldwell, chancellor of the university system of Georgia, will deliver the commencement address Saturday night, June 6, marking the graduation of the class of 1953.

Dr. Caldwell has been chancellor of Georgia's university system since October, 1949. From 1935 to 1948 he served as president of the University of Georgia where he was once a professor of law. For two years he was dean of the University's Law School. Dr. Caldwell has practiced law and at one time taught in the Georgia public schools.

THE NOTED educator will talk to FSU graduates from the outdoor podium of Doak S. Campbell stadium. His message to the 800-odd seniors and students receiving degrees will deal with their experiences upon going out into the world. Dr. Caldwell will express, as many have previously done, his wishes that the graduates enter the competitive spirit of the world at large with a courage and moral code like they have seen existing in America's colleges and universities.

Preceding the commencement speaker on Friday night at 8 p.m. will be another noted man in the field of elocution. The baccalaureate service will hear the Rev. John Branscomb, Methodist Bishop of the Jacksonville area conduct the religious service that marks the solemn rite of graduation.

REVEREND Branscomb is an outstanding clergyman. He joined the Florida Methodist conference in 1828 and for eight years was pastor of First Church at Tampa. Later, for nine more years, he was minister at First Church in Orlando.

The baccalaureate speaker was elected a bishop of the Methodist church in 1952 and assigned to the Jacksonville area which includes all of Florida and Cuba.

FROM 1944 to 1953 he was president of the Southeastern Jurisdictional Board of Missions and was a delegate to the ecumenical conferences of the Methodist church at Springfield, Mass. in 1837 and Oxford, England in 1951.

Commencement events have been arranged by Dr. Venila Shores, professor of History at FSU.

Government Organizations Plan Workshop Here This Summer

Representatives of various government and private organizations will staff a regional workshop on Safety Education in Elementary Schools on the campus of the Florida State University in Tallahassee this summer.

The workshop—for school administrators, supervisors and teachers in elementary schools—will be divided into two sections: one, June 15-17, for which there will be no charge, but for which no college credit will be given; the other will be from June 15-July 5, for which a fee will be charged and three semester hours credit given.

DR. H. G. DANFORD, professor of Physical Education for Men at FSU and director of the workshop, said the first three days of the workshop will be devoted to a number of general sessions followed by discussions.

"This group will determine the most urgent problems which confront the schools in the area of safety education and suggest possible approaches to a solution of these problems," Dr. Danford said.

THE SECTION for which credit will be given will devote its energies to carrying out the instructions resulting from the meeting of the first. This will include preparation of materials and the conducting of studies designed to help solve the problems and to help meet the needs as determined by the earlier groups.

Graduating Seniors to Establish Scholarship as Major Project

A half loan, half gift scholarship known as the "Florida State University Foundation Fund" was established by the Senior Class of 1953 as their main class project of the year 1952-53.

Senior Class president Bob Ryals led the group in their many other projects, among them the securing of the cards for the football cheering section and the sending of Flambeaus to interning seniors.

THE SCHOLARSHIP fund set aside here will be used by Florida High School Seniors who enter FSU. Mr. Glover Tulley of the Vocational and Placement Office helped the Executive committee draw up the plans for the fund which started out on $500 from a reserve fund and ended up with a total of $800. Part of the addition came from the Senior Class and part came from the Junior Class.

The "Booster Section" project, which included the buying of the cards, was under the leadership of second vice-president of the senior class Ted Steinmeyer.

EDITH BRYANT was the senior girl selected to be in charge of sending Flambeaus to the interning seniors.

In May of this year, the senior class was guest of the Junior Class at the Junior-Senior Hop, one of the three big dances of the school year. A slate of boys and girls was voted upon and a King and Queen of the Hop were selected.

LAST SATURDAY, the Seniors were the guests of honor of their sophomore brothers and sisters at the annual, Sophomore - Senior breakfast. Earlier in the year the Seniors were capped by these same sophomore brothers and sisters at the annual investiture service. This service officially designates the seniors as such and the seniors are capped after an impressive ceremony.

Dr. Hudson Rogers, head of the English Department and Dr. Sam Neel were selected to be sponsors of the Senior Class at the first meeting of the Senior Class and have served in that capacity since.

Other officers of the Senior Class besides Ryals and Steinmeyer are Sue Saxon, first vice-president, Barbara Brewton, secretary; Jane Sheppard, treasurer, June Kierstead; and Paul Soraparu, social chairman.

Sophomore-Senior Annual Breakfast Traditionally Held

C. Farris Bryant, speaker of the Florida House of Representatives, was the main speaker at the Sophomore-Senior Breakfast held Saturday morning at the Suwannee dining room.

Seniors were invited to this affair by their Sophomore brothers and sisters. The new Sophomore Council tappees served.

The speakers were introduced by FSU President Doak S Campbell. Toast master was Bob Canada, sophomore class president. Bob also introduced the guests assembled there. A response to the toast was made by Bob Ryals, Senior class president.

Program chairman in charge of the breakfast was Jo Anne Setzer, sophomore class vice-president.

Musicians Present Final Performance Monday Evening

The final concert of the season for the Florida State University Symphony was played in Opperman Music Hall last night.

The program was under the direction of Robert N. Sedore, assistant professor of violin and orchestra.

THE MAJOR WORK on the program was the suite from the ballet, "Appalachian Spring," by the American composer Aaron Copland. This ballet was written in 1944 for Martha Graham and her ballet company. In May, 1945, the ballet received both the Pulitzer prize for music and the New York Music Critics Circle Award for the outstanding theatrical music work of the 1944-45 season The ballet is currently being revived in New York City by Miss Graham.

Opening number on the program was the "Concert Overture" by John Boda, assistant professor of piano and composition at FSU. This work was written two years ago for the annual meeting of the Southeastern Composers League at the University of Alabama and was played at FSU in the spring of 1951

THE "SYMPHONY No 8 in F" by Ludwig van Beethoven was also on the program.

The FSU Symphony is composed of 65 pieces. Most students are in the school of music, but the membership also includes students with many other majors. The orchestra is now in its twenty-sixth year, having grown in that time from a small ensemble to full symphonic instrumentation.

List of Candidates Includes 498 Bachelors, 67 Masters

Approximately 575 members of Florida State's student body will receive the familiar diplomas marking their graduation Saturday night, June 6, in Doak S. Campbell Stadium.

Dr. Harmon White Caldwell, chancellor of the University system of Georgia, will deliver the commencement address to the 498 graduates of the class of 1953, 87 graduate students receiving masters degrees and seven doctoral candidates.

This June's graduates bring the total number of degrees issued by Florida State University since it became co-educational in 1947 up to 8,150. The registrar's office has noted that last years total graduates, February, June and August, stand now as the largest yearly total in the school's history. This June's number of graduates doesn't match last year's 840, they said, noting that last year saw the commencement of many men coming to school on the GI bill.

Traditionally the graduates march onto the floodlighted field in all their academic regalia, past the teachers and professors they have known all through their college years. They seat themselves before the flower-bedecked podium and, when the degrees are handed out, they rise to their name

Degrees are not handed out personally to each graduate as has been the custom in the past. It was found too inconvenient, with such large graduating classes, to have the deans personally present diplomas. Last year marked the first time degrees were handed out in spirit, the academic dean calls off his list of graduates' names, and they stand, signifying their acceptance of the degrees.

Dr. Venila Shores, whom many of the graduates know personally as their history professor, is annually in charge of the commencement affairs. Graduates will meet with her tomorrow night

Dramatics Parade In Passing Review

Year Launched By 'The Torchbearers'; Talent Thrives in Speech Department

The Department of Speech attracted the attention of the FSU theatre-goers for the 1952-53 theatrical season, when it opened its dramatic program with George Kelly's comedy of the roaring twenties, The Torchbearers. Mr. Frank Hanson directed a very able cast through the humorous scenes which left audiences eagerly awaiting the next production.

The second offering on the bill of dramatic fare for the year was an interesting, and quite revealing evening of theatre in the form of the freshman plays. Formerly the freshman have put on a single three-act play annually, but this year brought a change. A bill of three one-act plays directed by Mr. Roger Busfield was presented, which introduced many new and talented people to campus histrionics. The plays selected and performed were Eugene O Neil's Before Breakfast, a dramatic monologue, The Man in the Bowler Hat, a comedy-melodrama, and expressionistic play, The Theatre of the Soul. Many of the people appearing for the first time on Conradi stage in these productions were seen in other shows throughout the year. And certainly they have proved that next season's theatrics will have a good foundation on which to start work

IN JANUARY William Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew opened and played to capacity houses for the four nights it ran. This show had as its very capable director Mr. Carl Zerke. It was a well-balanced show in every sense and proved that local viewers like the old as well as the new.

The fourth dramatic offering introduced two new hits to the campus—Dr. Lynn Orr, chairman of the dramatics area of the department of speech, and expressionistic theatre. Dr. Orr did a fine job of directing Leonide Audreyev's The Life of Man, and FSU audiences were once again well satisfied. The set and lighting for the play were of particular interest to the artistic minded, as well as to those with a technical trend. It was one of the first local attempts at "space staging" and was quite successfull. A similar type of staging had been used in Theatre of the Soul earlier and the effect, to say the least, was startling

Staff Reviews WFSU Work Of Past Year

By STAN HARVEY

WFSU, like Bob Hope and Bing Crosby, is off on a new road.

Many of you will remember when WFSU asked for new members to the staff in September, the Fall semester. One hundred and three people showed up to join the staff. Some made it, others joined us later. Our programming was mostly music with the Super Club and Late Date the top favorites. The students wanted variations in programs so new ideas struck the station like bombshells and it buzzed with activity as the Seminole Theatre Guild, Meet The Greeks, and Los Picaros were organized.

WE MIXED education with entertainment with programs like the Jeffersonian Heritage, and Songs From France. Just before Christmas WFSU made plans for the 8 hour Yuletide broadcast of Our Album of Christmas. The songs from "The Messiah" rang out to spread good tidings throughout the campus.

More people came up with more ideas so the second semester brough new shows like the Pete Williams Show, Musical Scrap Book, and The U. N. Review. Easter brough the story of the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ with a background of special music.

BASKETBALL was brought to the dormitories as WFSU broadcast the play-by-play descriptions of the home games. Then WFSU turned to the Baseball spotlight bringing the students remote broadcasts direct from Centennial Field.

The futuristic music of Stan Kenton was featured on Wednesday night broadcasts of Music of a Modern Age. The classic minded students were entertain-

Students Do Murals For New Dormitory

When the eleven story, "skyscraper" dormitory is opened as residence hall for men students at the Florida State University this fall, the ground floor snack bar and recreation lounge will be enlivened with three mural paintings by a faculty member and two students in the department of art.

The murals, all concerned with subjects of natural interest to young men students, have been executed during the past semester under the direction of department Head, Edmund Lewandowski, whose own murals of recent years ride the seas in luxury liners and grace the walls of business houses and educational institutions. They were done by Guy Johnson, part time instructor, in the department of art; George Milton, graduating Senior who will continue his training at F.S.U. as a graduate student next fall, and Franklin Adams, Sophomore from Madison.

F.S.U.'s annual circus "Flying High," has no doubt furnished Mr. Johnson and Mr. Milton with their subject; Mr. Adams's is hunting and fishing as suggested by the shapes of boats, fish, and water birds. Not only do the subjects hold innate interest for the hundreds of students who will see them every day, but the design and color of the three large paintings add a note of gaiety and vitality to the first floor of the new building.

The subjects are treated semi-abstractly, and almost entirely in two dimensions, in keeping with the contemporary feeling that wall areas which are—in their very nature—flat should not be treated in a fashion which destroys that flatness with more or less successful illusions of depth.

IN COLOR, the murals pick up the basic tonalities of the decorative scheme of the rooms in which they are found, but then go on to introduce at times harmonious at times contrasting, colors which "illuminate" the wall in the same sense that a medieval manuscript was "illuminated" through the intelligent use of color.

The first impression of these new additions to the campus decor is that the murals are "naturals." The walls have been so skillfully chosen that one cannot imagine them without the murals. In each case the size and shape of the wall determines the extent of the mural, and indeed, intersecting wall areas create an illusion of finish and limitation comparable to that which is achieved in a well-framed picture.

THERE IS no question of choosing among the three paintings for better or worse—each seems absolutely right for its location. Johnson and Milton used warmer colors, Mr. Adams chose a cooler range more suited to his particular area in relationship to the wall colors and furnishings involved. Mr. Johnson and Mr. Milton chose casein (a paint using milk products as a binder) as their medium, applied directly to the wall. Adams decided to paint in oil on canvas, thus enabling him to get a richer variety of textural effects. Each of the panels is different, but all blend with the building as if envisaged by the architect in his first sketches.

Sorority Gives Party

The Alpha Sigma chapter of Delta Zeta sorority held a party on Wednesday night, May 20 in honor of their house mother, Mrs C. W. Dinwiddie, their Tallahassee alumnae, and other alumni who were visiting here during the legislature

Refreshments were served to more than fifty members and guests present.

Men's Council Newly Formed This Semester

Sophomore Men's Council is a companion organization to the Sophomore Women's Council. Former Vice President of Men's Affairs, Jim Dye, was the first one to urge the formation of a men's group for the purpose of assisting the University Government with various service projects that might arise. The constitution for the new body was drawn up and adopted by the Men's Senate of the University Government Association during the Fall semester of 1952. The organization became a reality with the selection of members from the Sophomore Class by the Men's Senate in February of 1953. The first actual meeting of the newly created group occurred on March 18.

Although the Council was not able to function properly until the last few months of this current school year, it nevertheless has found it possible to render a number of plausible services to the student body.

AMONG THESE have been: assistance at the polls in the UGA Spring elections; assistance in the counting of ballots during both the U.G.A. and class elections distribution of the Florida Flambeau throughout the campus and dormitories, escorts for members of the State Legislature attending the "Flying High" circus performances, guides for the high school students attending the University sponsored "Know Your Government Week" programs; guides for several organizations holding state conventions at Florida State.

The members of the Council have selected a special regalia that is quite similar to that worn by their female counterparts. This dress is composed of a white shirt, accompanied by matching blue tie and slacks. The Council has designated each Wednesday for the wearing of the regalia.

THE CREDIT for much of this year's successful work by the Men's Council may be given to President Donnie Hollis. Hollis has done an excellent job under very trying circumstance (typical of all newly created organizations) that have confronted him from time to time. Other officers aiding President Hollis this year have been: David Dries, Vice President; Wayne Terry, Secretary; William Stancik, Treasurer; and Don Van Hise, Chaplain.

The thirty men that will comprise next year's Sophomore Council were selected from the present Freshman Class at the last regularly scheduled meeting of the Council, in accordance with

Party Birth, Elections Share Political Light

Looking back over the year, we find that politics remained in the spotlight most of the time and came through with the biggest bandwagon yet to be viewed on the sacred soil of dear old FSU. It started out with a bang that was to reverberate again and again. Such things as "ten thirty," "Little Caesar" and "take no others" became the key words in the big races. When it was all over there was some dirt to be found under the rug, but it was soon forgotten.

The people who talked themselves maroon and gold in the face making campaign speeches, were happy to forget the times when politician was accented on the last syllable and return to normal duties. Of course, as in any political race after the big count, many poli-guys and gals found themselves resembling the earth . . . flattened at the polls. There were more aching hands, brown wrapping paper and chlorophyll tooth paste used by the "friendly" politicians, than ever before.

LOUD CRIES were heard from a new birth on campus. Student Party and Seminole Party reared their anemic little bodies to eye level and searched for new blood to keep them alive. Here, thought the multitude, is what we've been looking for: a democratic two party system. Happy times are here again, they shouted. Their joyful words were answered with promises of a better government on campus and air conditioning in Westcott. It wasn't long, however, that joy turned to sorrow for some people. Seminole Party needed more plasma . . . but quick! Help didn't arrive and in the near empty Longmire Auditorium, Seminole Party died. Rumor soon spread that there would be a resurrection. The multitude crossed their fingers and waited, because they wanted two platforms to stand on instead of one. But the resurrection never came. Student Party lived on, created a stiff broom and swept most of its candidates into office.

THE BIGGEST shoes to be filled belonged to Mary Ruth Summers, then president of the University Government Association. The multitude wasn't sure at first which path of glory lead to the gravy. But each one grabbed up his "x" and ran to the polls with the feeling that he could 'take no others.' Milt was in and that was that.

The tight race ensued when "Fair sex" Morris and "Phi Beta Kappa" Galphin raced around the ballot box, if you'll pardon the expression, neck and neck. There was much puffing on cigarettes, shuffling of feet and chewing of nails as each precinct reported the progress of the race. But as Westcott loomed in sight, Morris took her tongue to her promises and "talked home," the winner.

The biggest issue of any race was over a bill that had recently been signed, sealed and delivered. June Conyers became known as "Ten thirty" Conyers because of the bill

Listing Shows Dorms Spent Active Year

The dormitories on campus have been outstanding in various activities this past year. Following, are brief resumes of the functions the dormitories have participated in.

South Cawthon

South Cawthon highlighted its year with a series of weekly teas. Circus, Latin-America, and birthday parties were some of the themes used. A Friday night supper club was organized during the middle of the year by Mary Ellen Martin and continued to function the rest of the year. Serving as president of the dorm was Alice Thorp and the two vice-presidents were Elisabeth Landahl and Marjory Potte.

West Landis and East Landis

LaVerne Jennings was president of West Landis while June McGill and Anibel Kelsey served as vice-presidents. The officers in East Landis were Nancy Day, president, and Jane Shepard and Dale Blair were vice-presidents. Landis won the Homecoming cup for having the best dormitory decorations.

Gilchrist

Gilchrist came in second in the dormitory decorations for the Homecoming weekend. Gilchrist also entered a group in the annual Little Brown Jug sing. Two outstanding social functions were their "April in Paris" fashion show and their "Bali Hai" dance.

Broward

Carolyn Dickson served Broward as president this past year. Among the outstanding things they did this year was a dinner held in honor of one of their foreign students. Broward boasts of having students from Siam, Holland, Japan, China, Korea, Norway, and France.

Senior Hall

Senior Hall won first place in the men's dormitory division for homecoming decorations. They also had a party for underprivileged children at Christmas time. The dorm officers were Roy Chapman, governor and Waymon Jones, lieutenant governor.

Bryan Hall

Bryan's volleyball and bowling teams reached the finals this year. Second semester they chose

Fraternity Men Summarize Activities; Report Achievements, Community Aid

The fraternities on campus have been, for the most part, very active in projects and community aid this past year. Their achievements and individual honors are as follows:

Alpha Tau Omega

In keeping with the precedent set by ATO to replace the infamous "Hell Week" with a popular "Help Week" program, the ATO's completely painted, refurbished and landscaped St Clement's Episcopal Mission in Lloyd, Florida. Both actives and pledges combined in their top project of the year.

Christmas time saw the importation of thirty underprivileged children to the Tau house for a party and lunch. Santa was there and after lunch toys were happily received by the young tots.

In intramurals the ATO's captured only the basketball trophy while being with the "also rans" in the rest of the sports.

Delta Tau Delta

Over at the Delta Shelter they boast of placing first in the homecoming skit for the fraternities and second for the over-all contest. Christmas also saw their annual Alpha Zeta and Delta Tau Delta party for the underprivileged children.

Kappa Alpha

Patsy Gatas carried KA to glory in the IFC queen contest as she walked off with top honors. The K.A.'s staged a Christmas party for the underprivileged children from the Tallahassee area.

Lambda Chi

"Help Week" was also participated in by LC. Their project was the painting of the Capitel Christian Monitor Church. Their intramural golf team proved to be the team to beat as they won the golf trophy.

Phi Delta Theta

The Phi Delts were top this year on campus in the intramurals. They won the over all trophy for the third time to retire the cup. To help their cause along they won the football, track, bowling and swimming championship but the swimming trophy was lost through a protest of an ineligible swimmer. Dot Johnson was their choice in the homecoming contest and won a place on the court.

Phi Kappa Tau

The Phi Taus were the host for their Southeastern Domain conference for the past year. In addition they followed the Pi Kappa Phi's scholasticly to place

Senior Co-eds Turn Scrapbook Pages To Greek Memories at Florida State

Each senior keeps her own scrapbook of college memories, and she who has stood in the Greek files, adds another page to recapture. Along with pledging, initiation, projects, good times, and lasting friendships she may recall most fondly of all—her last year at FSU.

Remember when . . .

Alpha Chi Omega

The Alpha Chi Omegas celebrated their annual "Hera Day" by sending a food basket to a needy family. Among their memoirs the girls will think of the hours spent making fudge for the Campus Chest and they'll re-live their bowling days and the trophy won. Reflections of a Sigma Chi Derby win will linger through the years.

Alpha Delta Pi

The Alpha Delta Pi's entered the Homecoming skit contest and placed in the finals. Then came the Campus Chest and "apple pie for sale." Perhaps their most enjoyable memory is the Christmas party given for the underprivileged children. (Phi Delts were co-sponsors.)

Alpha Gamma Delta

The Alpha Gamma Deltas recall hammers, nails and the opening of their attractive new dining room. They greeted Homecoming in their own fashion—they were co-sponsor for the skit contest. Recently the girls added another award to their collection—compliments of the Sigma Chi Derby.

Alpha Omicron Pi

The Alpha Omicron Pi house brings back scenes of the sorority's State Day. The girls of Woodward Avenue played hostesses to the convention. They have a Sigma Chi Derby race to display on their memory shelf.

Alpha Xi Delta

The Alpha Xi Deltas snapshot album tells the story of a busy, successful Homecoming. The girls won first place in the skit contest, and first place on their bumble bee float. Then . . . house decorations captured third place. The Alpha Xi's reminisce over tennis shoes and raincoats which brought them the over-all Intramurals Cup.

Chi Omega

The seniors of the Chi Omega house recall many midnight lamps and the burning oil which placed them as second best in scholarship. In the heat of summer, the Chi Omegas will eagerly look back to their ice cream party for Campus Chest or the cool afternoons of practice points and a volleyball honor.

Senate Lists Charte Major Achievement

Women Report Year's Events In Legislation

The compulsory Women's Convocation which is usually held every year was cancelled this year by Women's Senate in favor of a Flambeau article. It was the consensus of opinion of this body that the purpose of the convocation which is to review the legislation, the committee work and the progress of the subsidiary organizations of Women's Senate could be carried forth more conveniently to the Women students in an article of this type. The following therefore, is a brief summary of the activities of Women's Senate under the inspiring leadership of June Conyers, vice-president in charge of women's affairs.

THE MOST POPULAR piece of legislation passed by Women's Senate this year was that which extends the closing hour of women's dormitories until 12:30 a.m. on Saturday. This act which will go into effect at the beginning of the fall semester, was among several bills passed by the women's chamber and approved by the Faculty Review Board during the past two semesters.

In order to promote better study habits and consequently higher grade averages among first semester Freshman women, Women's Senate recommended that they be in their dormitories at 10.30 p.m. during first semester. This measure was approved by the Faculty Review Board and will take effect next fall. The following definite study hours were also set forth in this bill: Sunday-Thursday: 7:30 p.m.-9 30 a.m.; Friday-Saturday: 12:30 a.m.-8:30 a.m.

AN ACT which was passed by the Women's Senate and the Faculty Board in February provided that second semester Freshmen having made the Dean's List first semester be granted an additional social week-end. Upperclass women not having made an overall C average and a C average the previous semester will be limited to 6 week-ends and 6 day trips for the semester. This last act will take effect the Fall semester of 1953.

A recommendation that Senior women be granted two extra Senior automatics starting the coming Fall semester was sent to the Faculty Committee last week. Final approval has not been granted as yet.

There have been a number of committees in Women's Senate this year investigating various possibilities for legislation that would benefit women students at Florida State University.

HARRIET LOWE headed a committee which has made possible the installation of additional long distance phones in Jennie Murphree, Gilchrist and Reynolds halls. Charis Coulter, chairman of a committee investigating the possibility of installing cigarette machines in the dorms, stated that Dean Warren is looking into the matter. Dean Warren has also agreed to submit a requisition for the addition of washing machines to the dormitories as the result of the work of a committee headed by Jackie Keaton. Anice Spencer was chairman of the committee to look into the possibilities of extending Saturday night permission to 12:30. Through the work of Joan Haiford, a list of approved appliances has been posted on bulletin boards in the dormitories.

Debates Such Varied Topics As Mail Boxes, Activity Fee

Meeting every Tuesday afternoon in their chambers Longmire Building, the 28 men and women who made the 1952-53 University Senate went about their work the legislative branch of FSU's student government.

Debate this year was held on issues as varied as how many mailboxes there should be on campus to how best to bring the Student Activity Fee under student control. Though the issues were not unusual, the amount of legislation enacted set a record, with ten Constitutional amendments and about a dozen University Statutes.

PERHAPS the greatest distinction of this year's Senate was the approval of a new Constitution or "Charter," to be obtained from the Board of Control, subject to ratification by the Student Body next year.

Several traditionally neglected areas of legislation came under the scrutiny of this year's Senate. An example was the enactment of the Student Body Election Code, which received its first test in this spring's elections.

TWO NEW Cabinet members were added by this year's Senate. The Secretary of Labor was established after three efforts to gain approval of the Faculty Review Board. More recently a Secretary of State was provided for.

The bill affecting the student body the most widely was the Traffic Control Code, rushed through Senate in January in order that the new student Traffic Court could begin operations at the beginning of the second semester.

ANOTHER change made by Senate was the proposal of amendment, recently ratif which changed the name of University Government Ass ation to Student Body. Any who refers to "UGA" is now of date.

Other, less publicized pieces legislation were passed. An ample is the bill passed at final meeting last week wh gave the Funds Committee po to control university solicitati both on campus and downto by cooperation with the Tal hassee Chamber of Commerce

SOME CRITICS have claim that Senate has grown too pow ful in recent years in proport to the other branches of gover ment. This is perhaps due to increased acceptance by Senate its responsibility as the legisla organ of FSU's student bo Whereas in the past it was of left to the executive branch adopt "policies," this year's Se ate more often than not t the initiative and enacted legislation in question.

Men's Senate and Wome Senate, composed of the male a female members of Univers Senate, respectively, and presi over by the Men's Vice-reside and the Women's Vice-Preside also had an active year Me Senate, traditionally far less a tive than the women's group he several meetings and establis the Sophomore Council as o of its projects.

Little Things Are Big As Seniors Reminisce

By PAT COMER

After four years of hard work (?), good wholesome fun and an education of extra-curricular activities, we Seniors are now leaving. As we hurriedly prepare for the graduation ceremonies, we find very little time to really feel sorry that we're leaving the walls of ivy. However, when the rush is over and we are flushed out into the cruel, cruel world, we will then have a chance to reminisce, to really shed tears.

Let's look over the "little" things that made college life so important to us. For instance, we'll never forget the fascination of watching our historic Westcott auditorium being destroyed. (Senior class missed their chance there, should have opened a cold drink stand . . . from the num of people who watched the d struction, we could have made "mint.")

Never to be forgotten, too th romantic serenades at ni when the girls looked their lo liest in pin curlers, mud pa and evening attire, and the bo were at their warbling best.

Then too, we'll remember t pinning ceremonies and the f baths in the fountain with all t gold fish that probably wish th they were barracuda at times.

We mustn't forget our li from weekend to weekend, es to spend our free days in the s only to have it rain.

How about the long perso ality studies and numerous d cussion periods in the Amb House and other munching e tablishments. We learned s didn't we? Of course, no theo was involved, but who cared

We never did get a chance scream in the library to rele our pent-up emotions but so of us did march through as Student Party. Ah, yes, the St dent Party. The Democrats n the Republicans could have do better in their display of pol cal enthusiasm during the rece conventions.

Didn't we have fun, thou when we went on different t in order to miss a few cla (only to find a semi-trailer of homework to do when we l ally returned).

Those extra-curricular activitie however, we really hate to m Wasn't it a shame that we ne were tested on them. There c tainly were enough clubs on ca pus that anyone could join many that the amount of p some students wore would ma

Health Club Gives Evening Fish Fry At College Camp

About thirty members of the Health Education Club, their guests, former graduates majoring in Health Education and the departmental faculty attended a fish fry at Camp Flastocowo Friday.

The group enjoyed fish which food chairman Bob Jones had caught. His wife, with the aid of other wives of the majors, fried the fish and made hush puppies.

Following supper, the group gathered on the edge of the lake for its final meeting of the year. President Sammy Simpson called the meeting to order. He reported that the Health Club had raised $58.88 through the sale of matches for the cancer campaign.

Program chairman Neil Deese called on Dr. Louise Smith, head of the department to introduce the guest speakers for the evening. Miss Lucille Moore, principal of Drummond Park School in Panama City and Jack Mahon, health coordinator for this school, described the excellent health education program which they have been developing this year. Miss Moore explained the values of a health coordinator in an elementary school.

New officers of the Club were elected for the following year: Gordon Johnston, president; Winifred McKnight, vice-president; Bob Fowler, secretary-treasurer.

Miss Wilson Gives Organ Recital Soon

A Senior recital in organ will be presented in the FSU Opperman Music Hall on Thursday evening, May 28 at 8.15 p. m. by Lelagene Wilson, organist. Miss Wilson is a student of Ramona C Beard, associate professor of organ in the School of Music. The recital will be open to the public.

Through the untiring efforts of Reverend Walter K. Morley, Chaplain at Ruge Hall, the Artist Series has grown into a popular event on campus. He has also worked closely with the men students in maintaining the popularity of the Night Cap Hour. This traditional event takes place on one Thursday out of every month at eleven o'clock. Patronize Our Advertisers

Dr. Lawrence Campbell Praises New Instruction

"The development of a program of advertising instruction with Dr. Royal H. Ray as head has been one of our most important advancements this year." said Laurence R. Campbell, dean of Florida State University's School of Journalism when asked to give his views on the progress of that department.

He went on to explain that the new system for teaching advertising is co-sponsored by the School of Business and presented in cooperation with the Department of Art and the School of Home Economics.

ANOTHER "FIRST" in the advertising line this year was a short course held in Clearwater which is thought to be the first of its kind to be given by air-commuting instructors. A similar course is now being held in Jacksonville "Air Profs" for the courses are Dr. Ray, Mr. Rudolph A. Jegart, Associate Professor of Art; and Dr. W. Bruce Weale, Associate Professor of Marketing.

The installation of a modern photography laboratory in the Lange House has also been a progressive step this year. Dr. Zell F. Mabee is in charge of teaching classes in basic photography to anyone who is interested and courses in press photography to the more advanced students.

ONE OF THE highlights of the year was a study by a group of journalism students under Dr. Sidney Kobre of the adequacy and fairness of the news coverage of the presidential election. Similar studies are now being made of the news coverage of the state legislature.

Looking to the future Dean Campbell said th[illegible] major attention is being giv[illegible] the development of a [illegible] instruction in radio and [illegible] news reporting, adv[illegible] and related fields. A study is now being made of the problem of providing the personnel and facilities necessary for putting such a program in action.

THE DEPARTMENT is also looking forward to the return to the staff next year of Dr. Richard B. Eide who has been serving in Norway as a United States Public Affairs Officer for the Department of State.

The School of Journalism now has an enrollment of about forty-five upper division students. There are one or two state universities in the South that have larger enrollments in their journalism departments but FSU has more instructors of professorial rank than any other school of its kind in the Southeast. It is thought also that this department has a broader journalism program than most Southern schools and that the facilities here compare favorably with other schools in this region.

THIS SUMMER, from June 14 to June 28, Professor William R. Slaughter will direct the second FSU Southern School Press Institute for high school leaders in journalism. The two-week session offers students a chance to study either in the newspaper division or the yearbook division while enjoying social life on a college campus and tours of places of scenic, cultural, and historical interest.

A number of short courses will also be offered for high school teachers who are interested in newspaper and yearbook production.

Joan Holley Presents Concerts Featuring Dr. Dohnanyi's Works

Although Ernst von Dohnanyi is now teaching advanced piano students in Florida State University's School of Music, his latest compositions are reaching listeners in his native Hungary through the playing of one of his FSU special students, Joan Holley of Miami, now on concert and radio tour in Europe.

"She has great courage," Mrs. Dohnanyi said of Miss Holley upon receiving a letter from her in the Netherlands, adding, "She expects to brush the Iron Curtain personally in places like Vienna, and she will certainly penetrate it with my husband's music via radio."

MISS HOLLEY wrote of her recent successful concerts in London and The Hague. On both programs she played three of Dohnanyi's 1951 compositions: Burletta, Nocturne—Cats on the Roof, and Perpetuum Mobile.

That she was invited to play by the British Broadcasting Corporation is testimony of the hit she made at Wigmore Hall in London. She was unable to accept because of previous engagements on the Continent, but hopes to return to London before her trip home in November, and perhaps will have another chance with BBC.

IN COMMENTING on her Hague concert, the Haagsche Courant wrote, "Joan Holley is the young American pupil of the 75 year old Ernst von Dohnanyi, a worthy pupil of a great master . . . The best thing came at the end of her concert with the four Dohnanyi pieces, three of them new, followed by the familiar and ever attractive Capriccio in F minor. These she played with insight and understanding. The three new pieces show the master still possesses his great gift for writing."

Miss Holley is booked to play an hour of Dohnanyi rhapsodies in Munich over Radio Free Europe and The American Military Radio. Doubtless her playing will be heard by many old friends and admirers of Dohnanyi. Born in Pressburg, he was director of the Budapest Conservatory and conducted the Budapest Philharmonic Orchestra before World War I. Later, in the 1930's he was general director of the Hungarian National Radio.

IN OCTOBER, Miss Holley plans to resume her personal appearance in concerts when the season begins again after the summer lull. She expects to make a tour of Austria, giving concerts in Vienna, Linz, Salzburg, Graz and Innsbruck, then perhaps go to London again on her way home in November. She plans to return to FSU for further study with Dohnanyi.

Professor States Rights Of Students To Think

(The following article on the "Rights of the College Student to Think" appeared recently in the Iowa State Daily, student newspaper at Iowa State University. Permission to reprint the text comes through the Associated Collegiate Press service.)

By Dr. Emerson B. Shielder, Department of Religious Education, Iowa State University

THE PURPOSE of a college education is to teach students how to think, not what to think.

Education should not equip one with a set of ready-made conclusions, but should equip one with the skill to collect evidence, organize it and evaluate it for himself, to reach sound conclusions.

TO INTERPRET education as teaching the student what to think not only violates the student's right as a free human being to think for himself, it also assumes that the teacher already has the final truth.

Hence, within the classroom situation, students, teachers, and the public outside the classroom must maintain a careful distinction between advocating support for a position and examining the facts about a position.

THIS MEANS that the student must be confronted in books and by the teacher with the total range of data and ideas which must be coped with in reaching conclusion.

Some of these ideas are dangerous, for the world is full of dangerous ideas. But to expose the student to these ideas — among others—in the educational situation which demands that the student think for himself is a very different kind of situation from that which expects the student to accept the teacher's views.

THE LATTER situation condemns the student to ignorance because of the fear that he cannot be trusted to think fully, deeply and honestly.

Perhaps nowhere in the college curriculum is this distinction between propagandizing and informing more crucial than in religion and philosophy, because the concepts dealt with in (these) courses reach the fundamental articles of faith upon which individuals and nations build their lives.

THERE IS no realm of human activity where it is more dangerous to be ignorant or prejudiced. We must not let fear of free minds condemn our students to the sin of ignorance.

The fundamental question is not what books are used . . . The question is: What concepts of education prompts their choice and use, and what concept of education prompts the inquiry of the materials used?

Letters to the Editor

Dances Continue

Dear Editor:

The chairmen of the informal dance committee would like to thank the dormitories, sororities and fraternities for their cooperation with the committee. Without your help these dances would not have been possible.

The dances were experimental and have been so successful that we hope to continue them again next year.

The last dance of the year will be held on Saturday May 30 from seven to eight thirty. The "Ravens" orchestra will play for this dance.

Thanks

I want to take this chance to offer belated thanks to you for electing me Senior Senator.

Studies and extra-curricular activities made it almost impossible for me to put on much of a campaign, so I have not made any specific promise for the coming year. Campaign promises do not generally mean much, though, and I believe most of you who supported me know my desires for a more responsible student government.

So I include my promises to do my best in the Senate along with my thanks.

Sincerely,
Bruce Galphin

Students Accept Korean War According to Cornell Study

American college students are coming to take the demands of the Korean war in a quiet matter-of-fact way, according to a study made by Cornell University and released by the Associated Collegiate Press.

The conclusion is based on responses from about 4,600 students attending all different colleges and universities. The report says that student morale has improved markedly since 1951.

Morale was poor at that time, says the report, "because of the uncertainty of military service, and the generally unsettled atmosphere . . ."

The current situation shows a different picture. A majority of students say they will return to college if called to the service before completing their academic program. Many students are doing better scholastic work than they did before the start of mobilization.

The report says students are facing the draft realistically, and most of them realize that a student deferment is not a permanent one. Seventy-nine per cent of those questioned agree with the statement that "military service will probably be good for me in some ways."

Prospects of military service seem to make good grades important. About half the students questioned say they now attach more importance to good grades. Many of the seniors feel that the draft-pressure has made it harder for them to study.

Only 10 per cent of the students say they have changed their courses of study to fit military considerations. But almost twice as many freshmen as seniors indicate that military service was an important factor in choosing their major.

Summing up the study, the New York Times declares, "This much appears evident to the researchers:

"Being kept in the dark, under contradictory, unsettled policies, constitutes one of the biggest threats to morale. Such conditions provide a breeding ground for rumor, insecurity and anxiety.

"This warning is given: Should present regulations concerning students be rescinded without substitution of an equally clear-cut alternative policy there is little doubt that restlessness, anxiety and futility return to the college campuses.

"The absence of these symptoms today attests to the importance of a definite selective service policy and an informed student body."

Other schools disagree with the conclusions reached by Cornell, however.

The Heights Daily News at New York University, is more than sceptical about reports that college students have adjusted to prospect of the draft.

Taking issue with the optimistic Cornell study, the News declares, "In our own dark countenances, and in the inky-black souls of our drafted friends and comrades, just one question can be read: 'Who the heck answered these questionnaires, anyhow?' Let's see this 'typical student. . .'

"For us, service in the armed forces is a matter of much concern and much worry. As for it being a duty, well, we acknowledge the debt, but we sure as heck hate the tax-collector," which i sthe truest, healthiest American attitude we know of."

It is really difficult to say whether American students have "adjusted" to the problem of the draft. From our experience on the Florida State campus, we can say that men students are quieter, in the sense of being less destructive. Whether this results from acceptance or dull resignation, we cannot say.

● SENIORS, FAREWELL

The Moving Finger Writes, and having writ, Moves on; nor all your Piety nor Wit shall lure it back to cancel half a line; Nor all your Tears wash out a Word of it.

It's almost over. Four years of eating, sleeping, and thinking Plato's wisdom and Khayyam's Persian philosophies. Four years of politic fever, organization tappings and hundreds of meetings — some compulsory. Four years of dormitory P. J. parties, serenading and rah-rah weekends. Four years of work and study, and cramming for final exams And four years of security . . . All gone.

You are writing "finis' to one record book and beginning the early pages of another. College has served as a prologue to the play, as a rehearsal ground for mistakes, as a shock absorber. When freshmen, you learned to stand on your two feet. You learned a tough lesson—that there were others in the world more important than you. Faux pas numbered many as did crucifying situations and agonizing results. You worked hard and played hard. Now it is time to move on.

You face, in a little more than a week, opportunity untouched, challenge unlimited—a future. You become the builder; the years ahead, the clay; and your education, the tool. As you advance you can draw an architectural design, mold something firm and good, or you can putter aimlessly and let the current of the years carry you in their drift. However, the ends may be achieved; you are privileged to have a choice.

The mature minds of the day say you're scared. They say you're young and idealistic and pampered.

And what's worse, you're without direction, they say. These words echo from ivy covered halls of the year 1940 when college graduates pushed through the same "easy come, easy go" prophesies and waded through a world war clearing up the checker board for our next moves. Of course you're scared. But you have an adhesive determination to clear away the uncertainty and indecisiveness. It stands in your heritage. It remains to you to find the faith in your understandings.

You are facing a world of reality, of sharp facts, you say. When you fling away the mortar boards, you say farewell, finally, to college sentiment and its vaulting spirit. Don't be too hasty. Time may come when you wish to drag old ideals from the attic, dust them off and give the retired sentiment full rein. When sensitivity gives away to stark mechanism, you spend something you can ill afford.

Your college years have been prolific. Just as you take something with you when you leave in a little more than one week, something of you remains behind. You and others like you are embodied in this campus. Little unobtrusive marks become stepping stones for future classes. And your successors, through their naive dependence, force you, at last, to lead.

In this—your soon goodbye—you stand independent; but you do not stand alone. Thousands feel the same excitement and fear, the same fears you do. Thousands too, are with your friends at Florida State who feel a sadness at your leaving and yet a pride in the example you have set for them to follow.

Farewell, Seniors, and Congratulations. We look to tomorrow; we look to you.

● FLAMBEAU THANKS

Each organization has its behind the scene workers, its standbyes, the people who do the essential jobs without credit or glory. On the newspaper it is the Business Staff. Without the business manager and solicitors, without the advertising, and without the money, there is no publication.

Because this is the final issue of the year, it seems fitting that we pay tribute to the Business Staff of the Flambeau, and to the driving force behind that staff—Business Manager, Joan Etheridge.

Not only have she and her staff kept this newspaper in the black for two years, but they have extended themselves above and beyond the line of duty. They have solicited ads six days a week from the opening of school in September without once falling down. They have received little acknowledgement for the fine work accomplished.

At this time the Editorial Staff would like to extend appreciation and congratulations for the excellent job done.

This also seems an appropriate time to thank our advertisers for making our paper possible.

We look forward to another successful year in 1953-54, with your continued support and cooperation.

● CARS REMAIN

A resolution introduced into the state legislature which would have prohibited freshmen and sophomores from using cars on campus has been defeated, according to James E. Keezel, one of the co-introducers.

The resolution, which was mistakenly called a bill in a previous Flambeau, was written with several thoughts in mind. It pointed out that traffic was congested on campus, that large areas had to be devoted to parking, and that the state had to foot the bill for such additional expenses as campus traffic policemen and student traffic courts.

The resolution also stated that the academic records of car-owning freshmen and sophomores indicated the use of cars to be detrimental to studies.

The Flambeau at the time made comment on the resolution, pointing out that it felt there were better ways of solving the traffic problem.

The Flambeau wishes to express its thanks to Representative Keezel for his continued interest in the campus and for his letter to us explaining the fate of the resolution.

Summers Reviews Activities for Year

It is never easy to say good-by to the things and people you love, but this is not the end for us but just the beginning of many wonderful years. This year has been one of the most enriching experiences of my life. I feel the most important thing student government did was lay the foundation for student control of the student activity fee through the new constitution for student government which has been discussed with the Attorney General Richard Ervin and President Doak Campbell. This new constitution also gives additional power in several other fields, such as the review power of the administration and faculty over all things passed by the Senate of student government.

We like to think of the problems of our government as compared to a city of 8,000 people. If this is done it will be realized that the task of running Student Government is gigantic. Our name has been changed, for we are no longer an association between the faculty, administration and students, but we are now known as the Student Government of Florida State University. This was just passed by your vote.

Every city in the modern world has cars and with cars we have traffic problems. With the new traffic court set up we have the cooperation of the Business Office and the Policeman. This service has saved the student around $15 dollars for each ticket he has received, for, if we didn't have our student Traffic Court, the ticket holder would have to go to the County Court. We could not go to the city court because we are on state property. In the county court one must pay the court costs and the fine also.

This year we have had our first cabinet. The members of this body have done a great job by having forums each week over WFSU, reviewing the organizations, holding all elections for the campus and making a recreation booklet for all social chairman of the school. It has also done a good job by helping to make the budget for the student activity fee, working on school spirit by helping to get male cheerleaders, setting up plans for a summer student government, achieving better understanding between the student and his employer on campus, obtaining a speaker from the University of Virginia for our Honor Day and planning to name the streets of the campus.

The final start of political parties has brought new life and power to student government. We need to continue with two live, and active organizations, for this is the life of student government. Someone once said you can no more separate politics from democracy than sea from creation. Students, do not be afraid of it, 'but get in and help these groups out', then you might know how they are run first hand instead of from a book.

We have been on many Career Days all over the state and have had a good time telling the high school students what a great university we have here at Florida State University. Since the legislature has been in session we have helped with the "Know your Government" program which has shown the high school students the state government in action.

With the help of many people the prices in the dining hall were lowered. The campus has given blood to Korea twice. Our Campus Chest collected over $1500 dollars since it was the only time the students were asked to contribute, the almost weekly charity drives were completely cut out

We didn't have the Gallop Poll but we had one even better, for

Carothers Outlines Executive Program

Fourteen points have been announced by President of the Student Body Milton Carothers as the projected program of the executive branch of the student government for next year.

Heading the list is the proposed Student Body charter, which won the final approval of the University Senate this week. "We hope to have the assistance and cooperation of the faculty in obtaining the approval of the Board of Control," stated the newly-installed president.

THIS CHARTER includes as its major provisions a permanent basis for student government, since it would be approved by the State of Florida through the Board of Control; student control of the Student Activity Fee greater freedom for the Student Senate; more clearly stated powers for the student courts and a guarantee of freedom of expression for the student publications.

"Until this new constitution is approved," said President Carothers, "we will work for greater student representation on all committees that handle student money."

Another point proposed by the new president was establishment of a working student discount service. "We would work through the Chamber of Commerce to obtain at least a week in each semester in which students could make purchases at substantially reduced prices" said Carothers.

ANOTHER POINT announced by Carothers was the contacting of southeastern universities in order to form a student body association of schools of like size and problems.

The honor system is another of the new president's points. "We should acquaint the students with the honor system and then find out if they actually want one," he stated.

The new Chief Executive also expressed this concern that rules and regulations be more clearly stated and fully published in the Paw-Wow or some other booklet.

A JOINT COMMITTEE of Senate and court members to study the judicial system was another proposal of the 1953-54 Student Body President.

Another joint committee of IFC, Pan-Hell and Student Government to work toward the reinstatement of coast parties was also proposed.

An added proposal to increase efficiency of student government work was to install voting machines for use in student body elections. Such a device would do away with unnecessary recounts.

PRESIDENT CAROTHERS also stated that he saw a definite need for a revision of Freshman Orientation Week and the Freshman convocations. Plans are already underway in this direction.

Also in the program for next year are the continuation of such projects as naming the campus streets, reading the Men's and Women's Senate minutes at University Senate meetings and investigating the possibility of having male cheerleaders.

The new cabinet, which is to be submitted to the University Senate today for approval, will be working closely with the president in carrying out the above program.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, the legal adviser to the president, will hand down opinions on the laws to any member of the student body who requests such information. The Secretary of Elections, who supervises the elections of the Student Body, will work on the voting machine project. The Secretary of Organizations has the duties of investigating and making recommendations concerning proposed new student organizations.

The Secretary of Finance, besides his other duties, will investigate the possibility of a student discount system. A Calendar committee under the supervision of the Secretary of Recreation, will formulate a workable calendar with as few conflicts as possible. All forums conducted by the student body, will be ar-

SEMINOLE SCENES

ALMA MATER NOSES OUT HOUND DOG

By FRANCES CAWTHON

Pifflehorf in cap and gown looked hard into the mirror. He tried scowling, smiling, he-hawing and just plain serious poises. He liked the scowling one best. That most fitted an AB in political science. By darn if he didn't look impressive. He backed off from the dresser and turned slowly from side to side, watching out of the corner of his eye.

Four long years. Getting out of this hole. A man of responsibility. A bona fide citizen instead of just a Seminole. He forgot his dignity and grinned.

"How much is that doggie in the window?! ARF, ARF!!" His song was answered by a wolf howl on the other side of the door, and Spats came in.

He grabbed Spats by the neck and happily started shaking him. "I'm quiting this campus, quiting, do you hear?" He let Spats go and did a Fred Astaire on on the desk.

Spats rubbed his throat. "So and I, but it seems like you're heading for a post-graduate course in another state institution I know of. Come down off the table; you look like my great grandmother in her nightgown."

Pifflehorf threw his arm in front of his face, pecked over the long black dangling sleeve and did a batman dive off the desk. "Holy cow, these things are hot!" he said. "But it's worth it. I'll sweat to death all night, but we'll be getting outa this hole, Spats, ole boy."

Spats sat down on the bed. "Yeah," he said.

"Whatsa matter with you? You don't seem happy. After four long years of tests and term papers . . . HOW MUCH IS THAT HOUND-DOG IN THE WINDER!!!" Pifflehorf was off again.

"Aren't you gonna miss it a little bit?" Spats asked.

"Naw, I'm too glad to get out . . . the one with the mangy tail . . . !"

"We've gone through a lot at this place, though," Spats said wistfully. "Seems like home. I can remember coming here in '49 and sleeping out at the ole campus westward.

" . . . is that doggie in the window, oh do say that doggie's for sale . . !"

"For gosh sake, buy that mutt and get it over with! . . . Say, remember that big prof we had in class our Soph year? Whatta card."

Pifflehorf came over and sat down by Spats. "Yeah. And remember the time we were 849'ers. Whatta ball! Girls were giving us parties like mad."

"Sure, remember that night, too, when we . . ."

PARTY OFFERED CONSTRUCTIVE CRITICISM

By BRUCE GALPHIN

The desire to avoid criticism is a natural enough one, when considered from a purely selfish point of view, but seen in a broader sense, criticism is necessary to prevent the stagnation of a society.

The ability to criticise the powers that be is one of the principal things which distinguishes a democratic from a totalitarian government, and it should be one of the things we treasure most, yet for a variety of reasons we all too often are afraid to exercise that freedom

Here at Florida State one of the things most sorely in need of self-criticism by the students is our political party system, but the voices raised against its faults have been barely audible. And when adverse comment was prepared for publication in the student newspaper, there were those who were horrified that students whom the party had helped elect were going to "bite the hand that fed them."

How far we have fallen from even lip-service to democratic idealism! How unaware we are that the only way to preserve freedom in the long run is to understand it and actively, fervently, exercise it!

In one sense the demand for "party loyalty" can be a reasonable one. Namely, it is logical for an organized group with definitely stated goals to expect members of its group to agree to those general precepts or get out. Such is the basis of any intelligent political party system. Even so, a man who fails to attack what he deems to be unwise procedures in obtaining the party goals or even a wandering away from them, is that much less an idealist and that much more a party hack

Here on this campus, though, we do not even have a choice of parties or of goals. The Student party has become such an omnibus of politicians that it could not possibly represent a solid point of view. It is particularly incumbent upon party members, then, to say clearly the things that need to be said.

The Student party of FSU has become unfortunately analogous to the Communist party of Russia in two important respects

First of all, it is the only party This results from the fact that it started a band-wagon appeal which was well-nigh irresistible Students altogether too often failed to consider whether they agreed with the stated policies of the party or whether it was wise to build a monolith, but rushed aboard the fast-moving vehicle to get elected.

Clearly, another party is needed both to provide healthy competition and to represent the po of view of many people now the Student party.

Second, the Student part has shifted the responsibility o choosing student governmen leaders from the hands of th many to the hands of the fe

It is true that the studen body as a whole eventually d the actual electing, but they i general had no choice; the se lection had already been ar ranged by a handful of part delegates.

And those delegates were ve often not reperesentative of th supposed constituents' wish The horse-trading that went at the conventions was appalli Delegates were promising ri and left to vote for people th didn't even know in order buy votes for their own spec candidates. Obviously, a syste of pre-convention primaries needed so that members of groups represented at the co vention may have a voice naming the candidates their de gates should support.

The above criticisms are n minor ones. Whether or not party grows rotten depends up the extent to which the fau are corrected. And since t Student party hold almost major offices, the art of se criticism is going to have to practiced broadly.

CAMPUS CARAVAN

COLUMNIST FORECASTS REUNION OF 2003

By BEVERLY LACAYO

Another year, another class, and more goodbyes . . This is one class, however, of whom we have not heard the last. My guess is that fifty years from now not only will Florida State University be hearing from their great alumni, they also will be surprised to know the changes which will have gone on here since they left.

So with this in mind let us drop in on a group of oldsters visiting the campus in the year 2003

If the students got out their old year books they could recognise the old characters as the following members of the class of fifty-three:

Mary Ruth Summers: who will have just come from the fortieth annual convention of the A.S.A. (African Students Association) which she organized while a Presbyterian Missionary in the Belgian Congo.

Bill Dunn: who has by this time decided to make the Army a career (they decided to make him a four star general since he gave them their biggest fight).

June Tate: who has just retired from being Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to come back to F.S.U. to get her Ph.D. in Political Science.

Bob Ryals: who is newly elected President of the United Nations (a purely nominal office with running hot and cold wars . . . several of which have happened already).

Jan Arbogast: who has just announced her retirement from her Television show "The Chatterbox" in order to manufacture and endorse a new line of low cut gowns. (Faye Emerson's comment: Her Hooper rating was never as big as mine!)

Al Pierce: who is a recent Nobel Prize winner as a result of his literary achievements as Editor of the Comic Weekly supplement to the Sunday papers.

Sue Saxon: who has just published her 134th book entitled "The Sub-subdivision of organic reaction to microscopic algae and the Psychological effects on the Turtle egg."

Bob Ducker: who will be glorying as the first American clergyman to be chosen the Arch Bishop of Canterbury by the King of England. His acceptance speech is being published by McGraw Hill in bi-monthly installments for the next five years.

Jo Nell Proctor: who is the recently elected President of CLOSET KEY, a national honorary for people with the juciest family skeletons.

Bobby Drake: who has finally succeeded in putting the Vegetarian party on its feet (they hope to sweep the national elections in the fall).

Ellen Avis: who has made her second million by endorsing "Old Granddad" and "Four Roses" while president of the W.C.T.U.

Ted Steinmeyer: who is the famed producer of such Hollywood colossals as "God Forbid," "Flying Low," "Grandma goes to F.S.U." (all in Technicolor)

Sally Kennedy: who has just completed a world tour of public appearances along with the showing of some of her old films (unfortunately filmed in the day of two dimensional movies).

Showing the crew around campus was none other than Peggy Moore, retiring celebrated liberal Dean of Women at Florida State.

The set up which they see on campus is vaguely familiar, but some how different from their day.

Student Government is slightly more powerful than it used to be Directing the University is the President of the Student Body, with three administrative assistants, the vice-Presidents in charge of Legislative Affairs, Men's Affairs, and Women's Affairs. These in turn delegate some of their authority to the Dean of Student Welfare, the Dean of Men and the Dean of Women, respectively.

A Faculty Senate is allowed to operate, so that they may learn parliamentary procedures, and make recommendations which will be reviewed by the Student Committee on Faculty Affairs.

No drinking of alcoholic Beverages will be allowed among faculty and Administration. Students are not encouraged to drink liquor at other than the Wednesday afternoon dormitory cocktail parties, but may do so at their own discretion.

The President of the Student Body appoints a committee on Higher Education which advises the legislature on any improvements the University needs (one suggestion: an annex to the Periodical room of the Library for the best comic books of the month).

All salaries for Student officials are paid from the Student Activity Fee which has been raised to $100 per student per month to cover administrative details.

As to the Academic life, there is more life and less academic. The classroom week begins Tuesday (to eliminate d nothing Mondays) and ends Wednesday at 12:00 noon (travel on weekends).

Since it is felt that the st dents are mature enough to stud without the incentive of grade grading and examinations ha been dropped and a degree is gi en out at the end of a four ye stay upon application for one.

Unnecessary course such Written Communication (th radio, telephone, and Televisio is good enough), Speech (much talking going on any way), and Math 105 (we already have adding machines) have been replaced by Sun bathing 101, driving with on hand 206, and Coast Parti 385, all with compulsary La

The social life is great Weekly formals are held at t Suwanne Room with funds provided by contributions of the Professors who felt that students worked too hard and needed so form of relaxation

The campus has by this tim expanded and the "centrally" located buildings are at Alligator point. All classes are held at the beach, but student wishing to come into Tallahassee may do so provided they return to the coast by 7:38 P.M.

Two oldsters of the crow Summers and Dunn, have on one comment to make. "I sa aren't you letting the childre take on a little bit too much responsibility?"

Dr. Zilsel Suspended By House Committe

Dr. Paul R. Zilsel, assistan professor of physics at the University of Connecticut, has bee suspended for refusing to tell house investigating committ whether he was a Communist between 1946 and 1948

Dr. Zilsel said he is not no a Communist nor was he one the years 1949 through 1953. B he refused to answer about th years prior to that.

Commented the Connecticu Campus: "It would be highly unfortunate if the board of trustee will hold a man accountable fo former beliefs which he has regretted.

". . . One gets a feeling of utte frustration and futility as on sees the man, caught helpless . . . Some day it may be a crim to have been a member of th Democratic or Republican party."

Sports Chatter

By CLYDE WARD
Flambeau Sports Editor

Another year ends at ye olde alma mater. Another r of wins, losses, headaches, thrills, chills, nailbiting all the things that go along with watching the gar- and gold gladiators give their sweat and blood for glory of the proud name of Seminole.

Sometimes it looked as if the losses turned up with e frequency than the wins, but, averaged together, teams didn't do too badly.

WITH THE football team, results were nothing short pathetic. They set up a couple of "firsts" that they be anything but proud of. This was the first year the Seminoles have lost a game in Campbell Stadium, even worse, the first time we've lost a homecoming e since they started in '47.

It's an accepted rule for teams to pick an easy foe homecoming. (For instance, look who Ga. Tech play- and FSU is no exception. But the Purple Hurricanes n't go according to form. Could be they didn't know was our homecoming, or maybe they got no respect for alumni.

ABOUT the only reason to offer for our almost win- season is the fact that the boys were fired up at the ng times. Against Ga. Tech, they lighted all boilers charged in with a full head of steam, while against smaller teams, they looked like a big, clumsy elephant ging with a panther. Out of this nightmare, they naged to salvage one win and a tie, at the expense Wofford and Stetson.

So the season ended, with the same old cry familiar all teams that have just completed a lousy season— st wait'll next year."

WITH THE ENTRANCE of basketball season, things ked a little better. With a couple of real, honest-to- odness miracles, Coach Kennedy's Redskins managed pull in at the finish line with a 11-11 mark. One of se miracles came in the person of Ham Wernke, who ke all our scoring records and paved the way for most the victories.

In baseball, things looked better still with the Spike- ers being the only major sport team to win more games n it lost. They finished the season with a 13-10-1 ord and, in the process, turned out at least one player get statewide recognition. Big John Cuesta, freshman, de the all-state team in his first year of collegiate base- l. Wally Higginbotham, who is also a freshman, had good year, so the '54 team should have good material to ld on.

FSU MADE the best showing in the minor sports, such volleyball, tennis, and swimming. Volleyball came in th 20 wins with half as many losses. They also entered eral tournaments in which they made good showings. e tennis team won 15 and lost 2 for a new season ord for Florida State tennis teams. The swimming m had the best won-lost record in the South with 7-1.

"Cooter" Mills, who tied Cuesta for batting honors s season, will manage the Tallahassee Capitols this mmer. "Cooter" is planning to enter them in the Fla. ate semi-pro tourney in July so it should be a good spot some of the summer-school athletes.

WITH THIS LAST issue, CHATTER will be silent for ree months or so, until September comes around with otball again. So, 'till then, Au Revoir.

Dr. Don Veller, Florida State University's golf coach, will leave Monday to attend a two-week course on economic mobilization at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville.

The course will be conducted by the 14th Air Force. Veller, who holds the rank of major in the Air Force Reserve, will be on active duty during the 14-day period.

THE FSU Roundtable and UGA Forum brought the students the issues of campus government and campus activities.

The radio station had a fine morning show to wake up to. The Dreambuster had the top tunes and twinkling rhythms to start the day off right.

THE SPECIAL programs during the year included the Governor's Inauguration Ball and the Sandspur Dance. The first Jazz concert at FSU was heard over the remote broadcasting facilities of WFSU.

WFSU was starting to coast to the end of a successful year with new shows like Bacon and Greens, Hymn Time and Jazz For You when the student radio station was notified that we were broadcasting beyond our campus limits. We could not remedy the situation overnight so we had to sign off the air until the trouble could be fixed.

THE RADIO station went ahead and elected new officers to plan for next year's broadcasting. Rick Hutto was elected station manager succeeding Margaret Parham who has done a wonderful job during the past year. Rick met with Mr. Roy Flynn, the campus station's faculty adviser, and other interested parties to plan what WFSU would be doing in the future.

Mr. Flynn says the radio station has a "clean slate" with the Federal Communications Commission. Rick has announced tentative plans for the student radio station to introduce a new type of broadcasting, low power FM.

Name of DiMaggio Fades in Baseball

BY HAL Le VAY

END OF AN ERA:

Dom DiMaggio was a ball player, who had all the small and marvelous skills of the great outfielder. The centerfielder who crouched sideways, his hands on his knees, as he waited for the pitch to be thrown, loped after fly balls with the elegance of the proud. The man's body seemed guided by the course of the ball. He, like his brother, Joe, was gracefully blase, as though obvious haste might be called an error by the scorer. The DiMaggios played centerfield with a beautiful tidiness.

They, Joe and Dom, were the best, and knowing this they had no reason to prove it with the lurid slyness inferior outfielders call showmanship. The difference was, Joe had the power and hit the longer ball. Dom was a competent lead-off man who in '46, his finest year, hit .318. They were both reserved men, Joe and Dom, distant without being hostile, who have an appreciation of dignity.

The game of baseball, as Joe and Dom DiMaggio understood it, is a sport you play every day of the season if you are able. It is another game if you watch it from the dugout. So Dom is through with baseball because he couldn't perform regularly. It was not the spiteful impulse of an aging player, resentful of the kid who takes his job, but a matter Dom has thought about for a long time.

When Dom made a hard catch the Boston baseball journalists had a chant that went:

"Better than his brother Joe,
"Dom-in-ick Dee-Mag-Gi-oh."

I don't think Dom was better, but it was pretty close at that. The bet gave Joe the decision. All the DiMaggios, including Vince, who couldn't hit breaking stuff, were great fielders.

Yes, it is truly the end of an era. How many of you of the younger generation remember baseball without a DiMaggio?

HEAR THROUGH ONE TIN EAR:

Batting better than .340, Cal Abrams, Pirate outfielder, has given up trying to pull the ball, and is letting his hits fall where they may . . . THE ROCKY Marciano-Joe Walcott fight (?) proved that no matter what the fight fan saw on television, he had to read the newspapers to get an accurate account of what happened . . . STAN (THE MAN) Musial, Cardinal star, insists "the Dodgers can't win it." Does Walter O'Mally, Dodger president agree with "The Man?" . . PAIOE TO Mr. Eisenhower, the last golf-playing president was Warren G. Harding . . . DAN PARKER writes in True Magazine, "I think boxing stinks." For some reason we agree . . . AND THAT'S the three-o mark for this year; See you in the fall.

AXD Takes Trophy

Alpha Xi Delta added another trophy to their collection, by taking the overall trophy in the intramural program.

In order to win the overall trophy, one team must have placed first in at least one sport and second in another. The Alpha Chi Coeds won the trophy by being either winner or runner-ups in three out of four sports events.

The Alpha Xi girls came out on top in basketball, while being runner-ups in softball and bowling.

Home Folks

Florida football patrons will have ample opportunity to see the 1953 Florida State University football team in action. The Seminoles play eight of their 10 games in the Sunshine State. Only two of the Tribe's 10 games will be played out of state, FSU meets Mississippi Southern in Hattiesburg and plays Louisiana Tech in Ruston.

ranged and presided over by the Secretary of Forums.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE will see that student government activities are publicized to the students through the Flambeau and to the public through the Public Relations Office. This position will also entail the management of relations with intercollegiate organizations. The Secretary of Labor will study university student employment policies and act as a liaison officer between the administration and the students. The Secretary of Honor will work for the improvement of the honor system as stated in the preceding program.

President Carothers concluded the outline of his program by stating that, "with the wholehearted support of the students, student government will be able to make this next year the best in the school's history. Let's start the coming year by showing the school spirit our football team deserves and by maintaining this same spirit in all phases of University life."

Seminole Shorts:

Morgan Wins Honor

Jack Morgan, Florida State University's freshman first baseman from Altoona (Pa.), won the top Seminole field honors during the season just ended.

In 17 games, Morgan handled 167 chances and made only one error for a .994 fielding percentage.

Morgan, who throws and bats from the left side, came to FSU as a result of a news item about the Seminoles he read in a Pennsylvania newspaper.

Netter Will Teach

Jack Egan, captain of the 1953 Florida State University tennis team, will serve as a tennis instructor this summer in the Ocala (Fla.) Recreation Department. Egan is a junior from Bradenton.

Grid Cards Ready

Bill-fold size schedule cards imprinted with the 1953 Florida State University grid slate, ticket information, are available and are being distributed by the Sports Publicity Office. Individuals and firms interested in obtaining a supply are requested to write the FSU Sports Publicity Office.

Control Artist

Jim Atwood, Florida State University's freshman hurler from Hollywood (Fla.), walked only four batters in 28 innings he pitched this Spring. That gave Atwood, who hurled a five-hit shutout against Amherst in his first college start, the fine average of allowing only one walk per seven innings of mound duty.

Fracassi and Mize Place in AAU Meet

Florida State's Joe Fracassi vaulted 12 feet, 6 inches to tie for first place in the star-studded Georgia AAU track and field meet in Atlanta Saturday night. Fracassi wound up his fourth varsity year with the Seminoles by sharing honors with Bryant of Mississippi.

Dick Mize, who captained FSU to a 3-3 record in dual competition this year, ran third in a sizzling open quarter to Auburn's SEC champion Don Johnson, who clocked 48.5.

Mize, also wearing the garnet and gold for the last time, was clocked in 49.7, which was the best timing he had ever had.

Sophomore Ken Jarrett, third member of coach Ken Miller's squad to make the trip, was sixth in a fast two-mile run. All the meet times were good, paced by a 1.54 which Tennessee's Frank Albertson rang up in the 880.

Auburn claimed team honors from some of the South's best cinder squads. However, the Gators, Southeastern Conference champs, were only lightly represented, and Tallahassee's J. Papa Hall did not jump.

Mills Wants Talent For Baseball Club

Billy "Cooter" Mills, who played rightfield last season for the Seminole nine, will manage the Tallahassee Capitols baseball club this summer.

Mills, who shared batting honors with catcher-first baseman John Cuesta, is planning to enter his club in the Florida State semi-pro tourney sometime in July.

He is interested in rounding up talent for the club, as the team roster is not yet definitely made out. Anyone interested in playing this summer should contact Mills at the Sigma Nu house.

Don Boda Sets Mark For Singles Wins With Tribe Netters

Don Boda, Florida State University's senior tennis standout from Tallahassee, set a school record for singles victories this Spring.

Playing the No. 2 position on Coach Don Loucks' Seminole team, Boda lost only one singles match in 17 starts. His only setback was a 2-6, 1-6 loss at the hands of Rollins College's E. Garcia.

The only departing senior from the FSU squad which won 15 matches and lost only two, Boda also shared doubles honors. Boda and Hal Schaus, No. 1 on the FSU net ladder, each won 12 matches and lost three in doubles competition.

Seminoles Lose Few Men By Graduation

Things are looking rosier for Florida State University's Intercollegiate athletic teams these days. Only 23 of the 230 athletes who participated in the nine intercollegiate sports this year are graduating seniors.

The Seminoles footballers, hardest hit by graduation losses, lose only eight players from the 1952 squad. The FSU baseball and volleyball teams will have everyone back next season.

The basketball and tennis teams lose one man each; track, golf and swimming lose three apiece and the gymnastics squad will be minus four of this year's performers in '53.

The wearers of the anchor—the Delta Gamma girls—have a page to frame in their scrapbook. They shall recall the many hours of reading to the blind—a deed for which they have been highly commended. As for the Campus Chest days—they were "Joe College" days for the Delta Gammas.

Delta Zeta

The Delta Zeta chapter may turn clocks backward to their project of caring for an underprivileged child. Her Christmas will be a timeless memory—shoes, polish, rags—all a part of Campus Chest—have a separate page in the Delta Zeta catalogue.

Gamma Phi Beta

The Gamma Phi Betas' trophy ease features a host of past college days. There's the Sigma Chi Derby Cup—for over-all winner—and the "Little Brown Jug" trophy for first place in the sing. The study hall doors swing outward to remind the girls that they made the greatest improvement in scholarship than did any other sorority. Their province president awarded the group with the Province Scholarship Cup.

Kappa Alpha Theta

The Kappa Alpha Thetas powder their noses and remember their Powder Bowl victory over the Pi Phi's in the annual gridiron contest for campus chest. The girls recall long hours of music and notes and their second place in the Sing. A Sigma Chi Derby trophy ends their scrapbook, too.

Kappa Delta

The Kappa Delta girls look back upon Campus Chest as spaghetti day—they held a special supper featuring the Italian dish. The KD's won third place in the Sigma Chi Derby, another day to dream about. Their fondest recollections will center around their needy family project and the hours spent in the crippled children's hospital.

Phi Mu

The Phi Mu's placed second in the Sigma Chi Derby, and for the Campus Chest, the girls sold popcorn at the outdoor movies. They recall their role of hostesses to a District Convention and their top cart project for the children in the Tallahassee Memorial Hospital. Last, but not least they'll often think of their adopted Korean war orphan—a starred page in their scrapbook.

The girls placed in the finals for their skit, and won first place for their house decorations A leaf in their memory book spells scholarship; the Pi Phi's were awarded the Scholarship Cup this year for the third consecutive time. Zeta Tau Alpha closes the annual of days gone by. For the girls of 514 W. College, Homecoming and soap boxes are a part of '53. They placed second in house decorations. Zetas are known for their contribution to the project for Cerebral Palsy children, and they gave over 50 toys to the underprivileged children at Christmas. rected Alejandro Casona's The Woman af the Dawn. This was not one of the regular community series plays, and was done as a concert reading rather than a full scale production. It was quite well-received by audiences and started a wave of such readings which it is hoped will continue nert year.

The final production given by the department of speech was played first at the annual art seminar in Sarasota and later here on campus. It was The Last Lesson of Pantalone, an original play written by Mr. Russel Graves and based on the comedia dell' arte of the middle sixteenth century. The audiences that saw it were most enthusiastic in their reception of the play.

FOLLOWING this last production were two programs given off campus. The dramatic reading of Christopher Fry's The Lady's Nat for Borning, though not presented by the Speech department, was given with the assistance of campus theater veterans and aroused considerable comment. Shortly afterward the department presented The Twelve Paund Look, a one-act play by James Barrie, at Ruge Hall.

Throughout the year Mr. Douglas Russell proved his expert ability at costuming, and Mr. Charles Reimer designed and executed sets which left nothing to be desired.

SHAKESPEARE came to life as "Letters To the Editor" became the hottest oews in the political race Quotes from Caeser made the headlines. "Tea's and company, Terry's a crowd," was typical.

A mysterious "threatening note" became a tool of much deliberation and discussion. Since the parties involved were members of the Student Party, their case was brought before an executive committee of the Party and both were found to be slightly in the wrong. In the end each became the others friend and many on campus felt that this was just a case of too "Much Ado About Nothing."

We got the new mid-term class members of our community "in the know" with a new system of orientation. The Freshmen were broken down in groups of 25 and given a guided tour through the officies of the President of the Student Body, the Honor Court Room, the Flambeau, the WFSU radio station, the Smoke Signals office and the Tally-Ho office. Several officers spoke and gave them a picture of student activities. We also gave the Freshman the opportunity to hear the President speak at the Freshman Convocation back in the fall

It has been a good year, and with a feeling of pride and thankfulness to all the many people who have worked so hard, I would like to thank them from the bottom of my heart. Nancy Graham was appointed to obtain a uniform list of smoking rules.

JOAN HALFORD was appointed to investigate the placement of election posters in the dormitories. Judy Simkins was chairman of the committee in charge of Sophomore Council selections and a Special committee which resulted from a survey of women's regulations on other campuses. Pat Renick, as chairman of the Codifying committee, submitted to Women's Senate recommendations concerning Off-Campus Court, House Council policies and Senior automatics. Joan Dozier was in charge of the Student Government Installation and the reception which followed.

Under the sponsorship of Women's Senate are five leading service groups on our campus; Off-Campus court, House Councils, Freshman Flunkies, Landis Senior Hall and Sophomore Council.

THE OFF-CAMPUS COURT, composed of the house chairman of each sorority, functions for the sorority women just as the House Councils serve the dormitory residents. The House Councils are composed of the dormitory presidents, vice-presidents, floor chairmen and social chairmen. The regulations and rules of procedure for both courts are formulated by Women's Senate to whom the courts are responsible.

With service upmost in their aims are the Freshmen Flunkies whose primary purpose is to be of assistance to the Student Government. Activities they have participated in during the past year have been making posters, selling cold drinks at the Freshmen-Sophomore Day, publicizing the Campus Chest, sending material to the alumni and serving as guides during the "Know Your Government Week."

SENIOR WOMEN living in Landis are members of Senior Hall and as a special service have the annual Senior breakfast in the Sweet Shop after the Senior Investiture. These women also maintai nspecial Senior privileges.

Sophomore Council, composed of outstanding Freshmen women with a one point average, serve at the polls, usher at Commencement, help with the blood drives, sell tickets, contribute to Campus Chest through a Faculty auction, count votes and serve in countless other capacities. The most important service of the wearers of the blue and white is the capable assistance they extend to Freshmen during Orientation Week a decorated veteran look sick. The best recognition pin that almost everyone on campus earned was the hiker's badge won by walking to and from the Student Union.

The girls especially will remember the attempts by the boys to start a panty raid. By the sounds of the defense tactics planned by the girls, it's a good thing that the boys didn't raid the dorms. The men really used their heads, though, and the whole student body should be commended. We showed a little more forethought and co-operation than some of the other colleges had shown.

Remember the year it snowed? Gosh, some of us went wild, especially those that had never seen anything but "Ivory" snow. Of course, there wasn't enough to make a ski-jump of College Avenue, but if you scrapped up three or four acres you could manage a snowball.

Enough reminiscing for now. We'll have plenty of time to recall our fond memories after we toss our tassles from right to left. To be more serious for a minute, we seniors would like to see the undergraduates accomplish a few things that seem to be seriously lacking on campus.

F.S.U. should nationally be known, for instance, for its honor system. At the present the student body as a whole is not honor conscious. It was wonderful the year that rat caps were sold in the main Westcott corridor with no one to watch the sale of them. The trust that we received gave some of us pride in ourselves. Where is that type of trust now? The amount of cheating within the classrooms now is deplorable even with the professors in the rooms. No one will state that there is cheating when they actually are there to witness it.

But what is worse, the students cheating seem to have no feeling of personal integrity and feel very litle guilt in what they're doing. It's not only disgusting that students cheat, but it is also unfair to the others who are honestly trying. Think twice when you are tempted to cheat in any way, shape or form. Then after you have thought twice think again, you may have overlooked faith in yourself.

Besides the development of the honor system, we seniors would like to see a spirited student body. With the large number of students at F.S.U., all possessina strong vocal cords, there certainly should be more cheering at our athletic events. Why don't we put a little "pep" into tha pep rallies on campus, too, to give tired cheerleaders a little support.

Therefore, we seniors want to leave to you undergraduates, not only these suggestions, but the will and enthusiasm to carry them out. We take with us only the fond memories of four years of hard work and fun.

Cavaliers and Cotillion Review Social Calendar's Dancing Days

By JIM JINDRA
Cavaliers and Catillian Review

It's an old story to us at FSU how the ideas and energy we bring with us in September dwindle down to nothing by the time June comes around.

But this familiar pattern doesn't fit in with the activities of Cavaliers and Cotillion, dance honoraries for men and women. The aims of these two organizations are directed toward improving and promoting social activities among the students. And every year their job gets bigger and more complicated as the size of the student body increases.

THE SOCIAL CALENDAR got under way this school year even before classes did. Saturday night of registration last September found a large part of the students at the "G" Club on West Campus attending the Play Nite Dance at which the Cavaliers are traditional hosts. Continuous dance music from two bands, the Regents and Georgie Bee's group, went over in a big way.

Before three weeks had passed students were spending two evenings a week at the Student Center taking advantage of the opportunity provided by Cavaliers and Cotillion to brush up on their dancing. The dancing lessons were so popular that the men and women who wanted help often outnumbered the members of the two groups acting as teachers.

THE SEMI-ANNUAL tryouts for new members for the dance honoraries began as soon as the lessons were concluded. The job of individually grading each of the hundreds of students who tried out had begun Although Cavaliers and Cotillion are primarily dance honoraries, the ability of the members to serve the student body in the group projects must be considered. After those trying out are narrawed down to the most capable dancers, they are judged on the basis of their appearance on the dance floor, their willingness to work for the organizations and their personality.

The men and women tapped were formally introduced at the Annual Cotillion-Cavalier Ball held in January They found themselves tied up in the activity of planning and sponsoring social events almost immediately, for the second semester was opened socially with the introduction of a new musical group on campus, The Raven Quintet made their debut at an informal dance in February and has proved to be one of the most popular dance bands to appear on our campus in a long while.

IN ANSWER to popular demand, a second series of dancing lessons was begun. Before the lessons were completed, the Annual Cavalier Talent Night was presented at the Opperman Music Hall. Members of Cotillion were ushers at the event, and the show was broadcast over the campus radio station for the first time. First prize for the student talent participating went to Charlie Singer and Jimmy Hanks who treated the audiences with their singing and guitar and ukelele playing.

Tryouts for new members were held again following the conclusion of the dancing lessons, and plans were getting under way for the Annual May Day Dance, traditionally given in honor of the Senior class.

FUNCTIONS of the two organizations officially came to an end recently with the election of officers for next year. But Carolyn Gola, who was re-elected as president of Cotillion and the new Cavalier president, Ed James, are already busy making plans for next year's activities.

After a two year absence from the FSU campus the blac white satin jackets, symbo Cavaliers, were again seen a last two formal dances Ma the students now attending had not seen them before were puzzled as to what stood for. The Cavalier ja have been a familiar sight o campus in the past and glad to see them back

Cavaliers and Cotillion w here to welcome the student to school next September a Play Night Dance, and will tinue to try to make your activities bigger and throughout the year.

VOL. XXXIX, No. 1 PUBLISHED BY STUDENTS OF FLORIDA STATE UNIVERSITY, TALLAHASSEE, FLORIDA June 19, 1953

2400 Students Expected Here for Summer Session

This week, all roads led to Tallahassee, as the summer registration opened for summer sessions of six and eight week courses at Florida State Universiyt. Monday morning was the opening day of registration, and as the doors of the Women's Gym opened, lines of students could be seen extending outside and around the front of the building.

Although no official figures could be released as yet, 2100 students were reported to have registered by Wednesday, and reports indicated that the figures were expected to reach 2400 by the end of the registration week.

THE OFFICIAL registering period ended Monday at 4:30 p.m. but students registering late until today will have a late fine of $5 to pay.

Wednesday was the last day to register for a full load, and today is the last day for schedule changes except with permission from the dean of the school enrolled in.

The unofficial figures brought only one comment from the registrar's office, and that was that the number seemed to be fairly in accord with the usual summer registrations.

WESTCOTT HALL was full of people this week who were registering late. Lines formed and at times reached to the side entrance.

Besides the summer session students regularly enrolled at FSU, there are approximately 900 high school students and administrators on campus for short courses and work shops. Besides the Science Camp, Music Camp, Newspaper Institute and 4-H there were some administration courses on organizing choruses and on health and safety.

AS IS THE case during the summer session a great number of students enrolled for the summer session are older than the average students and among these older students are many working towards advanced degrees.

Another interesting item about summer session classes is the fact that many classes consist of one person and the number goes up from there. These classes are held on a very informal basis and the students have the advantage of getting to know their subjects better.

This year instead of the regular nine weeks course, the course is held for only eight weeks, with classes being held on Saturdays to make up for the lost week.

Professor Here Writes About FSU Intership Program

National attention has been focused upon Florida State University's teaching internship program through the writing of Dr. John A Permentar, associate professor in the school of education and coordinator of internship at FSU.

In the current issue of Clearing House Dr. Permenter presents opinions and judgments of 120 high school seniors concerning the intern program and their own student teachers.

IN MAY, 1952 issue of Columbia University's Teachers' College Record carried the first article to come from Dr. Parmentar's continuing study of the internship program. It was entitled, "A State-wide Program of Teaching Internship." In the article the basic principles of the Florida program were outlined and it's cooperative, state-wide nature explained.

A third article in preparation deals with expanding the role of student teachers through the Florida Internship Program. This study gives particular attention to the importance of the need for more first-hand experiences in the preparation of teachers.

DR. PERMENTER'S continuing evaluation and study of the intern program will form the basis of future articles in the national educational press.

Ruge Announces Sunday Services

Ruge Hall, Episcopal Student center on campus, will open each Sunday morning at 8:30 a.m., during the summer for a morning prayer service with the Reverend W. K. Morley, chaplain, presiding.

For those wishing to receive Communion a Holy Communion service will be held at 8 a.m. preceding the Morning Prayer service.

This Sunday, June 21, Prof Ben Bever of the Department of Social Welfare will deliver an address on "The Social Nature of Man" at the Morning Prayer service. Faculty, students, and the public will be welcomed at this service," said Chris Young, president of the student vestry.

Sunday evening at 8 30 a picnic style supper will be served followed by light entertainment.

RUGE HALL will be opened daily from 8 a.m. until 8 p.m. since Chaplain Morley and his family will be in residence here during the entire summer session. After 4:30 p.m. ice tea or coffee will be served in the lounge daily.

Ruge Hall offers a cool and comfortable place to meet friends, enjoy recreation and relaxation as well as finding a quiet corner for reading and study," says Chris Young. "There are facilities for getting up a quick meal or entertaining friends with a party. The new piano radio and record player as well as the library are for student use. The typewriter and mimeograph machine also come in handy. What is summer school without a summer home?"

Mary Fry Elected Judiciary Chairman

The first elections of the summer term at Florida State University brought into office a new chairman of judiciary and a campus-wide fire marshal. The new chairman of judiciary is Mary Fry, and fire marshal is Lucille Smith.

In other elections around the campus, the women's dormitories chose their officers. In Bryan, Minnie Frances Jones was elected president while Mary Alice Elder and Nathetta McWherter were chosen the two vice-presidents.

Other officers include: South Cawthon, Sandra Carter, president. Charline Williamson and Patricia Gatlin, vice-presidents; North Cawthon, Vivian Campbell, president, Elvira Alvarez and Ruth Matsuda, vice-presidents.

Three students were elected as representatives to judiciary from their resepective dormitories. They are Kitten Morrow from North Cawthon, Nancy Dickinson from South Cawthon, and Rose Howard from Bryan.

Doak Campbell Elected Trustee

Florida State University's president Doak S. Campbell has been elected to serve a two-year term on the Board of Trustees of Educational Testing Service, filling the unexpired vacancy of Harvard University president, Dr. James B. Conant.

Doak S. Campbell

Campbell, now in his twelfth year as president of FSU, will serve continuously through the annual board meeting set for May 1955. Conant, vacated his position on the board when he was appointed high commissioner to Germany by the State Department.

DR. CAMPBELL has served as administrator at Central College, Conway, Arkansas; Georgia Peabody College, Nashville, Tennessee, and here at Florida State University. In 1937 he was chosen consultant to President Roosevelt's Advisory Committee on Education.

A past president of the Southern Association of Colleges and secondary Schools, Campbell has conducted and published numorous surveys on higher institutions in southern States.

THE EDUCATIONAL Testing Service was organized in 1947 to serve American Education by developing new tests in areas where they are needed, by constructing and administering complete testing programs for various educational purposes, by advancing test theory and practice and by providing advisory services to schools and colleges.

They continue to provide, on a non-profit basis, the testing activities formerly carried on or sponsored separately by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of teaching, the American Council on Education, and the College Entrance Examination Board.

In close cooperation with educational and professional groups or appropriate governmental agencies, ETS currently provides a number of tests including the General Education Series, Placement for Colleges, Cooperative Inter-Am[illegible] and Pre-Engineering Ability and United States Armed Forces Institute.

The students selected for this honor were Ellan Avla, Bill Dunn, Peggy Moore, Jo Nell Proctor, Bob Ryals, Mary Ruth Summers, Bill Skipper, Ted Steinmeyer, and June Tate. The course consists of a workshop in the techniques of conducting and arranging a high school chorus.

Dr. Irwin Cooper, professor of music education at FSU is director of this workshop. The course was staged when his new theories and evaluations were found to be of help for the average junior high school student voice.

The course is being conducted especially for high school vocal teachers, supervisors of music, choir directors, and choral arrangers and editors.

Students are invited tomorrow to view the free movie, "It Happens Every Spring". Next Thursday, the free movie will be "The Enchanted Forest", starring Edmund Lowe.

"It Happens Every Spring" is the delightful story of a chemistry professor who discovers a fluid which makes everything, including a baseball, allergic to wood—bats too. The shy professor does not only become a great baseball player, but also finds out what love is all about.

Starring Ray Milland, Paul Douglas and Jean Peters, the movie is a sure bet for all lovers of baseball and laughs.

"The Enchanted Forest" is a charming story of a hermit and of a child he rescues in a forest and brings up. The screenplay is beautiful and enchanting in itself. The film also stars Brenda Joyce and Harry Davenport.

Four Square Dances Set

William Tait, professor of recreation, will call the four square dances scheduled for the summer session. Henry Kmen will provide the music.

The square dances will be held on the lighted tennis courts and in the event of rain, in the Woman's Gym. Last year's square dances were held at the Student Center but this year they are trying out the tennis courts.

The square dances are scheduled for June 24, July 1, 8 and 15, 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

Trips Planned For Students

Points of Interest To Be Visited Also

Tours of points of interest in Tallahassee and vicinity have been included in the schedule for summer recreation as a special feature.

The summer recreation committee reports that the first of these tours will be taken on Sunday June 28, from 2 to 4 p.m., according to the summer recreation committee. This tour includes a trip to the tomb of the historically famous Prince and Princess Murat.

A tour of the Capitol and of the oldest church in Tallahassee, which dates back to the revolutionary period of American history and which still has the slave galleys used during that period, will be made that same trip.

A VISIT will also be made to the site of the battle of Tallahassee during the Civil War (Ed.'s Note—Tallahassee was the only southern capital not captured by the Union troops.)

A drive through the residential section of the country club and a view of the new Myers Park municipal pool followed by a tour of Tallahassee Memorial Hospital, the Tuberculosis Sanitorium and the Federal Penitentiary will end the first trip.

THE SECOND trip consists of a trip to the FSU Marine Laboratory in Alligator Point. Swimming in the Gulf of Mexico will be permitted on this trip. The tour to Marine Laboratory will be on Tuesday July 14 from 1 to 8.

The third trip, on Monday, July 27 will include a trip to the St. Marks Light House followed by a fish supper at St. Marks Village. "Besides being able to enjoy hush puppies, the persons interested in making them may obtain recipes for them," adds Miss Christine P'Simer, director of the summer recreation program. This trip will last from 3 to 7 30 p m.

THE AGENDA also includes a trip to Wakulla Springs with swimming and all the extras offered by the springs. This trip is slated for Wednesday, July 29 from 3 to 7:30 p.m.

The last of these scheduled trips will be a supper trip, time and place to be announced later.

The starting point of all the trips will be Bryan Hall where busses will be stationed.

Class of '53 Elects Permanent Officers

The permanent officers for the class of '53 recently elected include Bob Ryals, president; Ted Steinmeyer, vice-president; Barbara Brewton, secretary, Jane Shepard, treasurer; Paul Soraparu social chairman, and June Keirstead, parliamentarian.

These seniors were honored recently at the home of FSU's president Dr. and Mrs Doak S Campbell along with other members of the senior class. It is customary for the Campbells to entertain the senior class prior to graduation.

In the receiving line at the reception, besides the Campbells and the new officers were Mrs Dan McCarty, Dr. W H. Rodgers, Dr. Sam Neel, and the Mrs Rodgers and Neel.

"The Old Maid and the Thief" Is First Performance at FSU

Entertainment galore featuring everything from comic opera to accordian players and dance teams will be highlighted on the summer social agenda by the University Artists Series.

COMIC OPERA STARS — Alfred Medinets as "Bob", and Geraldine Leslie as the "woman friend" as they will appear in the Artist Series presentation of the Comedy Opera, "The Old Maid and the Thief."

No tickets will be issued for the Summer series and all programs will be given in the Music Amphitheatre at 8:15, unless rain makes it necessary for performances to be held in the Music Hall.

NEXT TUESDAY the Comic Opera Players present Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Old Maid and the Thief". All students, visitors and faculty members are invited to attend. In case of rain, the program will be presented in the Music Hall. ID cards will be checked at the door due to the limited amount of seating space.

"The Old Maid and the Thief" is a light theatrical drama, which combines drama with intimate relationships between the audience and cast.

BOTH TEXT and music of the opera were written by Gian-Carlo Menotti who has already had success on Broadway with "The Consul", "The Medium" and "The Telephone."

Composed of a group of young professionals The Comic Opera Players was founded by David Shapiro who serves as its musical director. He has conducted operas in New York and at Tanglewood, Mass., and is assistant conductor of the Little Orchestra Society of New York.

Action of the opera takes place in a small town somewhere in the United States, and covers a period of ten days. The sets used in the opera will represent a parlor, a kitchen a bedroom and a street which is in front of a liquor store, all presented in ten scenes.

THE SMALL, all-singing cast includes Madeleine Vose as an old maid, Virginia Copeland as her housemaid, Geraldine Leslie as a friend and Alfred Medinets as a visitor. All four have had wide experience in the musical fields of concert, opera, radio and television.

Among their encore numbers will be three favorites by Gershwin: "I Got Plenty O'Nuttin," "Bess, You Is My Woman Now," and "It Ain't Necessarily So."

Madeleine Vose' mezzo-soprano, began her musical career at the age of five and later entered the Boston Conservatory of Music, where she received her bachelor of music degree.

PROFESSOR THOMAS Wright, from the School of Music, is chairman of the Summer artist series, and will be assisted by students June Convers and Jim Dye.

Besides the Comic-Opera Players, FSU audiences will have an opportunity to see and hear Gregory and Strong, dance-concertina team, on July 7; Lloyd LaVoux, accordianist, on July 21, and Nelson and Neal, duo-pianists, on August 4.

Comedy is Written By Russell Graves

A light, modern comedy, "Afternoon in Late Fall," is being produced for the students of FSU on Monday, June 29, in the Auguste Conradi Theatre. Russell Graves, an FSU speech instructor, wrote the play as part of his creative dissertation for his Ph.D.

Another of Mr. Graves plays, "The Last Lesson of Pantalone," was presented at F.S.U. in the spring production series.

The Cast for "Afternoon in Late Fall" includes Miriam Glover, Jane Hill, Charles Boglahu, and Delmar Hansen.

Pool Changes Time; Charges Small Fee

An increase in the number of students registering for summer camps necessitated a change in the schedule printed in the summer recreation bulletin for the use of the women's gym pool. The new schedule calls for the use of the pool by faculty members and staff from 5:50 to 6:40 and by students from 6:40 to 7:50 p.m.

Prices will be twenty-five cents for two swims. Tickets may be obtained in the registrar's office. The pool will furnish towels and suits upon presentation of the receipt from the registrar's office.

No personal suits may be used in the pool.

National Magazine Awards Jim Dye

Jim Dye, recently graduated from Florida State University has just been named the "American Student of the Month" for June by the national magazine, Students for America.

This certificate of merit based on scholastic achievements and activities against communism and socialism followed upon the footsteps of Dye's graduation last June 8.

Press 'Institute' Meets For Second Year in Row

Editor's Note—The following story was written and compiled by a number of the high school students attending the Press Institute described in the story.

Classes for 40 future journalists are under way at the second annual Florida State University Southern School Press Institute. These students have been engaged in various activities and classes since the opening of the Institute Sunday.

With faculty and students representing seven states, there is an increase of attendance of 64 per cent over last year.

The Institute students are taking classes in news reporting, feature writing, editorial writing, business management, and publication workshops.

A TOUR OF Tallahassee was among the most interesting of the activities outside the classroom. Visits to the Capitol, Supreme Court, and the Tallahassee Democrat were included in the tour. Lectures, group singing, movies, and a reception were held in the evenings.

Plans for the future include educational speeches, dances, and trips to local points of interest such as the Oceanographic Institute at Alligator Point and to Wakulla Springs.

Improving their publications, is the principal purpose of the pupils. Secondary, but still important, is getting acquainted with FSU campus and journalism courses, according to Professor W. R. Slaughter, coordinator of the Institute.

CLASSES IN NEWS, feature and editorial writing are being conducted by Professor Donald F. Brown, assistant professor of journalism at the University of Illinois, and Miss Cynthia Baker director of publications, Peru, Indiana.

Business management and yearbook workshop are being taught by C. Wesley Brewster, assistant professor of graphic arts at Syracuse University in New York, while Miss Marguerita Blough, director of journalism at Waterloo High School, Waterloo, Iowa assists him in the workshop.

BEN ERVIN, principal, Crown Point High School, Crown Point, Indiana is teaching editing, make-up, and assisting in editorial workshop.

Junior women's counselors include: Miss Ruth Peeling, executive editor, Moorhead City (N.C.) Times, and Miss Edna Page, FSU graduate.

Hugh McGarity, head of the music department at Clemson College, is employed by the Institute as the musical director and Robert Steel is Institute photographer and counselor, formerly staff photographer for the Greenville (S.C.) News.

The Institute, founded by Professor W. R. Slaughter, is in its second year at FSU. Professor Slaughter originated a similar institute in 1934 at Northwestern University.

Young and Old Alike Are Extended Hearty Welcom:

Many years ago, the gates in front of Westcott were removed as indication that everyone was welcome. Today, the center stone under the arch still holds mystic powers to a senior who will not graduate unless he steps on the stone. Because the gates are not there we can not throw the gates open, but we want everyone to know that if we had a welcome mat we'd place it under the arch to better say . . . Welcome!

Off to a good start!

Monday was registration day in the gym, but unlike other registration days, the pace had slowed down. There were few first semester freshmen running bug-eyed among the "oldsters", hut the "oldsters" themselves had a chance to run around bug-eyed and watch the marvels of a slow registration.

The pace at registration and in the campus itself is usually ten to fifteen miles per hour, hut in summer school it slows down from four to four and a half.

The main reason for this remarkahle phenomena is not the Tallahassee heat as some would like to contend, but rather, it is the very worthwhile product of a wonderful group of persons, the graduate student.

Yes, FSU, like all the other universities and colleges of the United States is a place where come summer sessions, there converge upon campus, people who have seen many more moons than the average seminole, and because he has seen many more moons, the pace is slower.

This is not an indictment against the older students that come in, but rather a hearty welcome to show the appreciation that is held in the mind of the student body as a whole to have these seasoned individuals here to form an example of friendliness, cooperativeness, and good academic standings, as well as good moral behaviour.

Chivalry, far from being a dead thing of the past, has its place on campus, and during summer school, it would be wise if the students showed a little more of it to the older students. In the past, the younger generation has shown a dislike to the invasion of the campus hy the so-called "waddlers," hut here and now is the opportunity for each and every true Seminole to show the older generation that they don't have so much over us in manners after all. Nuff sed!

Welcome mat again thrown out

Monday morning, the historic gates of ye olde efesu were thrown open to some 900 high school students and administrators for short courses. Besides that, some 2300 are expected to be registered for the regular summer session offered. A great number of these people are also administrators. At any rate, many of them are older than the average student. Welcome! We hope your stay on this beautiful campus will be well rewarded.

Another first for FSU

It was with great pleasure that yours truly received the news of the election of President Campbell to the spot vacated by Harvard University President Conant. Always the first to want the best for FSU Dr. Campbell will again focus the national spotlight on Tallahassee. Imagine, we have Flying High, Gymkana, Marlless Gessler, and now Dr. Campbell, in the national spotlight. All kidding aside, Dr. Campbell deserves praise for his wonderful work as an administrator and educational leader. His impressive record as president of the university and as president of the Southern Associstion of Colleges and Secondary schools are a good sign of his abilities. Nuff sed!

Commencement speaker made sense

Dr. Harmon W. Caldwell told the graduating class a few weeks ago at the Suwannee Room that too many young people enter their careers today seeking something for nothing. You'd think that after a student goes to college and gets through with general education that his outlook on life would be realistic. There's nothing realistic about communism, and that's getting something for nothing, or so the gullible think.

No more jokes

The Associated Collegiate Press reports that the University of Michigan authorities have ordered no more humor printed in their student magazine. Personally, I feel ashamed to admit that any college student would be willing to give a big slice of their registration fee to print jokes that they can hear in bull sessions and buy for 25 cents at the corner drugstore. But . . . maybe the college students don't have enough pride . . . well . . . at least . . . we all know that there is certainly no pride to be had in handing out a student magazine and saying . . . "here are the latest jokes, this is our campus magazine."

Korea to end dishonesty?

We, as Americans and college students, are being led to believe that once the war in Korea ends, cheating in American Universities will drop down. The general consensus of opinion is that you can't blame the boys for cheating, after all, they face Korea and the draft. I suppose it's true, it would be impossible for them to work honestly for their grades, and who cares whether their cheating would throw up the kind of grade curve that might cause a struggling boy with honest intentions to . . . not face . . . but stick his head into . . . the draft and Korea. Yeah! Who cares?

Again ACP brings interesting item

The Associated Collegiate Press sent us these figures. Take them for what they're worth. The question was whether or not they approved of lowering the voting age to 18, and the guinea pigs answering the questions were a nationwide survey among students. 54 percent approved, 44 percent disapproved, and 2 percent gave no opinion.

Forty-four percent is a pretty big number of the people supposedly to be effected by the lowering of the voting age to disapprove. There must be a reason. No?

FLORIDIANS GET SET TO STUDY RAIN

By SEN. GEORGE SMATHERS

WASHINGTON—The news did not get much attention at the time, but the Senate passed a bill last week with far reaching implications for Florida. It is the so-called "rain-making" bill which I jointly sponsored with several other Senators.

Extensive hearings have been held on this subject during the past several years. Nonscientific and pseudoscientific rainmakers have been practicing their art for many years with many fantastic and farfetched devices and theories. The general public has, justifiably, regarded these efforts with skepticism. But in the past seven years genuinely scientific experiments have been made with "highly suggestive results." Dr. Vannevar Bush, President of Carnegie Institution who was one of tha principal developers of the Atomic Bomb and Dr. Vincent J. Schaefer, of the General Electric Research Laboratory, has testified that rain can be induced.

BUSH TESTIFIED: "We are on the threshold of an exceedingly important matter for man has begun for the first time to affect the weather in which he lives, and no man can tell where such a move will finally end"

All through the arid west today, professional rainmakers are inducing rain in many instances through a process of "seeding clouds." This has already developed into quite a business. Why is Florida so vastly involved in the measure to create a committee "to study and evaluate experiments in weather modification"?

Well, if we are able to obtain rain when we need it, and divert rain to the ocean area when we don't want it, what a paradise we would have. In addition, studies have indicated that scientists may soon be able to disperse, or divert, hurricanes, thus relieving Florida of this annual threat. Probably the most important by-product of this new development is the ability to convert salt water into fresh water. Imagine what a relief this would be to Key West (which pipes all its fresh water in from nearly 150 miles away), Charleston, S. C. and coastal areas where the problem of obtaining fresh water is growing ever greater.

The imagination is staggered by the possibilities when and if man discovers how to modify the weather. Mark Twain's most famous quotation will pass into limbo.

● BLESSED IS HE WHO?

Does not cheat.

Summer school is no different than any other school, and as such, the honor system is still in effect. What we mean is that cheating, lying and stealing will not be tolerated.

Each semester, the honor committee of tha university works its fingers to the bone to acquaint the students with the workings of the honor system, and it is hardly fair to the students, the administration and to the prestige of the university to flaunt law and morals in the face of the nation.

There are enrolled in FSU this summer, students from all over the state and from all over the nation. We do not want them to go back home and say . . . "FSU is a crip, everybody gets along doing nothing. If you want to pass, just cheat."

No, we do not want that to happen here as it has happened in other universities. The honor system where cheating is concerned is considered a selfish greedy thing. The students that do not cheat want cheating stopped, because it wil hurt their grades on the curve. But can you consider that selfish and greedy? No! A hundred times no!

It is not a selfish and greedy attitude, because protecting your home and children from criminals is not a selfish and greedy self-preservation policy and they all work on the same principle.

If the persons who cheat would stop to think of the damage they are doing to students that are struggling to make an honest grade in the universities and the many students who would be affected hy the draft by just a little slip of the grade curve, they wouldn't do it.

We aren't hy any means saying that there is flagrant cheating going on, there seem to be no reports of any, but let this be a half hearted appeal to the weak that later in the semester when the going gets rough and the hot Tallahassee sun shines in on the poor students, not to take the easy way out. In the long run it is not the easy way out.

We are proud of the wonderful record set in the past hy FSU students both in summer sessions and regular semesters and we, as the voice of the student would like to see it continue as such.

SUMMER SCHOOL CAN PROVE TO BE FUN

By MARGARET HORROX
Managing Editor

It's vacation time—the time for fun and relaxation—and here we are martyring it out in this hot summer school session. That's what many of you have been saying ever since registration last Monday.

Just think of all the fun you can have "vacationing" here this summer. Of course, not to be forgotten are those two graduation essentials which you always seem to need more of — quality points and hours—they, too, can be added while you are having your fun. With only two or three courses many of you are through by 12 noon so this leaves plenty of time for you to study and still have the good times.

Camp Flastacowo will probably be visited a good many times this summer. All you have to do is catch a bus in front of the gymn and there they have games and recreation facilities for you to enjoy. Then, there are those others of you who have cars and will probably be inhabiting the coast or Wakulla most of the time you aren't busy studying or playing bridge.

Other forms of recreation have been planned at your convenience and pleasure for almost every day you will be in summer school. This Saturday evening and other evenings free movies will be shown in the Music Amphitheater, after which there will be dancing at the various dormitories or Student Center Be sure and check the summer calendar for the time and dates.

Monday evening next week an informal get acquainted party will be held on the Bryan lawn. Ice cream will be served and I have heard via the grape-vine that you can have as much as you can eat. The best thing for you to do would be to go and find if this rumor is true

A deep sea fishing trip has been scheduled for Saturday June 27 but the date may have to be changed. Due to the new system of the Saturday classes this time, many students wishing to go would not be able to do so. The problem is now being considered and we will be able to report to you in the next Flambeau edition what plans have been worked out.

The Artists Series is another of the main programs planned for the summer. The first will be next Tuesday featuring the Comic Opera Players (see Page 1 of the Flambeau). Be sure to take your ID cards with you when you go

Trips have been planned to many outstanding and interesting places nearby—the FSU Marine Laboratory. Marianna Caves, and St. Marks Lighthouse are among those listed. The trips are free and all you have to do is to sign up on one of the designated bulletin boards and buy your own meal

Wass New Curator In Pinellas County

The Marine Museum at Mullet Key, where Florida State University maintains one of its three marine laboratories, has a new curator. Marvin Wass, who received his MS degree in zoology at FSU last week, was appointed to succeed Capt. and Barnett Harris.

The appointment of Wass was made public by the Pinellas County Park Board and is effective immediately. Mullet Key is located about 10 miles south of St. Petersburg, in Tampa Bay.

While writnig his thesis, Wass discovered 112 different species of crabs. His topic was "Monograph on Crabs of Alligator Harbor and Adjacent Waters."

Delinquency First Topic of Lecture

By SUZANNE LINEBAUGH
Associate Editor

"The state of Florida spends millions of dollars for education, but exactly nothing towards the solution of the juvenile delinquency problem," was the keynote of the lecture delivered by Judge Dozier DeVane Tuesday evening in the Music Hall as the first in a summer series being sponsored by the School of Education and Kappa Delta Pi.

DeVane went on to say that the state would continue to do nothing "until a fire was built under the Legislature." The Judge proposes that the 'fire' be started in the public school system where it could be most effective. In support of this idea Judge DeVane suggested: "Questionnaires should be prepared by the universities and be sent to all state teachers in reference to home life and quality of work of their students. This should be done every year and the information sent to the School Boards."

BELIEVING THAT the schools are best able to give help to this problem of juvenile delinquency, DeVane reported the successful plan used in Michigan schools There special classes were offered for the teachers in child psychology, fewer classes were maintained for the problem children, and each teacher became a full-time visitor trained in Social Work.

"Most youth offenders come from broken homes and homes where the parents work," stated Judge DeVane. He went on to say that a smaller percentage were those children who are adventurous and restless by nature.

JUDGE DeVANE concluded that the ultimate remedy of the problem of juvenile delinquency lies in seeing that our children are raised in a Christian atmosphere to detest crime.

Now maintaining offices in the Post Office Building here in Tallahassee, Judge DeVane has practiced law in Tampa and Orlando. He has been a United States District Judge for ten years and is keenly interested in getting state appropriations which would alleviate the juvenile delinquency problem in Florida.

Following the lecture refreshments were served at a social hour held in the Longmire Lounge.

The necklace, part of an exhibit currently on display at the University Museum, had been loaned to the FSU official by the New Mexico Museum in Santa Fe, New Mexico.

IT WAS IMPORTANT that the necklace be found, because, points out Dr. Smith, the University Museum depends on loans from various institutions for its exhibits.

This is the second time this year that a museum piece has been reported missing. The first was a pair of valuable moccasins, also from a loan exhibit.

Banana Leaves Used For Weaving at FSU

Using such unconventional sources as the century plant and banana leaves, Miss Ruth Jelka is weaving new horizons for Florida and for these and other fiber producing plants which grow in the sunshine state.

Miss Jelks, a Florida State University graduate student in art education, ended her teaching career in Leon and Sarasota counties when she had an attack of encephalitis of the brain. After her stay in a Tallahassee hospital, she became interested in weaving as an aid to her recovery.

ALREADY A WOMAN with a green thumb and a keen interest in growing things, Ruth began to look around for inexpensive materials to weave on her hand loom. She works out design patterns for weaving and printing textiles from such sources as the coloring of a chicken feather, the fibers in a cross-section of wood magnified, the fiber of a coconut palm or the shape of a flower.

She is also weaving fabrics from fibers of such sources as the pineapple pequin, pine needles, reeds lily leaves and the better-known ramie, kenaf, and sansevieria fibers.

WHEN SHE SET OUT to gather more materials she was pulled to a fast stop. But if encephalitis couldn't stop her, the fact that most of the fibers she wanted were not woven commercially couldn't stop her. Most of these fibers had never been processed before, fewer spun into thread.

She sought out experimental scientists and business men in Florida working with the producing and processing of fiber producing plants.

To her surprise, she found that these men were as interested in her plans for weaving the little-used fibers as she was in their experiments in producing fibers.

NATHAN MAYO, Florida Secretary of Agriculture, gave her advice and some decorticated ramie and kanaf fibers which his department and others have experimented for many years. (Decortication is a process by which pulp and juices are removed from a plant, leaving the fibers.)

The ex-school teacher found that even though she had decorticated fibers, they had to be spun into thread. This was not done commercially. Never stopping, she spent three months finding an old-fashioned, foot-treadle spinning wheel and more time learning to operate it. Now she spins her own thread.

The weaving of kenaf, a fiber from a species of hibiscus, is a far-eastern skill, but a western Floridian as determined as Miss Jelks is doing it on her hand loom. She is using it up upholstery.

MISS JELKS IS especially interested in sansevieria and ramie, since they are weather and salt water resistant.

"There is a future for Florida-

Over 380 Students Learn In Educational Camps Here

Press, Science Camps Close; Music, Art Sessions Continue

By MARGARET HORROX

More than 380 high school students have been busy at FSU camps during the past two weeks, working with ceramics, writing news stories, gazing at stars and tooting on clarinets. Two of the groups, the Press Institute and the Science camp, will say goodbye to the campus this weekend as their camp comes to a close.

The Music camp and the Arts and Crafts camp which also began with the opening of the summer session will be continued for a longer period. The Arts and Craft camp will be held through July 3. This group, an experiment this year, was limited to 20 students. Plans are to expand the enrollment of next year's workshop. The Music camp is a five-week session and has over 250 students enrolled.

Forty high school journalists from Florida, South Carolina and Pennsylvania will leave the campus Saturday. With them they will take news ideas concerning improvements of the high school publications.

While attending the workshop the students have received instruction in news gathering and writing, feature and editorial writing, management, editing, photography and radio.

The Institute is under the direction of Dr Laurence R Campbell, Dean of the school of journalism here, who conducts the newspaper workshops.

Dr W R Slaughter, co-ordinator of the Institute and professor of journalism at FSU, scheduled the varied activities, entertainment and educational trips which the group has taken.

Climaxing the activities of the journalists will be a banquet Saturday evening in the Suwannee Room at 7 p. m. Dr Campbell will serve as principal speaker and Professor Slaughter will be toastmaster.

Today a picnic has been planned at Silver Lake for the group. Tomorrow the Institutera will journey to Wakulla Springs for a swim after classes.

Over sixty high school juniors and seniors have received instruction in the sciences in this first two-week science camp held at FSU.

The classes have studied zoology, astronomy, botony, physiology, bacteriology, chemistry, geology, meteorology, physics, math, and psychology. With this knowledge of science many feel the young students are provided an intelligent basis for career choices in the area of science.

Classroom theories were tested on field trips, which included the university's Oceonographic Institute on Alligator Harbor, just 40 miles south of Tallahassee.

Recreation has also been part of the workshop planning. The students enjoyed swimming at the city's new pool and Wakulla Springs. Picnics and outdoor movies were part of the group activities.

Price Attacks Newspapers; Yates, Kobre Reply In Turn

By RONALD ROYAL Journalism Student
From the Press Institute

"The newspaper has failed in the moral responsibility placed upon it by its position of leadership." This was the opinion voiced by Eugene Price, instructor in the School of Public Administration, Monday evening.

Mr. Price spoke in a panel discussion led by Professor Sidney Kobre of the School of Journalism on the role the newspaper plays in community progress. The discussion was held in the Longmire auditorium as one of the evening programs scheduled for the Southern School Press Institute.

Mr. Price stated that the newspaper had not lived up to its responsibility because it had avoided the difficult issues concerning the people's relationship to the government. The newspaper has taken sides and voiced opinions on only the "safe" issues he said. It has not acted wisely in the "selection of issues, the key to leadership."

Steve Yates, managing editor of the Tallahassee Democrat, pointed out that newspapers can play an important role in community progress by clear, accurate reporting of situations. Stories, pictures, and interviews on the front page will often accomplish more than simply sitting back and leveling editorial thunderbolts he stated.

Looking at the question from a different angle, Professor Kobre discussed the crime problem in relationship to the newspaper. He felt that the paper could get closer to the solution of this problem by attacking it at its roots, juvenile delinquency. He gave some of the reasons for juvenile delinquency and stated that the newspaper could do much to alleviate existing conditions.

The last member of the panel to speak was C. Wesley Brewster, assistant professor of graphic arts at Syracuse University.

Mr. Brewster touched on the role of the high school newspaper in community progress. "There is a place for the high school newspaper concerning civic problems which directly affect the school." Mr Brewster said, however, that most school papers don't approach the problem clearly and logically but seem to get hysterical.

'Comic Opera' Entertains Audience In Amphitheater

By ORCHID ALONSO

In the first major presentation to be held in the sunken outdoor amphitheater, Florida State University students last Tuesday viewed what was perhaps the most witty and interesting program put on by the FSU Artist Series.

"The Old Maid and The Thief", text and music by Gian-Carlo Menotti, got more laughs out of the some 1,500 spectators, than any Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis show could. All the seats were filled before the performance was scheduled to start, and people poured all over the terrace and walls for a place to see.

MADELINE VOST was superb in her presentation as the old maid. After the show, comments from all around seemed to indicate that the feeling was mutual. Her facial contractions and distortions were amazing to see. She had a different expression for every mood and incident.

Laeticia the maid, portrayed by Virginia Copeland was a gem in her role as the witty and deceptive man-crazed wench.

THE TEXT OF the story was a satire on virtuous old maids. In this particular case the old

FSU Students Work 'N Play In Busy Alum

All Florida State University students know where to go for the biggest dips of ice cream—the Soda Shop in the Longmire building.

Since the dedication in 1940, it has been a favorite meeting place for FSU students, faculty members, and graduates.

Although the new Student Center has taken over many of the duties of Longmire, it still provides accommodations for returning alumni, houses the important student organisations, publications, and is the center of many other activities.

AT LONGMIRE the Flambeau, the Tally Ho, the Pow Wow, Smoke Signals, radio station WFSU, and all the public relations offices operate under the humdrum of weekly honor court and senate meeting. Also 4-H meetings, class officers meetings, and meetings by visiting groups are held here.

The largest single room in the hall, the main auditorium on the second floor, seats a capacity of 350 people. Besides this, there are three student lounges in the basement, two reception rooms on the first floor, a club room on the second, and a lounge for the professors and instructors of the university on the third floor.

FOUR LARGE conference rooms are set aside for club meetings and special events. Various organizations share the same room on different days of the week.

The soda shop, book exchange, lost and found department, and offices for social directors and student activities co-ordinator round out the services of the building.

Longmire was named in memory of Miss Rowena Longmire, a highly respected teacher in the

Motel Men Give Money For Fund

Two motel men who attended a Tourist Home management short course at Florida State University last May have set up a loan fund for students working in that area.

The donors, Herman Horowitz, of the Oak Ridge Motel near Orlando and William L. Edmundson, Jr , of the Oleander Courts, Houston, Texas, each donated $250 toward the fund. They named the fund Bob Gresham Loan Fund, in honor of Bob Gresham, one of the pioneers of the motel publishing business.

Money in the fund may be borrowed without interest by students who wish to enroll, or who are now enrolled in the department of restaurant and hotel management said Dr Donald Lundberg, head of the department.

Students wishing to apply may contact the FSU student Help Committee.

Campus Newspapers Need Freedom of it's Editorials

Should a college newspaper side with an issue? That is a question that has come up constantly in American colleges through the years.

There are those that contend that a university newspaper run by students, should not back or oppose any issue of campus life that comes up. They maintain that the newspaper is there to report the news and that at college level, the functions of said organ should be to inform and not influence.

There is some disagreement there. An honest newspaper can not evaluate all the facts at hand in the many issues that come up and give an objective view of all sides to a question.

Necessarily, the newspaper should not try to influence its readers by any underhanded means, but if by siding with an issue, an honest effort is made to show more sides of the issue by the parties concerned, there is no reason why a college newspaper should not side with an issue.

In aiding with an issue, there is brought out the spirit of competition, and competition is the spirit that has made America the kind of country it is It is this same spirit of competition that—or it should—makes a political campaign a worthwhile thing. The two party system is something that all true Americans advocate as the real tool of democracy. The instrument by which people can choose objectively.

In choosing sides, the newspaper gives to its readers its interpretation of the issue If the other side feels it is being misused, it can fight all the harder to present the facts. That is what students want—facts!

The college newspaper is an invaluable organ to the interests of the students and of the school and administration. The day that its use is seen as such is the day that democracy and student control will flourish on college campuses.

The day that the newspaper is denied the right to print its views, is the day that the newspaper will no longer function as an instigator of good will.

The university newspaper must and will print the news as it sees it and will have an editorial policy that is not denied the right of freedom of the press, so that college issues, of the students and for the students will not waste in private disdain and so that competition, the forefather of democrary, will have its true place on the campus and in the hearts of all concerned.

And as John Paschall said:

"A newspaper may be judged by the truthfulness of its news columns and the wisdom and justice of its editorial opinions."

● NEVER BUY UNTIL YOU ARE SURE

Is it better to be a Democrat or a Republican? Will Rogers said he was not a member of ANY organized political movement; he was a democrat.

In the true sense of the word, idealistic or not, every American is considered a democrat. A democrat who wants government for and by the people.

Today, besides bearing the political party tag, Americans have become identified as either free dealing liberal democrat, or a conservative buy-as-you-go republican. These definitions do not hold true for any one group of people as an organized sect, but the definitions are true of people as individuals.

Quiet thinking people will hold that the thing to do is to be conservative and buy as you go along. They feel that the Americans' new fad of buying everything on credit is bad. They point out that a nation is as free as its people, and that the majority of the people here are held by the craze of debt.

If the people are a reflection on the nation, then we can assume that the nation is at debt There is a constant danger of losing more than we have The general argument is then, that if a depression—lord help us—should come, the American people stand to lose more than they really own, since most of the property held is either under mortgage, or to be paid for

On the other hand, America would never have been the nation it is if the dollar had not circulated. When the new deal government came into power, they found that a lesser evil would have to be used to combat a greater evil, therefore, hoarding was prohibited, and the circulation of the American dollar was instituted.

Is there any real danger in the flood of debt that has covered this nation. Will the problem get out of hand? That is hard to say.

Fulton Ousler, in his Modern Parables, reminds us to "spend as you go" in his story of the boy who grew up into just such an individual and later in life put up a monument.

"Dedicated to a nameless vagabond. The simple lessons and kindly philosophy taught me in my youth laid the foundation for this home."

Ousler's story went this way. A youth wanted a knife and met a hobo who had one. The hobo consented to sell the boy the knife, but had to wait till the boy had the money. They put the knife up as guarantee at a tavern, and the boy was to bring the money to the counterman as he collected it. The boy did odd chores and brought in his money, and when the set price had been reached, he received his knife. The hobo then said—"Never buy anything you can't be sure you can afford. If I had done that, I wouldn't be the bum I am today"

The boy never forgot, and was glad of it, as is seen by his simple homage to the "nameless vagabond."

We can't be sure whether or not such a philosophy would be appropriate today, but we can think about it!

● FREE PRESS FOR FREE WORLD

Newspaper publishers today have the most important and influential jobs in the United States and in the world. The reason for this is that the newspaper publisher holds a complete power of censorship over what the people will read.

There is no alternative, this must be so, for no newspaper can print all the news, and the selection and emphasis of news is in the hands of the publisher. The reason this is called censorship, is that in selecting, certain are discarded, and the discarding of items is in reality censorship.

Now you'd think that with this power in his finger tips, the newspaper publisher could runin the world. And he could. If he ruled all the papers. But his power of censorship is limited. It is limited to one paper or perhaps to a selected few, but there are—even within one city—many papers, and each one has an individual publisher, with individual concepts of what news is, and of what should or should not be printed.

The people of each community may choose the paper they prefer, or they may choose more than one and get an overall picture. In each case, the whole picture revolves around one central idea, and that is that as long as the individual newspapers are run by different individuals, there is no danger.

The real danger comes when one person or one group have complete control of such a large number of dailies, that the same ideas are available in each. Then is when the newspaper assumes the frankensteinish role that could make or break an issue. Then is when the minds of the people will work one way and one way only, to the advantage of the few.

That is when people the world over must get down on their knees and ask for help, for that is when free men shall be no more.

It is for this reason, and mainly for this reason, that governmental ownership of the 'vox populi" is being fought . . . It is not a selfish vain effort of the publisher to stay in power, it is a self-preservation effort to remain free!

Freedom goes where the Newspaper goes-
NEWSPAPER

The same can be said of radio and all other media of communications. Can you, the common citizen of a great world sit back and not see the danger government ownership carries to free enterprise, to free thought, and to free men?

Once the world of communications is shackled to one master, so shall the minds of the people be shackled to one master. And what was once the contribution of free thinking, will be the spoon fed enigma of a cowardly, dictatorial, and monarchic ruler. For HE shall be the ruler. HE who has this complete control over the people will be the dictator of policies and the distributor of HIS ideals.

Letters to the Editor

Bird Week?

Editor's note—the following letter is reprinted from the Greenville, North Carolina Daily Reflector. It is very important that all students of the University read this, since it might someday lead to national proportions of it hasn't already.

To the editor,

This is National Remove-The-Adenoids-From-The-Birds Week. Scientists have discovered that one out of every 73½ birds has an adenoid. (It is not really an adenoid but a tiny excrescence upon the inner throat of the bird. Scientists call it an adenoid because they are thinking of something else meanwhile.)

Scientific tests disclose that every third bird who has an adenoid has also an inferiority complex. Of every seven birds with an inferiority complex caused by adenoids, at least one is seized with the uncontrollable urge to justify his existence by fying full speed, head first, into a telephone pole, dashing his brains out. It is feared that, over a period of years, this sort of thing is going to lead to an alarming excess of bird brain scattered throughout the land.

(IT SHOULD be pointed out here that one U.S. Senator, famous for his investigations, has openly scoffed at scientific discoveries in this field, and has asserted that the creeping abunoance of bird brains is not caused by adenoids at all, but is caused by horses with communistic leanings. Already, this Senator has set his two famous investigators, disguised as jackasses, on the trail of several suspect horses A Washington commentator has suggested that it is sometimes difficult to distinguish the trailers from the trailed.)

The purpose of National Remove - The -Adenoids-From-The-Birds Week is to raise funds for the construction of a wing on a bird laboretory, and I should like to address this plea to your readers: If someone happens to ring your doorbell at midnight this week, please get up and go to the door. You will be handed a package of bird seeds, and in return you may contribute any amount up to one month's salary, but not less than four cents.

IT REQUIRES at least four cents worth of anything you can think of to make a bird laugh; and if you can't make the bird laugh, you can't look down his throat; and if you can't look down his throat, the whole business is futile Remember, it takes money to amploy highly-trained technicians who are able to tell an adenoid from an oat seed. And, without money, it is difficult to obtain the services of scientists. Lots of people are having to look at their own microscopes these days. Unless something is done, nothing will be done.

Humor Editor Seems Peeved

Dear Editor:

I am writing in reference to your article entitled, EDITOR SAYS "LITTLE" ABOUT "MUCH." Of particular significance to me was the referance made to humor in college magazines. You pointed out the fact that the University of Michigan has ordered no more humor printed in their student magazine. Madame Editor, do you consider this freedom of the press? Is this the type of journalistic enslavement that you would contemplate?

I can understand the University of Michigan withdrawing bad or filthy humor from the magazine, but in times like these, when humor is often a relief from the "BITTERNESS OF THE TIME," then it is most un-American to suppress the jokes that make people smile again.

First let me explain to you that students do not support the student magazine in their registration fee, but buy it just as you or I would buy the Life, Time or Look Magazines at the University of Michigan. Secondly, over half of the college magazines in the nation are humor magazines, giving you some idea of the tastes

EDITOR JOKES SERIOUSLY ABOUT TRAFFIC

By ORCHID ALONSO
Editor

NEW WEEKENDS DEVISED FOR SAFETY

Was just reading the traffic accident reports and came up with the conclusion that the only safe thing for college students that drive home on weekends is for the weekend to start on Tuesday and end on Thursdays. The reports indicate that Saturday is the most dangerous day in the week to travel and also, that twenty five per cent of all drivers involved in fatal auto accidents are under twenty five years of age. That suits college students to a T.

GOOD NEWS FOR FSU DRIVERS

One consolation about these reports is that Tallahassee students needn't worry too much, since three out of every four accidents occur in clear weather on dry roads. In Tallahassee? Never!

TRAFFIC NOTICE RESEMBLES SONG?

Like that popular(?) song of last year, lessee, what was that? Oh yes . . . "Granma's Lye Soap" . . . Nope, but its pratty close. Any way, to get back to traffic, like that song, they claim that eighty percent of the vehicles involved in traffic accidents were travelling straight ahead . . . . Did they think they'd travel sideways?

OMAR KHAYYAM HELPS WITH THE SERIOUS SIDE

The serious side to all this junk is that last year, 37,000 Americans were killed in traffic accidents. (editor's note—I guess they didn't state how many non-Americans were killed.) This is one of the places where Omar Khayyam's poetry - philosophy comes to fill the bill, for one can not wish away an accident AFTER it has happened.

> "The moving finger writes, and having writ moves on. Nor all they piety nor wit shall lure it back to cancel half a line, nor all thy tears wash out a word of it."

It makes pretty good sense, even if its not quoted correctly, my memory isn't what it used to be. But, I will remember to drive carefully. Won't you?

SERMONS,—SERMONS

They claim that this column sounds like a sermon! And just pray tell me, is wrong with a sermon! Nuff sed!

THROW YOUR BEEFS AT SAMMY

I'd like you all to meet Sammy. Sammy is a gremlin. His original name was Tommy Jeff. (Thanks go to Gene Henderson and Jack Espinosa for not pressing kidnapping or plagarism charges against me) Sammy is a funny gremlin; he rides around on my hair and whispers in my ear. He deserves most of the credit — or the kicks — for this column. Next week, follow the adventures of Sammy in the National and scholastic picture. Yes, if we have time, we are going to write an honest-to-goodness column.

DOWN, BOY! GRRRR

As a closing thought: Did you know that Americans spend five times as much per year on dog food as they do for college textbooks? Literally, our education is going to the dogs.

SENATOR SUGGESTS 'CALLING' ON GOD

By Senator George Smathers

WASHINGTON—All the headlines tell of shocking occurances in a confused and troubled world, and creates apprehension about what tomorrow may bring. With out in any sense detracting from the seriousness of the situation involving our country, we can take courage in the soundness of our democracy and continue resolute in our course, to keep ourselves strong materially and spiritually. With an alert and God fearing citizenry our country has many bright years ahead and we should become neither discouraged nor frightened.

AID FOR WORKING MOTHERS. The House Committee charged with responsibility for writing tax laws began a series of hearings last week looking toward removing inequities in present taxation. Since Chairman Dan Reed opened the subject, I took the opportunity to press the case for my admendment to aid working mothers. Specifically, I propose that mothers who are breadwinners be authorized to list as deductions, in income tax returns, the amount paid out during the year for nursing and child care. This is known as the "baby sitter" bill. Many members of Congress agree with me tthat it is a fair approach t o a touching problem.

THOSE DOCTOR BILLS! I have also suggesterd to Chairman Reed that he direct the attention of his committee to my proposal that a new formula be worked out for a deduction from income taxes of large or unusual medical costs. The present formula, of permitting deduction only of costs exceeding five per cent of one's income, does not relieve the taxpayer of hardship caused by extraordinary illnesses nor give to him the relief needed and desired.

QUESTION OF NEW STATES: It seems to me that too little importance has been attached to the questions of statehood for Alaska and Hawaii. In principle, all of us subscribe to the belief that all citizens are entitled to the ballot, that taxation without representation is tyranny. But I think we can also agree that the citizens of our present 48 states are entitled to a voice in deciding whether or not our bounds shall be extended, a new group of citizens taken into our union. I am asking therefore other senators to join me in a constitutional amendment to provide that new states can be admitted only after 2-3rds of the members of Congress have approved along with 3-4th of the legislatures of the present states—the same requirement for changing the Constitution.

FARMERS: I have a number of farm bulletins available for free distribution. Write me if you want a list from which to select. "Home Canning of Fruits and Vegetables" is popular at this season.

College Boys Run Wild As Spring Brings on New Raids

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article was written from information sent out by the feature service of the Associated Collegiate Press.

In spring, a young man's fancy turns to . . . panty raids???

Or another like misquotation could be . . . Spring has sprung, the grass is ris, I wonder where my "unmentionables" is.

Panty raids are still going from college to college, but in the long run, most of the outbreaks have been less "successful" this year than they were last year.

AT THE UNIVERSITY of Vermont a group of would-be raiders went home panting and pantless when they were met by local and state police as they marched towards the co-ed dorm in a "surprise" attack. In wondering why the surprise attack was not a surprise, one recalls the old song . . . Bloomers Are Flying. On second thought, the song was "Rumors.", not "Bloomers "

Another group of men, this time at the University of Connecticutt, yelled for undergarments and got buckets of water. Their prolonged yelling, all two minutes of it, was broken up with a threatening warning from their dean.

But at Michigan State College, warnings meant little. Police were forced to arrest thirty-four students, mostly freshmen, for participating in a six-hour riot during which windows were smashed, bon-fires lit, fist-fights started, and two persons were injured. These proved to be a most spirited bunch.

This group even tried to panty raid on the river, sending three co-eds and their dates, in canoes, into the water.

The girls' part in this raid was spirited also. Girls fought with each other. Some wanted to open the dorms, while the others tried to prevent them.

At the University of Southern California, things took a different twist. The only thing the 400 rioting boys seemed interested in was getting furniture and tossing it into bon fires. Police termed it a "major riot" and sent out the force. The first squad car to arrive on the scene was tossed over, and the tires on the others were deflated.

Boys shouting, "We're crazy with the heat," started new fires as fast as the fire department could put them out. Wonder just what the boys who "were" crazy "with the heat" thought they could accomplish by starting fires Cool off, maybe?

COMMENTS FROM dailies in the cities affected ranged from "A threat to group living", to "If college teaches them no higher aspiratoins, here's a suggestion: Military service in Korea."

One psychology professor said that students did their collectively because on American campuses, "this sort of thing is expected."

That's a new one for this corner. Never knew panty raids were the "expected" thing on campus.

The award is based on high scholastic standing, interest in the hotel industry, and an ability to succeed in the field of hotel work.

The award was presented to Moore by Dr. Donald Lundberg, head of the department. Moore entered FSU after serving as a cryptographic specialist in the U. S. Army.

Death Toll

ROSENBERGS FINALLY DIE!

One week has passed since the Supreme Court justices pronounced the execution sentenced which ended one of the longest trials of treason and espionage in the history of the Supreme Court. A week has passed, and a case which a week ago stirred the senses of very justice-seeking individual in this country and abroad is today a page in history.

The couple executed for 'a crime worse than murder' received a just and fair trial by their peers as guaranteed by the Constitution, and all was done for over two years to either establish their guilt or to affirm their innocence. At the end of this time, the court which had given them every possible advantage reached a decision of 'guilty' which neither stays of execution nor pleas for clemency could alter. The verdict was given; the sentence was pronounced, and the execution was carried out.

The convicted spies who had been tried in a democratic trial in a democracy were sentenced, and today in the pages of history stand as an example to all other communist spies who would tamper with the grinding wheels of justice which "grind slow, yet exceedingly small."

However, in every case where death is the sentence there will always exist the question: "Were innocent human beings put to death?" So it is in this case which execution sealed closed forever; is there a possibility that the man and woman convicted of endangering the lives of millions were really innocent as they professed to be to the end?

Flambeau Prints VA Aid for Vets

Veterans in school under the Korean GI Bill sho notify the Veterans Administration immediately if they planning to change their address at the close of the spr term, so that GI allowance checks can bedelivered witho delay.

The Post Office is not permitted to forward Government checks from one address to another, VA plains. For that reason, GI allowance checks mailed an address at which a veteran no longer lives, must go ba to the Treasury, where they remain until VA finds where to send them.

KOREAN GI Bill allowances for the month of May generally will not be delivered to veteran-trainees until late in June, after veterans who have been living on the campus will have returned home for the summer.

Those veterans who have notified VA of their change of address, should experience no difficulty in getting prompt delivery of their allowance checks.

No action need be taken, however, in the case of a veteran-student who continues to live at the same residence. Only those who move need notify VA of their new addresses.

TO INFORM VA of an address change, all a veteran need do is write a letter to the Veterans Administration regional office handling his records. In his letter he should give his claim number, both his old and new address, and he should be sure to sign it.

Veterans Administration here lists some helpful hints for veterans planning to start training this summer under the Korean GI Bill.

First and foremost, a veteran should give plenty of thought to his choice of a training goal, and to the program that will en him to reach it Under the he may be allowed to change program no more than once it's to his advantage to cho right in the first place.

The goal—which must selected before training can gin—may be educational, such earning a degree; profes such as law or medicine; or cational, such as becoming a c penter or television repairm

VETERANS WHO are not of their objectives may rece vocational counselling from VA.

Next, VA reminds veterans take along enough money of own to tide them over for the first several months of tra ing. It takes that long, un the Korean GI Bill, for a ve eran's first GI allowance ch to reach him. The reason is th the allowances are paid so time after the end of each mon of traning completed. But bef VA can make a payment, it m receive a certification—signed the veteran and his school establishment —stating that actually was in training dur that month. Allowance che

THE BUILDING was constructed in 1938-39 by the Public Works Administration through state funds, alumni association funds, and special gifts. It is entirely supported by student activity fees.

Miss Jane Adams, social hostess and director of the building for the past four years has her office on the first floor. She and her student helpers and a night time assistant keep the building open from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. They schedule rooms for all meetings and arrange for groups to use the various lounges.

MISS ADAMS came to FSU in 1949 from Mississippi State College for Women. She taught in the Home Management Division of the Home Economics Department there for many years. She came to FSU as a visiting professor in the Home Economics Department in 1946.

Student activity fees pay the operating expenses and the salaries of Miss Adams, her assistants, and the two maids and two janitors, which make up the staff of the building.

The climax of the comic-opera is wheo she discovers her dreadful mistake and finds that besides, he does not love her.

While she is out, the maid convinces Bob, Alfred Medinets, that be should run away with her, so they depart, but not before taking everything in the house which is of value, including the car.

THE THEATRE-FORM opera's dialogue was carried on with song, with music by David Shapiro.

The settings representing Miss Todd's parlor, kitchen and upstairs bedroom, were all on the stage at the same time. Scene shifts were executed by lighting effects.

After the opera, the company performed various numbers, and again, Miss Vost's winning ways and smile endeared her to the listeners.

Among the songs rendered were "It's a Grand Night for Singing," Offenbach's "Letter Aria", "I Got Plenty of Nuttin", "Bess You Is My Womao Now", "It Ain't Necessarily So", and "June Is Busting Out All Over".

Miss Vost's only solo number was "La Seguidilla" from Carmen.

Lloyd Slind Authors New Music Textbook

Lloyd Slind, instructor in music education at Florida State University, is the author of a new text-book for teaching music in the elementary grades. Entitled "Melody, Rhythm and Harmony for the Elementary Grades," the book is designed to present all three of these aspects of music to the student simultaneously.

Published by Mills Music Co., the book includes parts for voices plus melodic and rhythmic instruments so that the students may play their own accompaniments as they sing. The combined instrumental-vocal approach represents a new departure in the teaching of elementary music, according to Mr. Slind.

New teacher's retirement laws passed by the 1953 legislature ware reviewed last night for the benefit of Florida State University faculty, Leon County teachers, and teachers currently enrolled at FSU.

The laws were reviewed by Kermit Farris from the State Teachers' Retirement Office in Tallahassee who answered questions. The teachers met with Farris in the science lecture room, 124 Science.

The meeting was of particular interest to teachers because of a July 1 deadline, by which time teachers must complete any changes they may wish to make involving a higher plan for their monthly retirement contributions, said Dr. Wesey Vordenberg, FSU director of non-academic personnel.

Dr. Sam Neel, chaplain, introduced the speaker.

THE MONTHLY GI allowances are the only payments made under the Korean GI Bill With the help of these checks, veteran-trainees must meet all their own training expenses—tuition, fees, books and the like.

As another point to be kept in mind VA urges veterans to check over carefully their application forms, and make sure they're completely filled out, before mailing them to VA. A photostat or certified copy of separation papers must accompany the application. Incomplete applications can mean unnecessary delays.

VETERANS WHO KNOW what their training program and objectives are must list these items on the application. Those who don't want VA counselling as an aid in making up their minds, merely leave these two sections blank, and instead, in the section that requests counselling.

VA has one final reminder for veterans who know what courses they want to take. If it's possible, these veterans should make their own arrangements for gaining admittance to the school of their choice, before they file their applications.

Annual 'Ice Cream Social' Held at Bryan Hall Arcade

Colored lights and recorded music were the setting for the informal ice cream social at the Bryan-Reynolds arcade Monday night at 8:30 p.m. "The get-acquainted social has been a part of the Summer Recreation Program for the past three years," stated Miss Christine P Summer program director.

Several flavors of ice cream were served in double-scoop servings to nearly 600 of the 'summer family' present.

TOM LYNCH, graduate student from Miami, acted as master of ceremonies. Lynch introduced campus officers elected for the summer session and made several announcements.

H. Hoyt Price, assistant registrar, gave the figures on registration which officially ended Monday afternoon. He said total number on campus would "run close to 3100."

A WELCOME to all students, graduates and undergraduates, was given by A. B. Martin, university vice-president. Martin said he hoped that all would take advantage of the good time offered as well as make use of their time for some serious studying.

Announcements were made concerning plans for the softball and bowling leagues to be formed. Students are requested to go to the practice fields for tryouts each evening at 6 p.m.

Community singing led by Herman Gunter of the School of Music, concluded the program.

Arrangements for the social were handled by Wallis Stein, president of the Graduate club, Sue Nell White, graduate assistant for the Summer Program. Also Minnie Frances Jones, and Tom White.

Letters to the Editor . . .

of the American Student whether good or bad.

I am sorry that you are ashamed to admit that any college student would be willing to give a big slice of their registration ($1.00 at FSU) to print matter that will make them smile and sometimes laugh, and make them temporarily think that they do not live in such a terrible world of wars and propaganda. Besides "Humor" as such does not mean an endless spattering of jokes, but also includes Humorous Features and often highly funny literary articles.

In closing, may I leave this one thought with you Madame Editor. "Smile and the whole world smiles with you. Cry and you cry alone."

Cordially,
JOHN W. HOWARD,
Editor-in-Chief,
Smoke Signals,
Campus Humor
Magazine.

I am sorry you took my words as a personal offense. Humor such as you have explained in the above letter is good and even desirable. The humor I was referring to was in particular such humor as found in Lear and Orange Peel plus a score of others over the nation. I am sorry that I did not make myself clear in stating that the University of Michigan's magazine had printed "objectional" humor, was warned, and later appeared with more of the same.

However, maybe you didn't make yourself clear last semester when you stated, quote: "Emphasis will be entirely on humor next year. unquote. At that time you gave no explanation as to what you referred to in your letter. There was also a general agreement that you intended to cut down literary articles to a minimum. There was no mention of substituting humor-literary.

Dr. Badger Writes On Supreme Court

United State Supreme court cases, from 1790 to 1951, dealing with education have been analysed by William Badger in his doctoral dissertation. Badger received his Ed D. here this June.

The dissertation contains a comprehensive analysis of educational cases, makes a summary, draws conclusions and lists 43 implications.

Badger, who based his research on 343 volumes of United States Reports on Supreme court decisions regarding education, grouped his study into meaningful classifications according to legal issues such as charities and trusts for education, and charters and contracts. He also studied taxation, the school curriculum, admission and membership of students in educational institutions. Cases concerning teaching national unity, sectarianism in schools, segregations, bonds, school lands, teacher tenures, and others were investegated

Badger expressed hope that his study may enlarge the concept of the Supreme Court's role in education, concluding, "the power of teaching will not be destroyed as long as this court sits."

2000 Students See Law Maker In Action Here

Approximately 2,000 Florida students got a look at the State Legislature in action and an idea of what their tax dollars are buying in terms of government. The students, from 63 Florida schools, visited the capital during a recent Know Your Government program sponsored by Florida State University.

The visiting students were housed in the new 11-floor dorm, receiving instructions on the operation of the government from the staff of the FSU school of public administration.

Commenting on this year's program University president Doak S Campbell said that the opportunity to see Florida government at work is an important part of every student's education.

"From the responses we have received, we are led to believe that the students appreciated the opportunity and that they profited greatly from the experience." stated President Campbell.

The committee reports that the 1955 legislature Know Your Government program will be expanded to serve more students.

Dr. Campbell Says New Service First Of Kind In South

By DOROTHY MASSEY

Scientific study of mass communications to benefit editors and readers will be stressed by the New Bureau of Media Research and Service just established by the Florida State University school of journalism. This is the first bureau of its kind in the South.

Both editorial and advertising problems of press and radio will be examined, Dean Laurence R Campbell announced. Emphasis will be given to studies of particular interest to Florida and the South

THE BUREAU, which will be headed by Dr. Sidney Kobre, will study how newspapers and radio present their news and how these communication facilities might be improved from the standpoint of the reader and publisher.

Investigators will do readership studies to find which pages and sections of the paper are being read most and which are not getting enough attention. The bureau will also study the readability of news, features and editorials. Similar jobs will be done for radio, magazines and advertising.

DR. KOBRE, the head of the new bureau, received his training at Johns Hopkins University being awarded an A. B 1927. He attended Columbia University School of Journalism, 1927-28, and received his M. A. and Ph D. in Sociology in the Graduate School of Social Science, Columbia University

He was a reporter on the Newark, N. J Star-Eagle, and the Newark Ledger. Dr. Kobre wrote features for the Baltimore Sun

Kilpatrick New Librarian; Joel In Journalism School

In the first major shift in administration since Dr. A. B. Martin's appointment as vice president two years ago, Dr. Louis D. Corson will replace Dr. Otis McBride as Dean of Men. The announcement was made by President Doak S. Campbell.

Growing rumors that Dean Katherine Warren will resign her position as Dean of Women in the fall has been denied by reliable sources.

ALSO ANNOUNCED by President Campbell is the replacement of Miss Louise Richardson, librarian, by Norman Kilpatrick, former associate director of libraries at the State University of Iowas, and the appointment of Richard Joel, director of the Division of Journalism, Emory University, Atlanta, as professor of advertising in the School of Journalism here.

Dr. Corson assumed his position as Dean of Men yesterday. Corson was a member of the West Virginia University faculty in the Department of History, and served as faculty adviser to the council of fraternity presidents and as a member of the university committee on student housing.

THE NEW DEAN received his AB and MA degrees in history from the West Virginia University, and his doctor's degree in higher education was conferred at Sanford University.

During World War II and the Korean War, Corson served in the Air Force and was recently discharged with the rank of captain.

Kilpatrick, newly appointed Librarian, received his AB and MA degrees from Brown University Providence, Rhode Island, and a BS degree in Library Science from Columbia University. He has held positions as chief of technical processes at Brown University, director of a survey of federal archives for Rhode Island and Connecticut, and chief of the acquisition department, U.S Department of Agriculture Library Washington.

KILPATRICK has attended special summer courses at the University of London and taught at Sofia College, Bulgaria

Richard Joel new advertising professor, was recently elected southeastern vice president of Alpha Delta Sigma, professional advertising fraternity for men.

The Reporter, the magazine of Direct Mail Advertising, New York City, in the May issue saluted Joel as a "Crusader for Advertising Education." This was in recognition of his organization and management for a four year period of the Annual Advertising Institute for Adults at Emory University.

JOEL HAS an AB degree from the School of Journalism, University of Georgia and an MA degree from the University of Wisconsin; he has done further graduate work at Northwestern University.

After three years service with the Air Force as a public relations man he was appointed assistant professor of journalism Emory University, 1946. In 1948 Joel was made associate professor and head of the advertising and management sequence and has been director of the Division

FSU Student's Survey Takes Form In Charts

Legislature Study Gives Journalists Interesting Data

In an office of the School of Journalism, a huge figure-covered chart, hangs on the wall, representing the findings of a study of press coverage during the legislative session. The survey was done by Dr Sidney Kobre and eleven FSU students.

The purpose of the survey was to form a picture of the press coverage of the legislative session, the methods used to gather the news, the presentation in the newspapers and differing editorial stands

The study, which will include pictures taken by Robert Steel, graduate student, has not been completed, but the figures show that as many as 5,000 inches (507 stories) were devoted to legislative news by one newspaper alone

The FSU students, working under the direction of Dr Kobre, professor of journalism, studied 11 newspaper to discover how, from the great confusion and noisy debates of a legislature, the newsmen produce clear, informative stories for Florida newspaper readers.

They were busy learning for instance how the reporters covered the sessions of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, when both were in session simultaneously.

The eleven students participating in the survey followed the reporters to discover how they were able to cover a dozen legislative committee meetings and hearings in session at the same time with at least three of them dealing with important bills

They learned that the Associated Press with a five man staff, wrote some of its stories on the legislative floor using silent

'Changing' Voice An Asset Says Choral Director Here

To most choral directors the changing adolescent voice at the junior high level is a musical problem which is best avoided till the student's voice has changed and troublesome squeaks are eliminated forever.

But 21 choral directors from 7 Southern states spent two weeks on the Florida State University campus learning that the changing voice can be an asset to the high school chorus, rather than a detriment

The course called the Workshop in Junior High School Choral Techniques and Arranging, has as Workshop director, Dr Irvin Cooper, professor of music education at Florida State University and formerly supervisor of music in the public schools of Montreal, Canada and lecturer at McGill University, Montreal Canada.

DR. COOPER is a nationally recognized authority on the junior high school voice, being almost the only such specialist in the U.S He has devoted the major portion of his professional life towards convincing choral directors that the changing voice can be a "musical joy instead of a problem."

He has conducted demonstrations of his techniques in 10 different states during the last three years

The participants in the FSU workshop included city supervisors of music, classroom teachers and university professors.

MANY OF THE teachers were disturbed by the old saying that the voice shouldn't be used while it is changing. But Dr. Cooper maintains that the adolescent doesn't stop using his arms or legs, even though they are going through the same sort of sudden growth that the vocal cords are experiencing. "Don't overwork the changing voice" he says, "but exercise it just as you exercise growing limbs"

Social welfore Association Recieves National Acceptance

The Florida Chapter of the American Association of Group Workers, the forty-second such group in the United States and Canada, has received official acceptance and certification, said Dr Ira H Holland president of the Florida Chapter.

Dr Holland, associate professor of social welfare at Florida State University, revealed that the petition was granted at a meeting of the national executive committee of the organization held in New York City

THE STATE of Florida was also accepted as the geographical area for the group.

Approved by the national organization was the new organization's proposed plan to sponsor an institute in group work with the Florida Conference of Social Welfare

OFFICERS OF the Florida chapter of AAGW include Dr Holland and Mrs Hardin V. Stuart, secretary-treasurer of the chapter.

Charter members are Dr. E. A Conover, associate professor of social welfare, FSU; Mrs. Victoria Warner, A&M University; Mrs Josephine H Smith, Miss Dempsey Creary, Mrs. Evelyn B Dean, Randy Polansky, Miss Bonnie Wimpee, Miss Betty Jane Moors, Mrs. G. P. Schanek, Jr., Mrs. A W. Sarver, Captain George Pyke, and Miss Mary Anne Potts

Teacher Shortages Serious; Kelly Asks For Recruitments

James T. Kelley, director of Teacher Education and Certification, told faculty and students of the school of education and members of the Leadership Training Conference that unless something is done to ease the teacher shortage in Florida, there will not be enough teachers to give students a proper start in school.

Kelley appeared before the group Tuesday night as the third speaker in a series of education lectures sponsored jointly by the school of education and Kappa Delta Pi, education honorary.

EACH YEAR the state is forced to recruit sixty per cent of its teachers from out of state, while one third of its own graduates do not enter the teaching profession

"Next year we will need 3,000 new teachers to take care of the 30,000 new students entering the public schools in Florida," said Kelley. "It is getting harder to recruit teachers from out of state because of the pay increases the other states have received.

TO HELP EASE the teacher shortage, the state issues emergency certificates for one year to students without their degrees. These students must then earn six semester hours of professional training to renew their emergency certificates

"Last year, the state issued 2500 such certificates" stated Kelley.

TEACHERS must act as recruiters. They must try to get their students interested in the teaching profession, not discourage them. Last year only 777 students in the state were trained for teaching

"If the teaching profession is good enough for you to stay in," said Kelley, "you should want to recruit others into it."

Adult Education Workshop Prepare Instructional Book

The first handbook in the Southeastern states developed by educators to improve instruction in adult education is being prepared on the campus of Florida State University.

The pioneer work in Florida education is being done by 25 participants and seven consultants in a three-week Adult Education Workshop set up especially to develop the handbook

"We have had an urgent need for just such a handbook," Sam E Hand, director of adult and veteran education for the Florida Department of Education, said "since state supported general adult education was first authorized in the Florida Minimum Foundation School Laws of 1947.",

HAND SAID PRIOR to 1950 only eight counties in Florida used state support for a general adult education program. He said today 42 counties use such aid.

There has long been a need for such a manual because the job of teaching adults is so varied and different from teaching children the educator said.

Many teachers of adults are brought in from all manner of occupations, trades and skills and the manual will be designed to aid these teachers whether they have had professional training or not

THE HANDBOOK will point out procedures that have proved to be effective in various teaching situations and classes, characteristics of adult learners, characteristics of effective teachers of adults, materials and resources and equipment found useful in adult education and methods of evaluating progress toward objectives of various classes.

Among the top consultants participating in the workshop along with outstanding Florida educators and FSU faculty members are:

DR. HOMER KEMPFER, Washington, D. C., executive director of the national home study council, and vice president of the adult education association of the United States

Thomas A Van Sant, director of adult education for the City of Baltimore. Dr Robert Fairing, head of the Citizenship Department of the general extension division of Florida, and Hugh Betts, supervisor of adult education and evening high school of Knoxville, Tennessee.

Florida's "Pharmacist of Year" Hasn't 'Rolled Pill' Since '30

A man who by his own admission "hasn't rolled a pill or compounded a prescription" for more than 20 years has been named Florida's "Pharmacist of the Year."

He is Marshall H. Doss of Jacksonville, director of the Florida State Board of Health Bureau of Narcotics Control, presented with the James H Beal plaque as "Pharmacist of the Year" at the annual meeting of the Florida State Pharmaceutical Association held recently in St. Petersburg

ALTHOUGH HE has not practiced his profession for more than 20 years, Doss is probably known to more Florida druggists than any other man in the state. One of his principal jobs over the years in his capacity as narcotics inspector has been to visit drug stores periodically to check their records on narcotics prescriptions

He reports that "by and large Florida's pharmacists are scrupulously honest in the face of strong temptation where the handling of narcotics is concerned. Their intimate knowledge of narcotics and their dangerous habit-forming qualities make them careful in preparing and dispensing narcotics or prescriptions containing narcotic drugs."

AS A REGISTERED pharmacist, Doss has maintained a membership in the Florida State Pharmaceutical Association for many years.

Doss joined the State Board of Health Division of Drug Inspection as narcotics inspector January 6, 1931, and was named chief inspector a year later

When the division was changed to the Bureau of Narcotics by State Legislative action in 1941, Doss was named the bureau's first and only director to date.

The bureau consists of a director and six inspectors. Headquarters are in Jacksonville with district offices located in Miami, Tampa and Tallahassee. In addition to the state staff, the City of Jacksonville Police Department, has assigned a detective sergeant to the bureau for many years.

Besides enforcing the narcotics laws, the bureau is the enforcement agency for the state's medical practices act and the state pharmacy law.

Beach Trip Changes Ruge Worship Hour

Chis Young, Ruge president, announces that Sunday worship service at Ruge Hall this Sunday will be at 7 30 a.m. instead of 9 30 a.m

"This," says Chris "will enable students to leave early for the Panama City outing sponsored by the Episcopal Student Center. The group leaving for Panama City beach will meet in front of the hall at 8 a.m. and return after supper.

Placement List Open To Students

Seniors and graduate students who expect to receive a degree this Summer are invited to establish placement credentials if they have not already done so, says Dr. Glover E. Tully, director of Vocational Guidance and Placement

Candidates who have already received one degree from this university may bring their records up to date to show the additional training and experience.

"A graduate who is seeking a position will be notified of vacancies as they are reported to the Placement Office," Tully stated "whereas a graduate who already has a position may request that his name be placed in the inactive file. All graduates, once they have registered for placement, have the privilege of using the placement services at any future date."

The Placement Office is located in 203 Westcott.

Artist Series 'Show' Slated for Tuesday

Gregory–Strong Team To Appear In Presentation

A "unique idiom of music and dance" will be presented on Tuesday, July 7 at 8:15 p.m. in the outdoor theatre when Boris Gregory, concertina virtuoso, and Rod Strong, dynamic young dancer, combine their talents in a new and exciting program, ranging in style from the classics to modern jazz, dramatic to humorous pantomime.

Gregory and Strong are bringing to the concert stage on their current tour an expanded version of the same "show" that has made them one of the top attractions for supper rooms in this country, South America and Europe.

THEIR TOUR of the southern states follows a succession of other engagements that have placed them in great demand.

Following their five-week stint at the Persian Room of New York's Plaza Hotel, they embarked on a six-week tour of Caribean and South American points returning to this country in time to play the month of February in the Empire Room of the Palmer House in Chicago, with their southern concert tour beginning immediately afterwards

CONCERT-GOERS will see the "Court Dance" performed by Mr Strong with the music of Bach's Gavotte and Rondo performed on the concertina by Mr Gregory.

In contrast, they will enjoy a wonderful "soft-shoe" dance routine for concertinist and dancer, based on "Tea for Two." Other numbers a the program will feature concertina solos by Mr. Gregory, and two dance solos by Mr. Strong and several duets.

Composers whose works will be featured include Bach, Chopin, Paganini Mozart, Sarasate, Rachmanioff, Albeniz, Dinicu-Hefetz, Shastakovich, Kreisler, Brahms, Youmans and Anderson.

SHOWN HERE ARE Boris Gregory and Rod Strong. The dance-concertina duo will appear at the amphitheatar Tuesday for an Artist Series presentation.

Internationally Famous Duo On Tour Of South After Show In Empire Room

Boris Gregory, comonly caled the "world's greatest concertina virtuosi," is equally at home on the concert stage and in the popular field, having played in all the major concert halls throughout the United States and Europe. Probably the reigning expert on his unusual instrument, Mr. Gregory's father was also the world's greatest concertinist of his time and this title has come down from father to son

Gregory has been guest soloist with the Mexico City Symphony Orchestra the New York Civic Symphony the Royal Philharmonic of London and the Paris Conservatory Orchestra.

The New York Times reviewed him recently as "playing with haunting quality, delicate inflection, nuances and brilliant technique." In France, the Paris Press said "Boris Gregory is probably one of the musical world's finest technicians and a sensitive musician."

In addition to solo concert tours and joint concerts with Rod Strong the dancer Mr Gregory's achievements in other branches of the entertainment field have been equally impressive

He has filled engagements in the Bowman Room of New York's Biltmore Hotel, the Persian Room of the Plaza, Ciro's in Hollywood, the Embassy Club London, the Cirque Room San Francisco and the Empire Room of Chicago's Palmer House. He and Rod Strong recently completed a tour of South America and the Caribean.

Rod Strong, a young dancer whose dazzling rhythms and thrilling ballet leaps have carried him to sixteen countries in the past four years, is now an international figure in the dance world. Combining the rhythmic qualities with which he presents tap and the dynamic movement and freedom of ballet and modern, Mr Strong is unquestionably one of the top dancers of our time

In addition to several concert and supper room tours with Boris Gregory Strong has been featured as soloist with his wife in theatres and clubs on several tours of Europe

He is no stranger to the theatre-goers of his own country having danced with great success at the Roxy in New York, the Chicago Theatre and Capitol in Washington

Rod Strong was featured in London's largest television show, "Continental Cabaret." He also appeared at the world-famous Club Lido in Paris and the exclusive Sporting Club of Monte Carlo. He also had the honor of being invited to dance at the command performance for the President of France at the Paris Opera House two years in succession.

Artist Series Get Thanks For Job Well-Done Here

Students here will get to see a great show next Tuesday. The Gregory and Strong team have appeared throughout the entire world and even given command performances for royalty. Students should appreciate this.

The thanks for this contribution to Florida State University's culture goes to the Artist Series comittee that has been at work for years to bring FSU students the best there is in opera, comedy, theater and all the entertainment you can think of.

Last year, students viewed Wagner's production of Bizet's famous opera, Carmen. This was only one of the many productions brought to the university by the Artist Series people.

This sumer, students have already viewed the Comic Opera. There can be no mistaking but that the comittee has done a marvelous job and deserves more than just a pat on the back. Mr. Thomas Wright is chairman of the committee, which includes students also.

This summer, there are still several more presentations that will be brought to the campus by the Artist Series. Among them are Lloyd Lavaux, world famous accordianist, and Nelson and Neal, duo pianists.

Thanks go also to Mrs. Kay Vernon from the Public Relations Office. She is in charge of arrangements and publicity. Mrs. Vernon indicated distress at the large number of persons who turned away from the last show because of lack of seating capacities. Since, she has arranged for the bleachers that will accomodate 180 more seates in the outdoor theater.

● DOES COLLEGE MAKE SUCCESS?

Is a college education essential to success? That might be determined if the exact connotation of the word essential could be arrived at. The exact meaning of sucess could also help.

If essential means that if you don't have a colege education you won't be a sucess, then the statement is untrue. Many people are a sucess who don't have a college education.

Now we go into the meaning of the word success. Just what does it mean? Acording to Webster, it is a degree or measure of succeeding or prospering.

If the person associates the word succes with the type of job, then the statement is true. Latest official figures show that only thirteen per cent of the non-college U.S. men are proprietors, managers and executives, while U.S. men college graduates have thirty four percent in that field. Fifty per cent of the graduates of colleges are in some kind of profession, while only three percent of the non-college men are in the professions.

Fifty eight per cent of the non-college graduates are in the field of skilled or semi-skilled or unskilled labor. In this field, only five percent are college men. Only one per cent of the colege men are engaged in farming, while fourteen per cent of the non-college men are farmers.

In the last category, clerical, sales, and kindred work is almost even for both college and non-college men. The figures there are twelve for the non-college and ten for the college men.

Taken in over-all terms, this means that eighty four percent of the college graduates are in the professions, or are managers, proprietors or executives. This to only seventeen per cent for the no-college.

Also, it shows that in the clerical, sales, farming, and skilled, semi-skiled, and non-skilled, only sixteen per cent of them are college men, while eighty four per cent of the non-college men are engaged in this type of work.

If you measure success by decimal points and dollar marks, then there is the possibility that the outcome of all this is that on the whole, many more people who go to college become successes than do those that don't.

It's not impossible, but the odds are against you!

● MADCAP CELEBRATION VS?

Tomorrow is the Fourth of July, summer's biggest holiday, and the Nation's populace will scatter to the four winds in recognition of their independence. It seems that the annual celebration of the historic event which set July 4 as a national holiday is, in fact, a menace to public safety in that the actual reason behind the celebration has been forgotten in the mad scramble to get to the beach, plains, or mountains.

The Fourth of July is Independence Day and should be a day for the celebration of the event of the signing of the Declaration of Independence which gave us our right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Too few of us in our excitment of planning an active weekend for the Fourth actually realize that it is significant day in our history not to be accepted just as an opportunity to go out and keep from getting killed in the holiday traffic.

The true meaning of Independence Day lies not in the idea of setting of firecrackers and waving the Stars and Stripes, but in the realization that it stands for a way of life which our forefathers were willing to fight for to insure it for posterity.

We of today should not take this event for granted and say that it was just something that happened two hundred or so years ago and that's that. .The Declaration of Independence is just as important today as it was in 1776 and it is the responsibility of every American to see that nothing threatens the principles of individual right for which the document stands

Wars are being fought today for just such rights as our Declaration of Independence set forth. Wars in which, like our forefathers, advocates of the American way are spilling their blood on the battle field.

Let us not lose sight of the Fourth of July in a flourishing brilliance of bright colored flares and red, white, and blue.

● BY THE DAWNS EARLY LIGHT

A thoughtful mind, when it sees a nation's flag, sees not the flag alone but the nation itself . . . .

This is why reverence should be paid to the American Flag. Not because we salute a piece of cloth bearing stars and stripes, but because we salute the nation, grand old nation that it is!

Recently, one Floridian complained to the editor of his city paper about the lack of interest shown by the town's people on flag day. He revealed that after covering 34 city blocks, only four flags had been seen on display.

In these times, it is inconceivable that the old tradition of honoring the American banner would die. For economic reasons, it is understandable that the flags would not fly year 'round, but on Flag Day, that they should be neglected!

Here in Tallahassee, a dissappointing "crowd" of seven was on hand to hear the Flag Day program held in one of the city parks.

and what ever may be its symbols, its insignia, he reads chiefly in the flag the Government, the principles, the truths, the history which belongs to the nation that sets it forth.

The Government, the principles, the truths, and the history that is the United States would require several hundred tons of paper to chronicle. All this is reflected in the flag, and in the respect shown to the flag.

● 'TILL DEATH DO US PART

Since man first lived, he has struggled to gain knowledge of all around him. He has wanted to know why the stars shined and why the rain fell, and perhaps why water was wet. He has come up with many reasonable answers, but there is one question that eludes a reasonable answer.

It is a hard question and the answer is harder yet. Thats why neither Plato, nor Socrates nor Job had an answer for it, and thats why today, we are all torn with the same torment that has caused people from the world over since time immemorial to suffer the same feeling.

Why is there death? Logically, death is caused by old age, by disease, by accidents. But why? So that the world will not get over-populated?

The answer is not here for us mortals to answer and so we sit and wait and cry when our friends and relatives leave us.

By far the worst death is the death of the youth. They never had a chance to live! They never had a chance to do anything. Perhaps that is why they are happier that we, because they did no wrong and consequently, as folows our christian belief, they are where every one should strive to work for. They are in the land of happiness where no ill nor evil can accost them. We, who stay behind, are the only ones who suffer because we are without the company of our loved ones.

Everyday everywhere, as chance would have it, someone loses their life, and today the friends of Betty Carter suffer because they have her friendship no longer. May she rest in peace.

STATE TEACHER SHORTAGE GRAVE PROBLEM

By ORCHID ALONSO

Sammy was very distressed this morning. It seems that he went to the education lecture series this Tuesday and heard something that made his gremlin hair stand on edge.

"Do you know," he asked, "what's going to happen to the schools of the state of Florida if something isn't done soon?"

I answered no.

"I don't know either," he said, "but it isn't good!"

TEACHER SHORTAGE

The problem of the teacher shortage can be stated very simply but the answer can not. The problem—is bad—and the answer is illusive

Next year, 30,000 new students are expected to enter school. They will need 3,000 new teachers to take care of the increase. Where will the state find 3,000 teachers?

This year, only 777 students trained for teaching careers. The number this year is expected to be the same. The usual procedure is to pull in out-of-staters. But many other states pay more. Of course, they don't offer the Florida Sunshine. . . .

Oh well, we can always issue temporary certificates to people who haven't completed their professional training. To how many? The tax payer likes to think that his child will get the best possible attention. Will be believe this when he finds that the state is employing 2,000 untrained teachers?

Sammy brought in some interesting details at this point. Fourteen southern states are planning to have similar certification standards.

HIGH RANKS GONE

"And that's not all," points out Sammy, this business of doing away with the higher paying ranks is apt to cut down initiative for further training, since they will receive no further remuneration for their troubles."

We'd like to think that teachers would get their master's and doctor's just because they love the profession, but it is too expensive. You can't ask them to sacrifice their time and money for no extra pay.

In the past, the higher the degree, the higher the pay, but it seems that a recent survey revealed that fifty per cent of the teacher in Florida would have "liked" to be in the two top ranks.

STATE TO BLAME

Legislators were appalled. The state could not support a program like this and build school houses too. So down went the ranks. In reality, there are today, and has been for some time, a regular percentage of teachers in the top ranks. Each year there are more, sure, but there are also more low rank instructors each year, so the percentage remained the same. The figures are seventeen per cent, not fifty.

Since other southern states still have the rank system Sammy says he wouldn't be surprised if future teachers didn't go ahead and get their master's or their doctor's, then go somewhere else to teach.

PAY RAISE NEEDED

The only reasonable solution seems to be a big pay increase for teachers within a decent income, but to keep the Florida teachers at home, and to bring in badly needed people from other states.

That seems for now to be the only solution. Some of you voters should keep this in mind.

CRISIS IN EUROPE

RELIGION EDITOR INTERPRETS NEWS

Editor's Note: The following article was prepared for publication by "Religion at the News Desk", and reprinted with permission from their New Haven office. The group serves as religious interpreters of the news with Laurence Martin, editor.

Last week's uprising in the Russian sector of Germany was pushed into the background of American thinking by the simultaneous dashing of hopes for an immediate truce in Korea. Yet the German incident probably presents graver problems for our long range foreign policy calculations. The most obvious implication of the German upheaval is that there are serious cracks in the Russian system. Some feel that this strengthens the case for Eisenhower's policy of holding out for concrete evidence of Russian good intentions as against Churchill's plea for negotiation now, since the Russians may not have such a strong bargaining position as we had assumed.

On the other hand, there are elements of the German revolt which may call for a drastic shift in U. S. policy in Europe. Since the death of Stalin, the new Russian "peace offensive" has produced a series of conciliatory moves. This, combined with a growing suspicion that America is becoming less interested in Europe, has led to a succession of European events that has been steadily undermining the whole concept of a European Defense Community.

The mood of Britain has been weariness of her heavy armaments load, and a climate of opinion favorable to making a bold attempt at settlement with the Russians. The swing of Italian voters from the pro-Western de Gasperi government showed lagging enthusiasm for collective defense there. The prolonged French cabinet crisis rests largely on the same problem—inability to approve a budget providing for France's contribution to collective security. This week, the Prime Minister of Denmark announced that the U. S. plan to base two Air Force wings there is no longer acceptable to the Danish government.

In this picture, the German incident will be another corrosive element. The real drive of the revolt, insofar as it meant more than the demands of workers for lower production quotas, was for unification of Germany. This is established by Western eyewitnesses to the riots. Not one heard any Western slogans being shouted by the crowds. The cries were all for "free elections", "German unity", and "Deutschland Uber Alles". The tone of nearly all German newspapers during the days following the riots was the same. This same drive, only in West Germany, was one of the most serious blocks to EDC in the beginning.

The European Defense Community was frankly built on the cornerstone of the industrial and man-power potential of West Germany. Only the feeling that Russian approval of unification was hopeless led Germany to be the first nation to ratify the European Army plan. If unification seems now to be a real possibility, the West Germany government can be expected to place that objective above her proposed integration into European Defense. In exchange for allowing unification, Russia will almost certainly demand that Germany be neutral between East and West.

The German riots, as expressions of demands for a unified Germany, must therefore be viewed as one more chip away from the structure of the European Defense Community—perhaps the crucial one. Grave problems of foreign policy are thus presented to the U. S. The time has probably come when we must have that "new, positive foreign policy" promised by the Republican campaigners last fall. And it must come quickly, for every day that passes lessens our chance of seizing the "initiative" that President Eisenhower says his administration wants to capture.

What form may this new policy take? There seems general agreement that it must take as a general framwork the assumption of a continuing East-West tension, though the tension may fluctuate over time. Less certain is the specific form of U. S. action. With the change of mood in all Europe, our broad alternatives seem to be two: (1) to step up our pressure for completing the original plan for Europe's defense, or (2) to shift our emphasis to securing political settlements with the Soviet Union which concede the independence of occupied nations, and at the same time provide tolerable security from possible Russian agression.

Neither alternative will be an easy one. To press harder for EDC faces a two-fold difficulty. Now it will more than ever be cutting against the European grain. It will also conflict with the American desire for tax-cuts and economy, since it would almost certainly involve increased, rather than decreased, economic and military aid to Europe. U. S. efforts can hardly be effective if they are bent toward an objective for which the whole free world has a declining enthusiasm.

The second alternative avoids these difficulties, but has others of its own. Shifting our emphasis to the political level represents a departure from present policy that may not fit readily into Congressional and public notions of practical results. The old policy provides for a tangible buildup of force, a tangible line of defense, a definite line of demarcation between East and West, good and evil, right and wrong. The extent to which Congressional minds are wedded to this approach has been recently demonstrated by the House rider to the Foreign Aid Bill making over one billion dollars of the authorized military aid conditional on Western Europe's ratification of the European Army treaty. It is also evident in the considerable Congressional sentiment for cutting off all East-West trade, thus conforming to the simple principle that one should give no comfort to one's enemy, even if it is to one's own advantage

A new policy of "political defense", as opposed to purely military defense, involves new risks and great flexibility in execution. It probably demands increased use of executive power as distinct from Congressional action, and this will not come easily to the Eisenhower administration. It is risky because plans cannot be as closely drawn as for a military defensive alliance, and results cannot be as neatly specified. For example, if EDC survives at all under such a new policy, it may never become the neat, integrated scheme its original blueprint outlines.

A further risk is attached to the new policy. In recent months there has been a growing impatience with our allies, especially in Western Europe. Senator Taft's views on the slim value of collective security in general, and the U.N. in particular, can be taken as those of a sizable segment of the majority party, and of some Democrats as well. If a new policy is outlined by the President, calling for reduced emphasis on EDC, it may be taken by those Senators and Congressmen who are skeptical of collective action by the free world as proof of the futility of any effort to work out a grand strategy with our allies. A widespread reaction then might be, "Let Europe stew in her own juice, and we'll go our own way". A resurgence of isolationism would negate much of the spirit President Eisenhower has tried to preserve in American foreign policy.

The choice before the president will be a hard one. As Christians we believe the basis for choice should be the aim of preserving the widest possible community of nations in the interests of conserving and extending those values for which we believe the free world stands. Our cause, under God, may not always be just. But a decision is required of us in our time, and the very process of reconciliation of conflicting allied views will have its effect in preserving our views of truth and right. It is the part of Christian community, as a state of mind, to recognise that the goals of others—like the German people—may be as valid as our own. And it is also the part of a Christian view of community to speak and act for the welfare of the whole community even if that is done at the price of nominal party harmony.

Letters to Editor

Name Changed?

Dear Editor,

I was really surprised Monday night at the Ice Cream Social when vice-president Martin announced the new name of Camp Flastacowo. Since I am a bit conservative, I am afraid it will take me a long time to get used to the name.

Seminole Reservation is appropriate, but the old one was a good name. It sounded "indianish", and what if it did stand for Florida State College for Women? Few knew it did.

At any rate, since the name has already been changed, I would like to know how? Did our votes count? And if so, how much? I have heard rumors concerning the lack of percentage of votes in the election. Would you please enlighten me and my friends as to the truth of the matter?

Yours truly,
Vivian Joyce Campbell

As far as we know, the name has not been changed. UGA officials informed us at the end of the semester that there were not enough votes cast to warrant a change. We will know definitely next semester when the files are reopened.

Post Korea GI Insurance Set

Nearly nine times as many veterans now have the special post-Korea GI term life insurance policy as had it a year ago, Veterans Administration said.

In April, 1952, only 3,288 of these policies were in force with a value of $18,318,000.

A year later, or on April 30, 1953, the number of policies in force had increased to 15,006 and the amount, to $157,938,000.

These policies are the five-year non-convertible, non-participating term life insurance for which eligible post-Korea veterans must apply to VA within 120 days of their discharge or separation from service.

POST-KOREA veterans eligible to apply to VA for this insurance are those with service in the U. S. armed forces anywhere in the world since June 27, 1950, the start of the Korean hostilities, who were ordered to active service for a period in excess of 30 days and who were entitled to the free indemnity protection of the law.

These policies may be renewed every five years at the premium rate for the then-attained age. They may not be converted to any other type of GI life insurance, nor are they entitled to dividends under the law. But the premium cost for most ages is the lowest of all other types of GI life insurance administered by VA.

POST-KOREA veterans who apply for this insurance within the fixed 120 days of their discharge or separation do not require a medical examination.

The Servicemen's Indemnity and Insurance Acts of 1951, which set up this insurance, also provide another type of special life insurance for disabled Post-Korea veterans discharged on or after April 25, 1951, with service-connected disabilities that would be compensable if 10 percent or more in degree.

THIS INSURANCE includes both term and permanent plans of coverage with conversion rights, but with no entitlement to dividends under the law.

Disabled post-Korea veterans may apply to VA for this insurance within one year from the date VA finds their disabilities to be service-connected. But a medical examination is required to determine whether the applicants are un-insurable because of non-service-connected disabilities.

In April, 1953, only 85 of these policies were in force, amounting to $580,000. In April, 1953, the number had increased to 884 and the acount to $7,207,000.

"TO THE HOME-BUYING Veteran," a 32-page guide for veterans planning to buy or build homes with GI loans, is now available at Veterans Administration Offices in the Pass-A-Grille Regional Area.

The pamphlet is designed to help World War II and Post-Korea veterans get started on the right foot under the GI home loan program, said H. F. Dickensheets, manager of the Veterans Administration Pass-A-Grille Regional office

THE PAMPHLET discusses what a veteran should look for in selecting the neighborhood, the lot and the house itself.

It also covers the costs of home ownership, the contract of purchase, final settlement or closing the loan, and what to expect before and after moving into a new home.

The responsibilities of the veteran home owner and what the VA can and cannot do to assist the veteran are also discussed.

A copy of the pamphlet will be sent to each veteran applying for a certificate of eligibility for a GI loan. Veterans also may obtain a copy by writing the nearest VA office. There is no charge for the pamphlet.

WASHINGTON NEWSLETTER

SMALL BUSINESSES GAIN

By SENATOR GEORGE SMATHERS

WASHINGTON: In the Senate last week came the first test between the Democrats and Republicans on an issue which is clear and easily understood. It was a demonstration of strength by those of us who believe in the real free enterprise system which encourages and protects the small business man as well as big business a fight we won at least temporarily by a margin of 47-42.

FLORIDA'S STAKE: Florida is a state of small businesses. Thousands of these businesses have remained sound because of our free government's policies. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has given assistance to many of them. Some have been enabled to contribute to national security through loans from the Small Defense Plants Administration.

The average SPDA loan in Florida during the emergency period was $232,500. Under the measure pending in the Congress loan maximum in the future would be $100,000. Loans would be made only upon approval of the Secretaries of Treasury and Commerce and there would be additional restrictions, prohibiting loans.

The somewhat unexpected contest in the Senate came on the Republican leadership's motion to adopt a report which would have created a Small Loan Administration to take over the lending functions of SDPA and the RFC. There had been no previous Senate discussion of the measure and charges were made that it represented another effort toward legislation in the dark, and law-making by steamroller.

VICTORY FOR SMALL business—But the real victory was won by those who believe in small business and the right of the small business man to have some advantages which permit him to compete with big business. A healthy small business structure in this nation is essential to a sound national economy and without such a structure our form of government must change. I like the country we have today, even with its faults, I do not think I would like a country devoted to and controlled by big business. My conviction is that what is good for small business is good for the country.

Three floor victories in the last few weeks cheered us in our determined fight to maintain important federal services in Florida without imposing unnecessary burdens upon the taxpayers.

Admittedly, it is very difficult to differentiate between worthy, needed projects for which money must be appropriated and those activities or services which are boondoggles and should be eliminated. It is with that in mind that I have been seeking to protect the interests of our state.

In no sense have we gained everything that we wanted, but we have made gains and acquired some backing for the major effort we must make later—to protect the great flood control program. The score at the end of a gruelling week stood:

For the airport development program: $13,500,000 where a bipartisan effort was made to appropriate $30,000,000.

FOR WEATHER bureau operations: an increase of $2,300,000 which will keep in operation the Orlando, Fort Myers, and other Florida bureaus threatened with closing.

For citrus disease research: $90,000 where $125,000 had been sought (House had cut to $50,000.)

These gains are by no means certain and our major effort in the future must be to "sell" this program to the House.

NEWS NOTES OFF THE CUFF—For anybody who needs a good cook book, I'll be glad to send upon request a copy of "Family Fare" . . . Bob Glenn, of Sanford, long a leader in the railroad brotherhoods and a widely known church lay leader, is slated for appointment as assistant secretary of labor.

VARIED JOBS

FSU Students Hold Odd Variety of Summer Jobs

By CARL BRETT

Occupation renging from disc-jockeys to night-watchmen are filled by many Florida State University students this summer. There are as many students working at business downtown as are employed in part-time work on the campus.

One student is a night watchmen at the State Road Department building. Charles Bowden, Clewiston, can be found almost any night making his rounds through the lonely condons of the road department.

Bowdan, who is married and lives on West Campus, works 40 hours a week, sometimes from 5 p.m. to 11 p.m., and on other nights from 11 p.m. to 8 a.m.

The FSU senior journalism student supervises janitors, turns on lights when employees rport late for work, and checks for fires once an hour. Bowden is substituting for employees who are taking their vacations this summer.

He has learned the operation of the building's fire extinguishers and fire systems. Another of Bowdens tasks is to start the air conditioner for the daytime employes. Bowden says he has plenty of time to study while on this night job. He is taking several courses during the day at the Journalism School.

Combined salary of Bowden and his wife, Pet, who works at a local finance company, enables the couple to buy "groceries each week."

Another student, Carl Brett, (your own Flambeau correspondent) also of the journalism department, is a disc-jockey at WTNT. He works the night shift, from 8 o'clock in the evening to midnight.

Brett used to work for the Campus Radio station, WFSU, where he learned a great deal about radio announcing and engineering. An opening was available in January at the local station for a morning shift. He applied for that, and got it. With that shift, Brett had to get up at 5 o'clock in the morning. He took over the night shift in May, which "doesn't help one's night life."

Most of his job calls for straight announcing, with vary little ad-libbing. He likes the work, and plans to make it his career.

Warren L. Vergason, a public relations major, is an IBM operator at the Martin Building. He has been an operater for about a month. He was an AP teletype operator before taking the IBM job.

Vergason also works the night shift, working from 8-12 p.m. This enables him to go to school in the daytime.

Vergason returned to FSU after spending four years in the United States Air Force. He served in the states, Newfoundland, and Labrador.

His job as an IBM operator is with the state tag bureau, and its function is the duplication of Automobile registration certificates.

Many other students are occupied with part-time employment downtown, some as clothing salesmen, service station attendents, waitresses, and office workers. Many of these students are full-time employed, and carrying a full load at FSU.

GENERAL REGULATIONS

Students are responsible for knowing this and all other library information posted on bulletin boards.

Talking and studying together in the library is not permitted, as quiet must be observed. This applies to stacks and halls as well as to all reading rooms.

Bottles of ink and notebooks with rings extending outside of covers are not permitted in the library. "Correction binders" are not to be used in the library.

Tracing in books or magazines must be done over celluloid which is provided in all reading room desks.

Any damage to books, such as torn pages, etc. will be charged to the person who signed for the book.

Lost books must be replaced or paid for.

The Library has the privilege of calling in any or all books when needed. Children are not permitted in library except those enrolled for Music Camp.

At the end of each term students should check with the library to clear their records.

CIRCULATION REGULATIONS

All books borrowed from the stacks must be charged at the Circulation Desk and must be returned to that desk.

Books not on reserve may be kept two weeks.

Undergraduate students may have six books at a time. They may not be renewed.

Graduate students may have fifteen books at a time and may keep them two weeks. If not in demand, they may be renewed twice.

A fine of 3 cents per day (including Sundays and holidays) is charged for books kept overtime. Any student owing a fine must pay that fine before he will be allowed to borrow other books. Students are not allowed to borrow books from the library for each other. Each student must check out books on his own card.

A charge of 1 cent (payable in advance) is made to cover the cost of each notice sent for books held at the request of students.

Books should be brought to desk and checked out before the stacks close.

RESERVE BOOK ROOM REGULATIONS

There are two kinds of reserve books — Room-use and Two-day reserves.

Students may have out only one book at a time from each of these reserves. Room use books must be used in the room except as follows: Between 8:00-8:45 at night they may be borrowed for use outside the library and must be returned not later than 8:30 the next morning. On Saturday room-use reserve books may be borrowed for the week-end between 1:30-4:45 only and must be returned not later than 8:30 Monday morning. Students may have out only one of these books at the time.

Two day reserve books may be distinguished from room-use reserves by the pink label in the back and by the salmon book card. Such books may be borrowed for use outside the building at any time between opening time in the morning and the time room-use books stop going out for use outside the building. They must be returned by 8:30 a.m. two days later. Example: Books taken on Wednesday are due by 8:30 on Friday morning. (Students may have out only one of these books at the time.)

When a student finishes using a reserve book it should be returned to the Reserve Book Room desk. Do not give it to another student as the person signing for a book is responsible for it until it is returned to the desk and checked off in his name.

A student who has been using a book in the room must return it to the desk and leave it for 5 minutes before re-checking it for overnight or weekend use.

No book from either reserve may be borrowed for outside use after 8:45 on week-day nights or after 4:45 on Saturday.

All "reserve" books borrowed for outside use must be returned to the "Reserve" Book Room.

There is a negligence fine for leaving any reserve book anywhere except on Reserve Room Desk.

A fine of ten cents per hour or fraction of an hour is charged on all reserve books returned late.

Only students who are actually using "Reserve" books are permitted in the Reserve Book Room.

Others must do their reading and studying in the other reading rooms of the library.

No books are given out, even for use in the Reserve Book Room, after "closing time" has been called.

and was managing editor of the Baltimore Home News and The Guide publications in Baltimore. He came to FSU in 1940 and is now a professor.

"WE WANT TO substitute systematic study for guesswork," explained Dr. Kobre, "exact measurement where possible instead of impressions. Instead of reading only one newspaper, we examine many to prevent the bias which may occur."

Journalism research at FSU has been stressed for the past four years. Journalism Quarterly recently referred to Dr. Kobre's systematic study of how Florida dailies handled the 1952 presidential campaign as the "most extensive analysis yet made on the controversal subject of newspaper behavior in the campaign."

trade magazine for newspapermen, acclaimed the study as significant evidence that newspaper coverage of elections is not "one sided."

Studies of the advertising rate structure of weeklies, public relations policies of radio stations, and public rtlations activities of state government are among those which have been conducted at FSU.

At present Dr. Kobre is completing a study of the coverage of the recent legislative sessions by some of the leading dailies of Florida.

Martin-Lewis Comedy Team, Russell Featured Here

By BETSY LIVERMORE
Feature Editor

Comedy plus fun and chills are the ingredients that combine to make a full recipe of laughs and hilarious antics at Tallahassee's State and Florida theaters this weekend.

Continuing through Tuesday, July 7, Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis steal the spotlight at the State as they try to cope with bats in the belfry, spooks in the spare room and gals on their mind in Paramount's Scared Stiff!

IF YOU'VE NEVER laughed at a ghost or roared at a haunted house, you're in for a novel treat 'cause Martin and Lewis are in rare form as they go dashing through a harum-scarum plot of misadventures with Elizabeth Scott and none other than Carmen "Bombshell" Miranda.

The mirth-filled proceedings begin when Dean Martin, a night club singer, and Jerry Lewis, his bumbling bus boy buddy, get themselves mixed up with a gangster's moll and tangle with a mystical heiress to a haunted castle off the coast of Cuba.

ANOTHER SPRIGHTLY comedy is on tap in Movieland for interested fans when Rosalind Russell, Paul Douglas and Marie Wilson combine shennanigans in Never Wave At a Wac, showing Sunday through Tuesday, July 5-7, at the Florida.

The story is built around a famous Washington hostess who joins the Women's Army Corps, thinking it will be but a stop-off en route to Paris to join her Army Colonel boyfriend. She finds that she must go through the usual eight weeks of basic training, during which time she is not an indulged VIP but just another rookie . . who winds up as a guinea pig for testing arctic equipment for the Army Quartermaster Corps.

FORT LEE, Virginia, was the scene of almost all filming and regular feminine Army personnel were used in the picture. Rosalind Russell is quite willing to testify to the efficiency of WAC training after an accident, which occurred on the set, gave these Army gals a chance to show their true colors.

With blood gushing from a 18-inch gash in Miss Russell's leg after she fell from a moving Army truck, one of the WACs in the scene ripped off her underskirt and used it for a tourniquet, another telephoned the Army hospital to have a doctor waiting, a third drove Rosalind there, and a fourth leaned out the window and signaled for an emergency traffic clearance.

THE RESULT?—It took only six minutes from the time the accident occurred to the time the star was having the wound stitched in the post dispensary, almost two miles from where the scene for this RKO radio comedy was being filmed!

From all reports, it's really a top-notch show built around the most hilariously romantic MAN-euvers ever staged on land, on sea or on the screen!

Pickup On South Street moves into the State next Wednesday through Saturday, July 7, 11, with Richard Widmark, Jean Peters and Thelma Ritter co-starring in a realistic spy drama that lines up "B" girls, pickpockets, and stoolies to foil a Communist espionage plot.

NO PUNCHES are pulled, no holds barred in this fast-paced film whose background is set in the quick-tempo reaches of lower Manhattan. The stars present a hard-hitting drama as they go careening through subways, waterfront landings, and gangland lairs in a race for possession of precious microfilm.

It's one of those edge-of-the-seat movies that guarantees a couple of hours of top notch entertainment for movie-goers who like double barrelled, triple-powered thrillers packed with action and suspense.

WITH THE FOURTH of July weekend beginning today most people's thoughts either turn to swimming, boating, picnics or the traditional fireworks!

Although many Tally collegians will be journeying to the various beaches and resorts for a couple of days, those who stick around the campus can join the holiday festivities by treking out to the Perry Hwy. or the Capital Drive-In theaters to see a special fireworks show Saturday night.

You can beat the heat, escape from the books, and also enjoy the weekend as you take advantage of movie opportunities at any of the local theaters.

Arts and Crafts Exhibit July 11

The Florida State University Arts and Crafts Camp, the first of its kind in the Southeast, will stage an exhibit in the university Art Gallery through July 11.

A public reception was held Wednesday the first day of the exhibit, from 7:30 to 8 p.m.

Works done in oil paintings, water-colors, sketches in pastel and India ink, with subject matters including still life drawings, abstractions, landscapes and figure drawings, will be on display.

Also on display will be jewelry and ceramics. The ceramics range from portrait heads and animal figures to bowls and ash trays.

Among the many experimental techniques used by the students are dry-brush, sketching on wet paper, spatter painting and crayon resist.

The camp is sponsored by the FSU department of art education and is directed by Miss Marion Davis and Ralph Hurst. Other instructors are Miss Ann Kirn and Guy Johnson.

typewriters. Then a copy-boy took the news to the AP bureau headquarters on the same floor as the House and Senate.

The students were interested not only in the news but also in the headlines, pictures, the varying positions given to the stories by papers the editorials, cartoons and columnists.

This type of research will be undertaken in the new Research Bureau set up by Dean Laurence R. Campbell and Dr. Kobre in the School of Journalism.

Mother, 20 Years Too Late, Becomes Busy FSU Freshman

"Two weeks after I went back to school, I was taking five different kinds of pills," said Mrs Dorothy Massey, an FSU freshman and the mother of a 10-year old daughter. "What gave me high blood pressure and acute stage fright was the idea of having to get up in front of class to make a speech or report."

Mrs. Massey has returned to college after a twenty-year absence.

MRS. MASSEY was born in Canada but has lived in New York for 15 years. Last August she took her daughter, Susan, 10, to Europe. She travelled in England, France, Spain, Italy and Switzerland. When winter set in, she went to Villars Ollon in Switzerland where Susan was going to school.

Villars is a tiny village on top of an Alp. It is both a summer and winter resort, but, commented Mrs. Massey, "in the off-season, it is like the castle of the Sleeping Beauty. I went there to write. For one of my limited athletic ability, there wasn't anything else to do in Villars."

IN JANUARY, she came back to the States and to Tallahassee to visit friends.

"Dr. Charles Logue, who was teaching in Monticello then, was a good friend of mine and as I consider him one of America's coming writers, I felt he could give me some technical help which I knew I needed. He tried to give me the benefit of his six degrees in capsule form but all I got was mental indigestion. He came to the conclusion that I'd have to do it the hard way and get a degree of my own."

ORIGINALLY, the FSU freshman intended to go to a northern university. She was, as a matter of fact, already on her way out the door of the Stone Hotel where she had been staying, when Mrs Stone asked her to go to a meeting. She went. Miss Eva Mae Atwood, of the Humanities department was the speaker at the meeting.

"When she heard my plans," said Mrs. Massey, "she informed me that she was making an appointment for me with Dean Campbell in the morning. We Northerners are under the impression that the South is slow. That's a big mistake. Before I had quite caught up with what was happening I found myself registered in the School of Journalism and had had my first class.

"THE FIRST semester was rough. I'd been out of school for twenty years. I almost quit a half dozen times. I think that if I had gone to any other university, I would never have stuck it out but people were wonderful to me. I was pampered, cajoled and indulged. Dean Campbell encouraged me. Dr Logue encouraged me, my professors encouraged me, all of my new-found friends in Tallahassee encouraged me.

"By the end of the semester, I actually got up the nerve to make a report to one of my classes. Incidently, my classmates were so anxious to help me get through the ordeal that they were afraid to interrupt in any way. They didn't even laugh at my jokes.

"Now that I'm an old hand at being a freshman, I'm bringing Susan back to enroll her in the Demonstration School. Perhaps I'll have my Ph.D. by the time shes ready to become a freshman."

Operas Are Not Just For The Elite

Although the average common citizen says he dislikes opera, it might be because he does not understand opera. They think they must know music and read in the music the feelings expressed. How right they are. They must.

But! Even common citizens as they are, it is not a hard job. Why? Because first they learn the story of the particular opera, and after that, the interpretations of the music comes as a matter of fact.

THERE'S NOTHING dark and mysterious about the stories of the operas. Most of the operas are plain romantic short stories, with a very uninvolved plot, and a readily understandable climax and finis.

Take for example, "The Barber of Seville." It is the story of a famous count who falls in love with the daughter of an old grouchy doctor. The plot deals with the barber, a jack of all trades who cooks up a romance between them without revealing the count's real identity. There is a mix up with an old music teacher whom the girl's father would have her marry. But the count finally got the girl.

IN CARMEN, a soldier disgraces himself for the love of Carmen who makes him a lookout for the gypsy team she lives with. She later leaves him for a bullfighter. The young soldier, infuriated, kills Carmen at the entrance to the bull ring. And that's the gist of Carmen.

When the Cavalleria Rusticana was offered to FSU students, many did not go, because as they put it, they did not understand opera. Cavalleria Rusticana dealt with the loves of a married woman and an old flame. A village maid, ruined by the young man, informs the husband, who then kills the young man.

MUSIC IN opera is sad or gay or melancholy, as the situation arises, and once the hearer knows what the situation is, the music takes on meaning.

Just to illustrate other examples, there is the famous Aida, the story of a captive girl in love with an Egyptian leader. When her father leads an army against the Egyptians when the young officer is tricked into betraying military secrets, the young man is buried alive in a tomb. There he finds the captive girl hiding and they die in each other's arms.

Northen—"Rights" Southern—"Rights" Caused Civil War

If the United States had not boiled its regional differences down to Northern "Rights" and Southern "Rights", the Civil War might never have been fought.

This idea is presented in "The Growth of Southern Nationalism, 1848-1864," the sixth of a ten-volume History of the South series. Written by Avery O. Craven, this book and others in the series are being published by the Louisiana State University Press and the Littlefield Fund for Southern History at the University.

Mr Craven believes that slavery became a symbol of differences and conflicts, and because the interests of the North and South became more entwined, friction and discord developed.

Avoidance of the break between the regions meant that one or both of the sections would have to yield on issues which involved their basic social-economic structures. These issues, however, symbolized values in their way of life for which men fight and die, which they do not give up or compromise said Craven.

THE FORUM

ROSENBERG PICKET, HYSTERIA APALLING

Editor's Note — Bruce Galphin managing editor of the regular Flambeau is sending us his regular column from Washington, D. C., where he is working this Summer.

By BRUCE GALPHIN

"Either you picket or you get across the street," the cop told me, and it was obvious that he thought the latter the better choice.

I had come out of curiosity to see what the "Committee to Secure Justice in the Rosenberg Case" was going to do in its advertised "clemency meeting."

I knew little of the Rosenberg case. It is usually true that people are too poorly acquainted with the issues of their day to make wise decisions. The hope of democracy is the prevalence not just of the will of the people but rather of the will of an informed people. I could hardly classify myself as well informed about this famous case.

"Either you picket or you get across the street," the policeman repeated. His manner and my contrariness prompted me to join the picketers.

Doubtless the committee will be attacked by many as subversive. Perhaps it is—again I don't know. There was, however, very little of what could be called left-wing propaganda that Sunday. The picketing and especially the meeting afterward took on a definite religious character.

The signs of the picketers revealed the various causes for their doing what they were. Many were there for religious reasons: "Pope Pius urges clemency," others felt the death penalty unjust: "Axis Sally and Tokyo Rose got 10 years. Why should the Rosenbergs die?" and "Clemency, Mr. President."

Still others referred to the bad publicity the United States was getting abroad for the case: "Don't hurt U. S. prestige abroad," some actually considered the Rosenbergs innocent, and their signs carried quotes from the wife of the chief witness against the couple: "Mrs. Greenglass says My husband is a hysterical liar."

In the prayer meeting that followed the picketing, speakers of the Catholic, Jewish and Protestant faiths reiterated the theme of the picketers' signs. They quote atomic scientist Harold Urey's statement that the conviction "outrages logic and justice." They repeated the charge that the chief witness for the prosecution had presented conflicting testimony. They spoke for the large number of people in the gathering who opposed all capital punishment, particularly in this first civilian conspiracy case in peacetime.

Little Michael and Robby, the Rosenbergs' sons, made brief and timid appearances. Mrs. Sophie Rosenberg, Julius' mother, broke down in the midst of her appeal for mercy.

While the majority of the picketers returned after the meeting to New York, Boston and the other cities from which they had come, a handful remained to keep a 24-hour vigil at the White House.

What happened the rest of that fateful week is now history. The defense made further appeals to the Supreme Court and was turned down. Finally another group representing the Rosenbergs independently placed a plea before Justice William O. Douglas, suggesting that the couple had been tried under the wrong act. Douglas granted an indefinite stay of execution after admitting there was doubt: by his honesty he aroused the ire of a Georgia Congressman who proposed impeaching the Justice.

The next day, at the call of Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell, the full court heard the appeal which had been made to Douglas. Within a day they decided to over-rule the stay, and the execution proceded one day late—one day after the Rosenbergs' wedding anniversary.

"It took three jolts to kill Julius," the papers reported coldly; Ethel required five. A young expectant mother in the small group on the "vigil" at the White House wept in anguish. A plump, middle-aged woman in the crowd of spectators across the street danced a jig of glee.

I thought of the Rosenbergs' two young boys and of their widowed mothers. I thought of the news accounts that the couple had walked silently to their deaths. I thought of the sign a picketer had carried, which said "The electric chair cannot kill the doubts in the Rosenberg case."

That was perhaps the most important point in those last days: there were doubts, grave doubts, and people were in no state of mind to evaluate the facts calmly. I am mindful that the Rosenbergs were given a constitutional trial and were accorded hearing after hearing by the lower and superior courts. I have no doubt that the vast majority of Americans believe the couple got what they deserved.

I certainly do not presume to say they were innocent, nor do I consider myself capable of judging the more technical legal aspects of their case. I do know, however, that people form their opinions more by what they read and hear than by what they know. I do know, too, that there have been many cases when even the American system of personal safeguards break down under the stress of national or local hysteria.

I do know that the Rosenbergs' execution is a blow to our prestige abroad. At a time when anti-Communist riotings ern Europe should have the country with a trum propaganda, the United has handed the Soviet ammunition. In a Euro is growing more and m vinced that America is toward fascism, the R case adds fuel to the fire peans perhaps felt that in the gnawing doubts, America could well show mercy to this con couple.

There is no doubt that preme Court acted too qu the final appeal to ma entire procedings seeme roading affair, taking ugly aspects of the Sa zetti case.

Time alone may be judge of whether the Ro were heinous villians or to the hysteria of our tim

'Take A Little Peek' At FSU Square Dance

By RUTH FOLEY

"Take a little peek" rang across the campus as Dr. Willima Tait led a group of 300 students in a square dance last Wednesday.

And three-hundred persons—graduate students and undergraduates fell into the spirit of the occasion.

Calls typified such dances as "Birdie in the Cage" and "Take a Little Peek". Popular couple dances between squares were "Narcissus" and "Mexican Clap Dance"

SPECTATORS lined the fence to watch the dancing to the music of Hank Kmen and his Hillbilly Five.

Charles McDaniels chairmaned the dance under the sponsorship of Miss Christine P'Simer, summer recreation director.

"I WANT everybody to learn the fundamentals of square dancing. They are easy to learn," explained Dr. Tait "The main purpose is for everybody to learn to move together. They style you adopt afterwards is your own."

Dr. Tait invites all students and members of the faculty to come out and enjoy the fun of square dancing on Wednesday nights at the tennis courts.

While at the University of Denver Dr. Tait, FSU director of recreation curriculum, and Mr. Tait sponsored a square dance exhibition group. The dancers represented their particular section of the country twice at the National Folk Dance Festival.

Dr. and Mrs. Tait have compiled favorite dances in the book Folk Dancing the Western Way.

The 'Glory' That Was Is No More.. As Westcott Came 'Tumbling Down'

By MIRIAM SAWYER

The story of Westcott Auditorium has not been a long one in comparison with the lift of most buildings. But in the life of the alumni of Florida State College for Women and Florida State University, this grand old building of the past will always be a fond memory.

The auditorium was originally built in 1910. It was only as long as the front face of the stage. Later, in 1922, the stage and back part were added Then Nature played a prank.

THE WALLS developed cracks. Upon investigation, it was found that architects had not reckoned with the ground underneath the building site. Westcott had been constructed on the site of an old fortification believed to date back to Spanish occupational times. An underground network of trenches has since been discovered running through the area, and, earth settling into the trenches gave way under the auditorium, causing the large cracks.

The cracks were patched up and the University continued to use the auditorium until April 18, 1951, when this announcement appeared in the Flambeau:

> Westcott Auditorium has been condemned and will be evacuated immediately.

Westcott's doors were then closed, locked and the auditorium awaited its impeding demolition. Chances for repairs were out, because the project of building up under the foundation was too great. It was found more practical to tear down the old structure and rebuild.

Westcott walls have rung to the sounds of some of the world's greatest artists. Both audiences and building laughed at some and listened with serious intent to others. Fritz Kreisler thrilled Floridians with his violin virtuosity there; Eleanor Roosevelt wove a spell around hundreds with her eloquence as she spoke from the famous podium Percy Grange had Westcott audiences rolling in the aisles "way back when" with his carefree, completely new comedy piano act. Oranger brought a show packed with unusual musical stunts to FSU that many old timer have not yet forgotten.

THOUSANDS OF FSU and FSCW graduates have accepted their sheepskins and moved the familiar tassle onto the other side of the Mortarboard as they stepped down from the stage and into their roles, as America's hope for a better future.

Brick by brick, piece by piece, memory by memory, the building that has seen some 40 classes of graduates march forth into the world from its doors has been reduced to make way for a new Westcott. The doors that once opened to scores of shining faces is now gone and in its place will rise a new modern structure that will be hard put to carry on the glory of the old Westcott.

THE NEW BUILDING will hold the same audience, 1800, but will be slightly larger than the old one. Plans for the new Westcott include a balcony, completely equipped modern stage with up-

A MONTH AGO, this is what the empty space behind Westcott looked like. The grand auditorium is being replaced by a modern one that will be used by next year.

Reds Use Art In Propaganda Says Johnson

Dr. Ivan Johnson, head of the Art Education Department, spoke on "Art Behind The Iron Curtain" in the Music Hall Tuesday night. The lecture was fourth in a series for the summer sponsored by the Education Department.

"The states behind the iron curtain use art as they use their secret police," Dr. Johnson said. "They use it as propaganda"

HE SAID that Communist art is used to advertise the idealogy of the state, directly and indirectly. The school children are forced in their art classes to draw symbols of Communism—such as the dove of peace and Stalin.

In Russia prizes are given to encourage artists to symbolize the glory of the state. Because of this, there is only a small group of artists left behind the iron curtain.

DR. JOHNSON contrasted this state of affairs with art in the United States. He encouraged teachers to allow their pupils to create and not be forced to copy symbols.

A former Texan, now head of the Art Education Department, he is teaching a summer class in administration. Although he has not been behind the iron curtain, he has made an extensive study of conditions there through art and writings which have found their way to the United States.

'General Education' Seen As Promoting Good Culture

In any college anwhere, there is no question more under fire than the question of general education. "Why take it" cry some. And from another direction comes the question, "What good is it to us."

What good is it? It's hard to say in just a few paragraphs why students should appreciate the general education area. It is good. It is necessary. That is without a doubt. The freshmen, during orientation, have explained to them that they all need a certain amount of things that will make them better what-ever-they-want-to-be. This is regardless of what ever-they-want-

Whether nurses, doctors, cab-drivers, you name it, they must live in a community, live with people, have a home, bring up children, or just be a good American. General education could do all that.

Yes, with all the wonders that general education is capable of, there is one drawback. There is not enough of it in the right quantities or situations. Classes are too large. Teachers too impersonal. Students too dissatisfied. All this and more tends to make the program practically defeat themselves. But the universities are doing the best they can. But they have to do better.

Take it from people that should know, people that went to college and later went to live in communities. In a recent survey, these people (the survey covered graduates from 1.037 American Colleges and universities composing a cross-section over a number of years) said that one drawback of college was that it was not hard enough. Almost without an exception these graduates wished that they had worked harder and learned more.

Besides that, they held the universities responsible for their problems. One comment that covers a lot of territory in the field of general education was:

" . . . let speech classes, personality development classes, sociology courses, train the modern mind to face modern situations . . . "

One graduate was displeased when he said " . . . as promoters of general culture, they have failed . . . " That is where general education comes in. That is certainly the one clear definition of general education . . . promoter of general culture. Since that time, the college curricula has included general education.

Another graduate who speaks of the culture rendered by colleges, " . . . sure, utilize the wisdom of the past, avoid the errors of yesterday . . . "

So . . . that is where Plato, Aristotle, the Romans, Greeks and others come in . . . Do not be afraid of general education. It is good for you . . . and it doesn't bite.

● I LIKE A MAN WHO IS PROUD . . .

. . . of the place he lives and makes this place proud of him.

Every individual should be proud of the place he lives in. That's why the slogan "There's no place like home," has become part of every man and woman's life.

It is right and just that the people that inhabit a place, be it home, or city, or state, or nation . . . or school, be proud of it. Each inhabitant owes his habitat that one thing.

School, the university, is a home for several years to many individuals. That is where they work, play, dream for that period in life in which great learnings should be taking place.

Students here should be proud of FSU, and they should strive hard to make FSU proud of them. That is where behaviour detrimental to the school cannot be tolerated, because it reflects upon the school and makes the school feel not one bit proud of having in their midsts people who would ruin it in the minds of outsiders.

When three people get together, they form an organization, and when an "organization" goes out and makes a jack . . . rabbit of themselves it is not to them

Students should not forget that this school is tax supported.

Students should not forget that this school is tax supported. The people of the state feel that if things go wrong or not to their liking, they can do something about it. And often they do. Especially legislators. They represent the people who dole out tax money to support such liberal programs of education as are found here and in the other tax-supported schools.

They do not want goings on that are a reflection upon their hard-earned money. Who hasn't heard of the whispers that went around last semester, "Watch yourselves, it's a legislative year." Practically every organization on campus was forced to pursue a little bo peep lamb attitude, so that the school they loved would not suffer.

But it should not be limited to legislative years. Legislature does not come around often enough. Every day and every hour, the students should consider who will pay the consequences when they want to have a little fun.

WANTED! BLOOD - BUT NOT FOR A PRICE

Wide spread attention was recently focused on the blood banks of New York City. It was discovered that they had become dealers in human blood and acted as a pawn shop, where the givers never took a ticket, because they could not buy back what they sold. Blood.

Sold blood, blood that was desperately needed for Americans who lay dying in far-off lands. Not donations for a cause, but an easy way to make money. The practice could be tolerated if it wasn't for some important factors involved. The people who were selling the blood were not necessarily hard up for money. It was discovered that the majority of these "donors" were skid row characters who used the money for immoral purposes. Many of these same people went out and got drunk. Then they became a burden to the tax payers by landing in one of the hospitals, weakened and useless.

Blood is still badly needed by the armed forces regardless of claims that they are now using a substitute. Not long after this report, came a call for more blood because the shortage was so acute.

Sell blood? Not on your life! The men dying in Korea need the blood. They are selling their lives for the safety of every man, woman, and child, living in the United States, but they are not a pawn ticket that have to die unless a price is placed on their life line.

It is inconceivable that American citizens would be a party to such a low-down dirty trick.

Donors are needed every hour of every day to fill the need that is rapidly growing. There are service men who have died because they did not have the blood they needed. Others are close to dying because there is not enough blood.

Americans everywhere should make it their plain, honest duty to donate blood if it is at all possible, and certainly, not to make money.

This exposure stinks to high heaven, and it is probably there that the final vindication for the action will come — From heaven. Humans surely can't be forgiving when the cause is purely greed and selfishness.

Lets all give blood. FREE!

TRUMAN, THE GREAT AVERAGE MAN, IS BACK

By ORCHID ALONSO

The little man with the glasses that inhabited the White House for several years before the Republicans and the people thought it was time for a change is back again.

You cannot pick up a magazine or a newspaper without reading some account of the ex-haberdasher mama's boy, that became president. Yes, the Truman's are in the spotlight again.

The latest biggest thing on Truman is his memoirs, printed from the diary of a White House Aide. The articles should make excellent reading. It could give insight on the little man who was not "small", but was not "big".

HARRY WAS A MAN

Truman was neither of these. He was limited. It is said that Truman was made a man . . . that was the story of his first administration . . . but he was not made a great man . . that was the story of his second administration.

Truman's ascent to the White House was described by many as the substitution of the star actor of a play with a spear carrier from the mob scene. Why that allusion, its hard to tell.

But we do know that he felt uneasy under the administration of Roosevelt because he had no great convictions on any thing, but he mistrusted organized labor and feared Wall Street. He believed in the rise of the Negroe class, but not in their social equality. These were the things that made Truman uneasy under the Roosevelt administration. These were the things that the Democratic party were upholding.

Another thing . . Truman was a Democrat because he wanted a strong local government set-up. He felt that the Republicans wanted strong central government, and that was bad. Then, when he was a member of the Senate, the Republicans started to advocate strong local governments, and the Democrats, in order to quelch the great crisis they were fighting, had to bank their hopes on a strong central government. Quite a reverse of attitudes.

I said that Truman was limited. He was. But it was not my idea. Someone else said that. They said ". . is the word for Harry Truman. He has a limited perception of the problems at hand, a limited imagination, and a sharply limited sense of personal initiative . . ."

SUCCESS STORY

Truman's success story is enviable. From a mama's boy with near-sightedness to farmer, to business that failed during the depression and back again to a farmer. His only sense of achievement during these early years was the time he spent in the army during the war. He served as an infantry captain and for the first time he was not a mama's boy. But he came back to Independence.

His rise in politics is a laugh. The machine had not picked an opponent for the Republican's nominee for a local judge job. So when an infantry-mate of Truman's (who was also a nephew of Tom) asked Pendergast, Tom said "sure". And Truman was in. In the next election he lost, but came back again to win the following term.

Then, still seeking further judgeship, Truman was shocked when the machine put him up for the Senate. But his newness, his naivity and good record were not enough to elect Truman. He won alright, but years later it was revealed that there had been 88,000 fraudulent votes cast. He won by 40,000 votes. Truman's comment . . . "Tom's boys were a little overzealous" . . .

U. S. SENATOR 1ST

So Truman was in the Senate. He was a good little boy there. They liked him because he was quiet, never did anything. He admitted quite frankly that he did not understand many of the things around him. His only scrape with lawmaking was a course in law he took in night school for two years. Then he quit without finishing up or trying for the bar test.

Truman's inability to really believe in anything was seen in his efforts to placate the Republicans and the press. He took Hoover out of mothballs and then appointed a republican to the Supreme Court after the papers announced that it would not be "a bad idea."

SAMMY LIKES PRESENT STATUS

Poor Truman; Sammy would not like to be in the same position he found himself in. Besides, Sammy does not have a strong feeling that he is a good guy. It was that egotistical contention that let Truman, an average guy, do the job of a superhombre, with a minimum of mistakes. Yeah, Harry is one swell guy.

SYNGMAN RHEE SHOWING TRUE COLORS

Editor's note—Bruce Galphin, managing editor of the regular Flambeau is in Washington, D. C. this summer, from where he sends us his regular column.

By BRUCE GALPHIN

The American press recently turned its guns on a man they were not so long ago calling a "statesman" and "great patriot."

The man is Syngman Rhee, leader of the South Korean republic; the occasion for the journals' defection is Rhee's flaunting of the United Nations' authority in the conduct of the Korean war.

American papers are quite correct, I believe, in complaining that the tail is wagging the dog in Korea, and in pointing out that the United States is in the singularly embarrassing position of being a great world power which cannot beat a small nation in the wiles of politics.

What is not reasonable, however, is that the nation's press seems surprised and accuses Rhee of an about-face. For if anything can be said of Syngman Rhee, it is that he has been consistent and unswerving in his purposes. It is amazing that the majority of the country's papers have waked to certain realities only by the shock of a particularly over action.

It is unfair and untrue to accuse Rhee of changing overnight. He has fought for many years, by whatever methods were available, for an independent and united Korea — a Korea under Syngman Rhee. If he has used undemocratic methods, if he has evidenced too much power-lust, then for these he deserves condemnation—but not for inconsistency.

The lot of the people of Korea has been a commiserable one. For long years they have been subjugated by one power and then another, and it is only natural that the people of America should feel pity for them, to wish them well in their long struggle for independence.

But as always we should face realities. We should be aware of what is being taught and what can be done now. We should think well and think quickly before more blood is spilled on the Korean peninsula.

We are not at war to unite Korea, much less to set Rhee as sovereign over the entire peninsula. Whether we like it or not, the division of Korea is a fact; when the United Nations entered the conflict it did so expressly to halt an act of aggression, not to change the political nature of Korea.

Furthermore it is obvious that victory over North Korea cannot be accomplished short of an all-out war surely involving China and possibly involving Russia. This, of course, is what the lunatic-fringe of MacArthur followers would like and indeed consider inevitable, but it is hoped that there is enough sanity left in America to repudiate these extremists. The best that can be hoped for now, and for a long time to come is a divided but peaceful Korea.

Yet by his action of releasing anti-Communist North Korean prisoners while complicated truce arrangements were being made over the disposition of these men, Rhee is doing his best to force a full-scale war. He says the Republic of (South) Korea will fight on without the UN, evidently gambling on the chance that by doing so, he can force the UN to stay on.

What is Rhee up to? Well without question he wants to unite Korea under his own leadership. There is grave question however, whether he should be the one to rule any part of Korea.

It must be remembered that Rhee was voted out of office in South Korea just before the beginning of the war. The war indeed came at a convenient time to maintain him in power; he has played his cards to perfection since.

I offer no panacea for the Korean situation. It is in a fine mess. I do believe however that the American people will be better prepared to meet the problem if they realize that Rhee has been acting quite in character.

WASHINGTON NEWSLETTER

EUROPEANS NOT TRULY GRATEFUL FOR AID

By SEN. GEORGE SMATHERS

WASHINGTON — After seven years of supporting this nation's foreign aid program and voting billions for aid to our neighbors across the seas, I'm now changing. No longer will I vote for blanket support of large sums for these foreign countries. While much good has been accomplished under the Marshall Plan and related, and succeeding programs, its obvious that all the countries to which we have given generously are not responding—either in friendship or appreciation, or even economically as we had a right to expect.

Therefore I favor a more selective program of aid, the elimination from the program of those countries which have not been pulling their oars in the Mutual Security Program, and the reduction of aid to those which have been dragging their feet. I have sought to increase the program for Latin America, our "Good Neighbors" in this hemisphere, our indispensable allies who under the program which came to Congress would receive only three-fourths of one per cent of the Five-Billion-Dollar program envisioned by this administration.

AID TO HOME building—In an eleventh-hour rush, Congress finally passed and President Eisenhower approved just before midnight June 30, a revived extension of the Housing Act and various agencies operating under Housing and Home Finance Agency. This measure will ease housing restrictions which had been particularly troublesome to builders in Florida, will permit resumption of the veterans housing program and will, through the more generous down payment provision and mortgage authorizations, bring homes within the reach of many who are now being forced to rent. It also will help to stabilize the building trades.

"THANK YOU LETTER — "I believe you have also placed the business people of this community deeply in your debt. As you are well aware a great deal of its summer prosperity is dependent upon a tremendous influx of Cuban tourists who spend very freely in our stores, hotels, restaurants, and other business establishments."

The above is a brief excerpt from a letter, written by a constituent in South Florida with regard to the new U. S.-Cuban agreement on interchange of travel courtesies. Along with some Congressmen I had taken up with the State Department several months ago, the matter of the travel tax and the individual trip visas. Under the new agreement, a "tourist card" good for two years is available for a nominal fee and it can be used for as many times as desired. The one per cent fare-tax is eliminated.

SMATHERS INTERVIEWS

Senator George Smathers will be heard in an interview with the Republic of Korea Ambassador to the United States in his weekly radio program.

Dr. You Chan Lang, chief emissary to this nation from Seoul, will discuss with Senator Smathers various aspects of the Korean war and the recent controversy relating to current truce negotiations.

The program, recorded at Capitol Hill, is circulated from Washington and broadcast by transcription as a public service.

Dr. Yang, a native of Pusan, Korea, has been educated in the United States and has lived much of his life here. His parents escaped from Japanese slavery, fleeing with young Kang to Honolulu where he had his early schooling. He later graduated from Boston University, Boston University Medical College, Harvard University Medical College and served in a New York City hospital. He went back to Honolulu where he was a widely-known practitioner for 30 years.

In 1951, Dr. Yang, a childhood friend of President Syngman Rhee, was appointed Ambassador. In 1952 he served as chief delegate to the conference where Korean-Japanese relations were agreed upon.

CENSORSHIP

Protestant Christians will react with a special sense of outrage to the news this week of the removal of the books of Kenneth Scott Latourette, Professor at Yale, from many United States Information Libraries abroad. Dr. Latourette is the greatest living writer for the cause of Christian foreign missions, especially for those to China. In addition he is known throughout the world as the author of a standard work on the history of the Chinese.

His honest scholarship and deep Christian convictions have won him the confidence and respect of hundreds of thousands. They have given him the highest honors within their power. Last year he was President of the American Baptist Convention. He has also been head of the American Historical Society. No more faithful advocate of Christianity, no more trustworthy American can be named. Yet his books, all of his books have been banned.

The reason for this is a survey he wrote last year of "The American Record in the Far East, 1945-51. This book is, of course, firmly opposed to Communism. It is, in its sober and objective way, good propaganda for the United States: and yet it was banned, together with all its author's other writings. Why? No official reasons have been given, but perhaps it is because Dr. Latourette, at certain points, criticizes Chiang Kai Shek and his more rabid American supporters.

The stupid hysteria which produces attacks on the writings of Christian leaders such as Professor Latourette is dangerous. Already it has done untold damage to American influence in the rest of the world. In this country it may seem to be a ridiculous mistake — almost a joke — that Latourette is classified as a dangerous author, but from abroad it looks as bad as the suppression of freedom in a Fascist or Communist state.

Our allies, the friends of justice everywhere, lost confidence in us when they see our government cast suspicion on its finest citizen, men like Dr. Latourette.

SEGREGATION OR EQUALITY?

A new official policy has been developing at the annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People this week. Until recently the N.A.A.C.P. has followed the "separate-but-equal" recommendation regarding Negro opportunities. Now, according to Walter White, executive secretary of the Association, the group favors complete integration of the Negro into all aspects of American life.

The Christian is interested in the difference between these two view-points. Both policies are designed to assist the Negro to take his rightful place in a democracy. The Christian recognizes that all men were created by God and that each man stands before God equal in worth. The Christian cannot recognize the claims of any racial group that it is inherently superior to other groups. The Christian rejects the claims of white supremacy.

Behind the "separate but equal" arguments are two aims. One is worthy. The other is not. The unworthy idea behind "separate but equal opportunities" for Negroes in America is that the two races are essentially different in kind and that each has its own divergent aims and interests. Silently, many promoters of this view oppose genuine advancement for Negroes. The letter and not the spirit of the American equality tradition is observed.

The worthy aim behind a "separate but equal" policy is that it allows some immediate improvements for Negroes even though it falls short of both Christian and American idealism. It may for a time have been the only open alternative to stagnation in regions where mingling of the races is bitterly opposed by a decisive majority.

If one must creep before he can crawl and walk before he can run, and if this figure of speech applies to the struggle of the Negro for equal status, then the person of good will can accept the policy as a move in the right direction. Achievement of these steps helps to change the character of the opposition to full equality.

But no full grown man should be kept in creeping clothes. There comes a time when the "separate but equal" argument is a [illegible] tion on both democratic and Christian thinking in regard to the Negro's opportunities. That time has come, the N.A.A.C.P. believes.

Colored people the world over see segregation as discrimination. America should be grateful to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for a resolute reminder that a democratic nation cannot relegate any group, especially a racial group, to second-class status.

The Christian is grateful that the N.A.A.C.P. proceeds in its work with thoughtfulness, patience and competence. The statement in moderate but firm tones that segregation must go and that integration must come is sound both in direction and tone.

BRING DOUGH

Vets In School Need Money Soon

Veterans with service since the start of the Korean campaign who are planning to go to school under the Korean GI Bill were advised today by the Veterans Administration to take along enough money of their own to tide them over for about two months.

The reason, H. F. Dickensheets, manager of the Pass-a-Grille VA Regional Office explained, is that under the law, GI education and training allowances can't be paid until sometime after a veteran actually completes each month of training. Therefore, one month of the delay will be caused by the veteran completing his initial month of training.

THE LAW ALSO requires that both the veteran and his school or training establishment submit a certification to VA—after the end of the month—to the effect that the veteran actually was enrolled in training during that period.

This, too, takes time so VA urged schools and establishments to get the certifications in as quickly as possible after the end of the month to keep the time at a minimum.

FINALLY, after VA receives the certifications, it must compute how much GI allowance each veteran is entitled to and must mail out the payments. This process, VA said, normally will be kept down to 20 days from the date VA receives the certification.

Because of all these factors, post-Korea veterans would be wise to allow for two months before they can expect a check from the Government. VA said. Afterwards, of course checks will come regularly each month so long as they remain in training and their certifications are in order.

A VETERAN who starts GI training after the 20th of a month will have to wait several days longer for his initial payment, VA pointed out. The reason is that VA cannot process a certification until after he has completed his first full month of training. Payments for both periods—the complete month and the few days of the preceding month—will be included in his first check.

The allowances for veterans training full-time in schools and colleges under the new Korean

University Picnic Planned July 15 By PE Department

The Men's Physical Education Department will be official hosts for the Summer Recreation program for the annual all university picnic Wednesday, July 15, at 3 p.m., at Camp Flastacowo.

Coach J. K. Kennedy will have members of his physical education classes acting as the leaders for horseshoes, badminton, softball, volley ball, table tennis, shuffleboard and the like. Others will be acting as the cafeteria line boys for the serving of the fried chicken supper.

THIRTY PERSONS, representative of every phase of student life, met last Tuesday night at the Student Center to set up the sale of tickets which will go on through Monday. The official and final count on dinner reservations will be at 7 p.m. on Monday. Last year about 450 persons were served at the dinner.

Miss Minnie Frances Jones, chairman of the Summer Recreation Committee, said the planning committee agreed to go ahead with supper, rain or shine and that everyone can be accommodated in some fashion indoors. The committee hopes for clear weather in order that all of the fun facilities of the camp may be used.

DR. MARY ALEXANDER, camp director, and Mrs. Ruth DeKalb, hostess, will have the camp guards on duty for persons interested in canoeing or sailing.

The new bath houses at the camp will accommodate any number of persons for swimming. The camp personnel warn that the cypress drippings have made the low lake level undesirable for wading, but for swimmers who go off the diving boards of the dock the water is very pleasant.

Bristol Leads St. Pete Meet

Mrs. Margaret C. Bristol, associate professor of social work at Florida State University, will preside as chairman at a meeting of the Services to Handicapped Children committee in St. Petersburg Saturday.

Other Tallahassee members of the children's committee are:

Dr. Clarence Edney, head of the FSU speech department; Claude Andrews, director of the Florida Rehabilitation Service; Mrs. Jane Fleetwood, acting director of the Florida Crippled Children's Commission and Dr. George Palmer, Tallahassee pediatrician.

Mrs. Bristol will remain in St. Petersburg to attend the annual meeting of the Florida Children's Commission, of which she is secretary, July 12-14.

Tallahasseeans expected to attend the three-day meeting will include Mrs. Sylvia Carothers, executive secretary of the Florida Children's Commission; Joe Cheney of the parole commission; Pat Chapman of the state department of education; also Miss Ina Stelle and Paul Hevert, field staff workers of the commission.

Various committee reports will be given at the annual meeting; activities of the past will be reviewed and future work will be planned.

PROGRESS SLOW

Struggle Continues For Educational TV

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series on educational TV.

By TOM BODIN
Associated Collegiate Press Writer

(ACP)—Far-reaching plans for state and nation-wide educational television coverage are still moving ahead, despite abrupt setbacks by state legislatures in recent weeks.

The second college-operated TV channel in the country is scheduled to go on the air this month in Houston, Texas. The station—KUHT—will be run by the University of Houston and the Houston Independent School district.

Only college channel now telecasting is WOI-TV at Iowa State College, Ames.

The Houston station will broadcast from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. five days a week. Most of the time will be taken by the university. Students will be used in both the programing and technical operation of the channel. To cut costs, art majors will design scenery and music students will provide live music.

Meanwhile the Joint Committee on Educational Television (JCET) reports from Washington that 28 applications for reserved educational channels have so far been filed with the Federal communications commission. Fifteen (of these) have been granted construction permits.

In addition, nine educational organizations have applied for non-reserved commercial channels, and five have been given permits to start building.

FCC chairman Paul Walker has indicated the deadline imposed on educational groups to show progress toward getting TV established may not be as strict as was first supposed.

The commission last June allocated 242 channels for non-commercial educational use only, with the understanding that by June 2, 1953, the FCC would re-evaluate the needs of the educators. It was felt that, because of pressure from commercial applicants for the reserved channels, the commission would close the door to non-commercial TV.

Brave—and unhurried—plans were drawn up in almost every state. New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Washington, Utah, Tennessee, Oregon, Kansas and California rushed proposals for state educational TV networks to their legislatures.

First Science Camp Ends Work Program

Sixty-six Florida high school students have just wound up a 10-day participation program of work in science sponsored by the university.

The program constituted FSU's first Science Camp and included juniors and seniors from high schools all over Florida. The Science Camp was carried out by the full cooperation of the FSU school of education and the college of arts and sciences. The original idea was proposed by Dr. Mode L. Stone, acting dean of the school of education, and the program was worked out by a committee headed by Dr. Reynolds.

Students studied weather maps; caught live marine specimens in the Gulf of Mexico; made radio crystal sets; constructed telescopes; observed heart beat and blood circulation of live chicken embryos under the microscope after removing from the egg; and observed the rare plant, venus fly trap, capturing insects. In the chemistry laboratory the students did simple photography with light-sensitive paper which they had made.

Motivation of the program was to stimulate greater interest in science careers among high school students.

Dr. J. Paul Reynolds, assistant dean of the college of arts and sciences at FSU and director of the camp, put it this way: "The drastic reduction in science enrollments in the principal colleges and universities throughout the nation has prompted us to launch this student participation program in science."

Reynolds added that the shortage of scientists is a nationwide problem, a serious problem in this technological age.

To meet this lag in interest in scientific pursuits among today's young scholars the FSU staff prepared a varied program designed to catch the interest and imagination.

Camp work included zoology, botany, physiology, bacteriology, mathematics, meteorology, physics, psychology, and marine sciences.

In many of the sciences the FSU staff gave demonstration lectures as a background in the subject. These were usually followed by laboratory work by the students and by field trips.

Particular emphasis during the camp was laid on student participation. Although lectures and laboratory visits were included in the program, the students' laboratory experiences were considered the most important phase.

In each science the students were allowed to do some scientific study or manipulation themselves to get the "feel" of the science.

The last day of the camp was devoted partially to an evaluation by the students. Most students said they felt the camp had been a valuable expenditure of time and had deepened their concept of a scientific career. Some said they would now consider a serious pursuit of science instead of the passing interest they had previously.

Results of the camp were considered so successful that the camp will be an annual affair.

Material Goods Won't Buy Friendship of East Say FSU Dean, On Return From Far East Job

The United States can't buy the friendship of the nations of the Far East with dollars nor with a flood of material goods.

This is the conviction of Dr. Ralph Eyman, dean of the Florida State University school of education who recently returned from Thailand where he spent two years as a representative of the Mutual Security Agency.

Ralph Eyman

"THE PEOPLES of Burma, Indo-China, Indonesia, Thailand, all of Asia want to run their own countries by themselves in their own way," Dr. Eyman said. "And the sooner the West realizes this fact the better off the West will be."

The educator, who on Tuesday, July 7, spoke before a luncheon meeting of Phi Delta Kappa education honorary, in the FSU Seminole Club, pointed out that what the peoples of Asia want is help in learning our technical knowhow.

THE ORIENTAL wants our help in the things he decides he needs help in, and he wants to know that help will continue for a long time and not fade and urge each time the United States Congress meets, Dr. Eyman said.

"We the Dutch, the British, the French and the rest of the Western nations might as well get it out of our minds that we will continue to exploit the Eastern nation and run their governments for them . . . That time has passed."

THE EDUCATOR said the center of world power will be in Asia in the next 75 years and it's up to this nation now whether we make friends of the more than one billion Asiatics or make them enemies.

"We have now the chance to make them our friends," he said, "by working with them, sending technicians to train them, offering help when and where they ask for it, and by letting them run their own nations as they see fit and not by trying to establish our own culture in each country."

DR. EYMAN said the people of Asia believe they now can get technical help from the United States.

"If they can't get it from us, they'll get it somewhere else," he said. "Besides technical advice doesn't cost much."

The educator said the United States Congress must understand this fact and stop trying to make an "impact" on the East with flood of dollars and material goods. "Or," Dr. Eyman said, "this nation will travel a rough road if it fails to work sympathetically with these people in a way that is satisfactory to them."

Sign Up For Bus To Marine Lab At 'Center' Lobby

Lists persons to use in reserving places on the FSU bus trip to the Marine Lab which the University maintains on Alligator Point for research purposes, are in the lobby of the Student Center Post Office area. Jim Harrell, graduate student in the P. E. Department, is helping to organize this first Summer trip.

Mr. Harrell is making arrangements for a member of the faculty to tell something of the type of research and experiments carried on at the marine life center.

Persons who want to go on the trip are asked to bring swimming suits or wear them so that they may go swimming in the Gulf following the tour of the Marine Laboratory.

Informal clothing will be appropriate for the tour and lecture part of the program. Students are asked to bring a sack lunch for supper on the beach. The group will return to the campus at 7 p.m.

Mr. Harrell urges both graduate and undergraduate persons to enjoy this opportunity to see something of the nationally recognized work of the university in this interesting area.

Audience Baffled By 'Concertina'

When Boris Gregory and Rod Strong presented their unique combination of music and dance for Florida State University audiences, many local citizens were probably seeing and hearing the unusual instrument, known as the concertina, for the first time.

As the reigning virtuoso of the concertina Boris Gregory admits that the appearance of the small "squeezebox" is definitely against it, but demands to know why that should matter, so long as he gets good music.

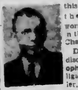
"THE CONCERTINA meets opposition everywhere. People think I am just playing it until I get the down payment on an accordion."

Nor does the history of the concertina add to its glamor. It was invented in 1829 by Sir Charles Wheatstone, famous English physicist, who was angry at the piano. Sir Charles was miffed because the piano could not sustain a note long enough to suit him, so he invented the concertina along with such items as the electromagnetic counter, the stereoscope and the electric chromoscope.

The Wheatstone factory in London, according to Gregory, is the only maker of genuine concertinas and they whip out a really nice one for around $800. Fortunately for Mr. Gregory, he is also distributor for the instrument in the United States. Wheatstone makes them of ebony and amboyna wood, metal reeds and a superb grade of leather for the bellows. Such a concertina will withstand extreme temperature changes and "requires no refrigeration. They keep very well," Mr. Gregory says.

Miller To Address Ruge On Philosophy And Religion

Dr. Robert Miller, professor of philosophy and member of the FSU faculty, will give an address this Sunday at the 9:30 a.m. worship service in the Ruge Hall Chapel.



Robert Miller

Dr. Miller will discuss "Philosophy and Religion." Dr. Miller, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, received his Doctor of Philosophy degree from that university in 1939, his doctorial thesis being on the "History of Religion."

His published works include articles on the Humanities in General Education and professional papers in Philosophy.

Holy Communion will be held at 8 a.m., preceding the morning prayer service with choir and address at 9:30 Sunday morning.

Sunday Supper will be held at 6:28 p.m. and members of the "Theater Group" from Camp Weed will be our guests. Following supper they will present the play titled "THE INS AND OUTS" by Nora Stirling written for the American Theater Wing of the National Council for Mental Health.

The cast in the play includes Mac played by Carroll Weiler, Mickie by Cynthia Maxon; Betty played by Catherine Dent; Joe by Jack Dennis and Lee played by Ryan Edwards.

Members of the production staff will be Carol Ann Jameson, Sarah Cawthon, Ruth Stevenson, Jack Miller, Richard West and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Hull. The Theater Group is an annual dramatic camp for young people 18 and over that meets each Summer at Camp Weed, Carrabelle from June 8 to July 25.

The directors this season are Joe and Mimi Hull. The services and Sunday supper and play are open to all students, faculty and the public, says Chris Young, President of the Canterbury Club.

MOVIE NEWS

Tom and Jerry Star In Movie With Esther Williams

By BETSY LIVERMORE
Feature Editor

Two famous screen cartoon characters team up with Esther Williams in a novel hit appropriately titled "Dangerous When Wet," playing at the Florida Theater through Tuesday, July 14.

The M-G-M cartoon department has really outdone itself for this picture as they develop a unique water ballet because they have managed to adapt the cartooning to the live action in the movie.

Esther Williams swims against a background of Tom and Jerry animation as she plunges into fun and romance in the 1953 favorite vacation-time musical which also features Fernando Lamas, Jack Carson and Charlotte Greenwood.

Plenty of aquatic performances add the color to a novel sequence in which Miss Williams and Lamas take a romantic dip in the waters of a deluxe French swimming pool. Lamas, as the romantic young Frenchman, causes the heroine to break "training" before she starts her swim across the English Channel, but all ends happily in the story's exciting finale as the Million Dollar Mermaid captures both the title and the man of her dreams!

On the dramatic side, Twentieth Century Fox presents "Pickup on South Street," a spy drama which opened Wednesday and continuing through Saturday at Tallahassee's State Theater.

Starring Richard Widmark and Jean Peters with Thelma Ritter, the movie is a rough, tough spy drama grimly exposing the raw emotions of the common pickpocket, underworld moll and informer who fall under the cold scrutiny of an FBI story.

The lower reaches of Manhattan set the scene in a strange alliance of law and underworld when Widmark, a pickpocket, lifts a wallet containing a microfilm of top secret documents about to be transferred to enemy agents, and decides to sidestep the law to make a "big score" by blackmailing the Communists.

With all the suspense and drama of "House on 92nd Street" and "Boomerang," this new Samuel Fuller production promises another quick-tempo story of romance and suspense geared to top notch entertainment.

Movie actor Dick Powell turns producer to bring another RKO radio picture to American movie audiences all over the nation as he takes credit for the production of Split Second, showing Sunday through Tuesday, July 12-14 at the State.

Suspense from the unique opening title backgrounds show convicts Stephen McNally and Paul Kelly fleeing after a prison break near the California-Nevada border. A ghost town literally comes apart at the seams in a terrifying climax as it vanishes before your eyes.

No stranger assortment of characters could have been found for this unusual picture nor could have been thrown into stranger circumstances than occurs when the convicts gather six people as prisoners and hide out in a desert ghost town while attempting to recover hidden loot.

Included are Alexis Smith, a faithless wife who offers McNally anything to save her life; Jan Sterling, a night club entertainer who has all the answers; Keith Andes, a reporter who knows his way around, and Arthur Hunnicutt, a desert rat who adds more trouble to the already impossible situation.

Most of the film (90 per cent) was filmed in a ramshackle saloon in a real desert ghost town and the stars were forced to sit on beer barrels, rough-edged packing boxes and table edges during the 30 days of filming. To add the "soft Touch," Director Dick Powell had the wardrobe women quilt patches inside the ladies skirts and the men's trousers to halt the discomfort and save wear-and-tear on clothes!

Speaking of ironed-jaw actors—Keith Andes literally fills the bill in this picture because his chin proved to be stronger than Stephen McNally's fist!

For a fight scene between the two ruffians, McNally aimed one at Andes' jaw and let fly. The blow was supposed to be a near miss, but Andes zigged when he should have zagged and caught the full fury of the punch on the point of his jaw.

The result?—McNally ended up at the doctor's office with a sprained wrist! Which all goes to prove that this is bound to be a top-notch drama that doesn't pull any punches for lack of excitement or intrigue!

"Defend Freedom," Speakers Tell A A U W Delegates

Delegates attending the national meeting of the American Association of University Women in Minneapolis last week heard speakers urge them to keep well informed and to have the courage of their convictions. Dean Katherine Warren represented FSU members at the convention.

DR. HAROLD TAYLOR, president of Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, New York, told the women assembled that the freedom of Americans was in danger of wholesale Senate investigations without basic evidence.

"We must stand by and for our freedoms which have come down to us as a heritage," said Taylor.

DEAN WARREN explained the AAUW's role in the nation. It is a group of graduates of approved colleges that work to widen the cultural horizons of all its members and to improve the educational opportunities for women.

"Conditions existing for college women now would not be as good if it hadn't been for the AAUW's work and influence," said Miss Warren.

For the first time, the AAUW will not take a stand either for or against the "equal rights" amendment before the legislature. "The disagreement was so wide that the organization felt that either stand would not comply with the wishes of the majority of the members."

THE AAUW HAS 1,288 chapters with over 138,000 members.

Speakers at the convention included Dean Nancy Duke Lewis and Taylor, on Education, and Mrs. F. Edward Del Dosso, John Ciardi and Norman C. Nagle on the Arts.

Social Studies were discussed by Dr. Janet MacDonald, Dr. John D. Darley and Dr. Rensis Likert.

DR. ROSAMONDE Ramsey Boyd, Mrs. Consuelo Northrop Bailey, Lieutenant Colonel Mary Agnes Brown, and Mrs. Margaret P. Ackroyd discussed the status of women and the possibilities of the equal rights amendment.

Dr. Anne Gary Pannel was chairman of the International Relations discussion which included the Honorable Hubert Humphrey, Senator from Minnesota, and the Honorable John Lodge, Governor of Connecticut.

THE RESOLUTIONS passed by the convention dealt mainly with the continued study of school administrations and expense problems as well as the teacher shortage. Members also voted to encourage the liberal arts or general education program.

Further resolutions again pointed out the needed improvement of the status of university women.

Leslie Plays Organ Recital In Havana

Robert H. Leslie, Florida State University school of music student played an organ recital in the Presbyterian church of Havana, Florida as part of a series to raise an organ fund.

Last Sunday's recital by Leslie was the second by FSU students within a month. Before him, Annette Darsey, also of the school of music, played a recital at the church for the same purpose.

Pen Pals Wanted

I am an Australian soldier serving here in Korea in the Commonwealth Division in the United Nations.

I would like very much to correspond with some American friends. Since being here and in Japan I have met many Americans and my buddies and I find that we are very glad to have your servicemen our right flank.

While in Tokyo on my 21-day furlough, I had some wonderful times with your countrymen and countrywomen. Also I met them in Australia during the 1939-45 war.

Something about myself. I am 28 years old, five feet nine inches, blue eyes and fair hair.

My hobbies are golf, tennis, surfing, dancing and table tennis. In music I prefer jazz and blues numbers; Kay Starr is terrific.

Hoping you can help me receive some pen friends among your students,

Yours respectfully,

Miss Jessie McNeill Retires After 37 Years At FSU

DR. DOAK S. CAMPBELL, president, is presenting the university's first registrar, Miss Jessie McNeil, a citation FSU registrar Charles Walker has just read.

The retirement of Miss Jessie McNeill July 1, 1953 marks an epoch in the history of Florida State University, where as a major staff member for 37 years she saw the enrollment grow from 810 in 1916 to more than 6,000 in 1953.

Miss McNeill took all the changes of the state institution in her stride, the greatest being the conversion of Florida State College for Women into coeducational Florida State University May 15, 1947.

"She was an epitome of loyalty and punctuality during the 37 years," according to the citation presented to her by Dr Doak S Campbell In diploma form, the citation read by Registrar Charles H Walker praised Miss McNeill's accurate keeping of the registrar's record

MISS McNEILL has the distinction of being FSU's first registrar, given the official title in 1921, after a year's service as secretary to the president and acting registrar When she joined the staff in 1916 as secretary to the president she was registrar in practice if not in name

When the late S. R. Doyle succeeded Miss McNeill as FSCW registrar in 1930 the enrollment has doubled, 1 642 When he died in 1943, Dr Milton Carothers served as registrar for three years followed by Dr W T Edwards as acting registrar for about a year Dr. Charles P Hogarth became registrar in 1947, and Charles H. Walker became FSU's first assistant registrar in 1946

Walker was given his present title in September 1949 Assistant Registrar Hoyt Price was appointed in 1950 Assistant Registrar Willis Caldwell in charge of admission was appointed in 1951

Gregory-Strong 'Team' Something 'Different'

By NELLIE-BOND DICKINSON

Gregory and Strong, the second in a series of four performances offered on the Summer Artist Series at the Florida State University, performed to a large and enthusiastic audience last night in the Music Amphi-theater.

The program was the unusual combination of concertina and dance. The music chosen for the dances ranged from Bach Tchaikowsky Mozart and Chopin to Shostakovich, Albeniz and Gershwin

THE CONCERTINA was played with a skill expressive of the young Russian, Boris Gregory, who came from a family of outstanding concertina players.

Rod Strong added lively interest in tap and character dances which showed imaginative interpretation.

The complicated rhythms of Bach and Paganini were built on by Strong who did all the choreography with a technique and personality delightful to see and hear

MUSIC AND dance were at all times gay and entertaining, and the comic elements were indeed funny, especially the final encore, "The Dying Swan," called by Strong in a humorous introduction "The Dead Duck"

It was an unusual experience for Tallahasseeans to attend a concert where such music as Bach's GAVOTTE and RONDO, Kreisler's LIEBESFREUD and Paganini's CAPRICE No. 9 were performed as modern, tap dances

The combination—Gregory on the concertina, and Strong, dancer—sounds incompatible, but it was a full evening of light entertainment suitable for a Summer evening under the stars.

Peter Howard supplied the very creditable piano accompaniment.

Guest Columnist Discusses Rhee

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article is rewritten from the Michigan State College "Life". The article was written by a visiting assistant professor of social science at Michigan State.

By S. JOSEPH WODKA

SYNGMAN RHEE AND SOUTH KOREA

"... we will fight on to crush the enemy until every one of us dies."

These words spoken by the U.N.'s "bad boy", Syngman Rhee, last week may, unfortunately, turn out to be a prophesy, rather than a threat—which is probably the way Rhee intended them. The words were issued in reference to the threat of the ROK to withdraw its forces from the UN command if a truce is signed on the present terms. Rhee, in short, seems to be following the advice which Senator Taft gave the U.S. a short while ago—if we can't have everything our way, let's get out of the UN and go it alone in Korea.

The fiery words of Rhee may be just the thing to work up to a fever pitch emotional nationalism among the South Korean, but they do not reflect the statesmanship necessary to avert a major war, or even end the "police action" now in progress. What Rhee is overlooking completely is that he is hardly in a position to make threats to anyone—much less the most powerful members of the UN. His words may get him support in South Korea but they will not get him friends in the international game of power politics. It would appear that, under present conditions, Rhee and the South Koreans are in dire need of friends and his present attitude and actions cause his allies to get more and more disgusted with him. His action in releasing the thousands of anti-Communist prisoners may touch the sentimental heartstrings of many of us who can see the anomaly of keeping anti-Communists behind barbed-wire, but upon sober reflection we can only conclude that Rhee's action is more to be condemned than praised.

Besides creating the distinct possibility of continuing the bloodshed, and thereby being responsible for the deaths of many more thousands, Rhee's action and threats create a situation in which it is highly probable that Rhee may have no country to govern, and half a loaf is still better than none. Rhee is apparently completely overlooking the mixed feelings in the U.S. regarding the Korean War. There are many in this country who have always considered it a "useless war," and have been seeking any excuse to get us out of Korea. The lack of cooperation on the part of Rhee may be just the hook they need on which to hang their rationalizations and justifications for getting us out of Korea—and it will be a lot easier to convince a lot more people that they were right in the first place, "we should never have gone into Korea."

What would happen if the U.S. did withdraw from Korea, and let Rhee have it his way? The chances are that we would soon be followed by the other UN nations with troops now committed to the fight. Furthermore, it is inconceivable that the American public would, under these circumstances, condone aid to Rhee to carry on the fight by himself. In the event that U.S. aid were withdrawn, as it in all probability would be, it would at best, be a few short months before the Republic of South Korea would be but a name in the history books and in the hearts of those who cherish free institutions, and the Korean Peninsula would be completely communist dominated. True, Rhee and his cohorts might have fought on "until every one of us dies," but what would that have accomplished—the remainder of the South Korean peoples would still be under the communist yoke and Japan and the rest of Asia would only be further endangered by communist domination. A further consequence of Rhee's action might well be to develop such disgust in American public opinion with international politics that the growing sentiment toward isolationism (whatever name Mr. Taft chooses to call it) might again take hold of the U.S. We all know what happened the last time the U.S. tried to withdraw from "dirty power politics."

Rhee may have 16 ROK divisions under his command, but they would be a meager force without UN and U.S. aid—emotional nationalism and patriotic motives do not shoot down enemy planes nor stop enemy bullets.

Admittedly, the truce terms are not a reflection of everything we might desire, but any negotiated peace requires compromise and no one party can have everything he wants. It would appear that Rhee's real task, if he is truly interested in the future of Korea, would be to educate his people to an acceptance of the truce terms as the best available. There are, after all, the TRUCE terms, and not the PEACE terms. It is possible though admittedly unlikely that we might succeed in achieving a united Korea at the peace table. Even if we do not, however, the fight has not been in vain. If a negotiated peace leaves the dividing line right where it was—at the 38th parallel—we would still have prevented the Communists from taking over all of Korea, with all of the dangers for Japan and the rest of the Far East inherent in such a situation; and this, after all, was our main purpose in entering into the Korean fight More important than that, however, would be the upholding of a moral principle and proof that the U.S. and U.N. will not tolerate an extension of Communist boundaries.

ist and professor of piano at Florida State University, will present a recital on Monday evening, July 13, at 8:15 p.m. The program will be open to the public without charge.

Kilenyi is a native American artist. At the age of four years he was sent to Europe to study at the Hungarian Royal Academy of Music. For four years there he was a student of Dr Ernst von Dohnanyi, professor of piano and composition.

IN 1928, DOHNANYI selected the young prodigy as duo-artist for a concert tour commemorating the centenary of the death of Franz Schubert. The two pianists toured Europe playing Schubert's piano music for four hands.

As a recording artist, Kilenyi has won special distinction. In 1938 he was awarded the Grand Prix de Disque, the highest award of the French recording companies. Before coming to FSU, Kilenyi was musical director for the Remington Record Company in addition to being one of their top recording artists.

The program Monday evening will include the F Major Sonata, Opus 10 No. 2 of Beethoven, "Toccata Opus 7" of Schumann, the "Prelude, Chorale and Fugue" of Cesar Franck and works by Bartok, Dohnanyi and Liszt

Students, Regardless Of Income, Are No Different

The main difference between students who need scholarships and loans to pay their way through a college or university and those whose parents foot the bill lies in the source of their income.

This is a conclusion reached by Dr. G. E. Tully, director of vocational guidance and placement at Florida State University, who recently received his doctor's degree from the University of Illinois and made a study of financial aid in higher education.

DR. TULLY based his research on the counselor ratings of students at FSU who received financial aid and those who did not.

"Recipients of the various kinds of aid, as well as non-recipients, were found to possess in general the same personal traits," Dr. Tully said.

Dr. Tully said the old popular idea that students with scholarships, or working their way through college are more diligent, more serious and harder working and have less fun than other students isn't proved in fact.

"WE COULDN'T find a bit of difference," he said.

Dr. Tully also found that students receiving financial help and those who didn't reported equal difficulty in obtaining enough money to meet expenses.

He found, however, that the students who did not need a scholarship to go to college reported greater family income than did those who asked for help.

HE ALSO set out to find whether the grades of students awarded gifts or loans improved after their receiving the aid.

"The results were inconclusive," Dr. Tully said. "With one group tested the grades did improve, with another they did not."

Dr. Tully has made recommendations for additional study to gain more evidence for appraising further the procedures and policies now used to grant financial aid to college students

SOME INTERESTING facts that are available now after recent research, shows that only seventeen percent of the men graduates of our country were completely supported by their parents. Another twenty-five per cent earned less than one fourth of the way, twenty per cent earned up to one half, seven per cent earned up to three-fourths and only ten per cent earned their way completely.

ANOTHER INTERESTING fact brought out by the national survey shows that of professional men, forty years or over, the men making the most money were men who had self support, or were not totally helped by their families.

However, on the same basis, men in the professional fields vary in their earnings. Men earning $7,500 or over had a larger percentage of family financial during college, while in th of $5,000 to $7,500, the sel ported men took the lead earings of $3 to $5,000 were nated by the self supporte

Adolph Karl Receives Ph.D From New York University

Adolph Karl

Wisconsin-born Adolph Karl, who settled in Tallahassee September 1948, when he became acting associate professor of art at Florida State University, recently received a PhD in art history in absentia at New York University.

Karl spent three calendar years, 1945-1948 at New York University completing his class work and examinations for his doctor's degree. The last two of the three years he lectured on history of art in the undergraduate division of the of the university.

During his five years at FSU, Dr. Karl has given most of his spare hours and every vacation to working on his doctoral dissertation, "The New York Realists". The subject was bigger than he anticipated, and his research work took him all over the eastern half of the United States.

"The New York Realists were a group of American painters who dominated the period from 1900 to about 1913 in this country," Dr. Karl said, mentioning that John Sloan, who died two years ago, and Everett Shinn, who died pla of months ago, were survivors of the group. Sloan, George Bellows and Luks were probably the best painters of this "school."

When asked why a ma spend five years of his life ing a group of not too well painters, Dr. Karl said hi sons were manifold but as an art historian he w record one small phase of cao history which would wise have probably been los found falling into illegible flakes certain Philadelphia papers of the 1900 s importa his research.

Historians too often stud distant past, and quite ofte nore the immediate past, Dr. pointed out.

New to Westcott will be a projection booth from where the stage and house lighting will be controlled. Also, engineers on campus said they hope to be able to install a new organ to further preserve the old theme. Westcott had what was, at one time, the largest organ in the state. The huge instrument was installed in the Music Hall last year

NEXT YEAR, Florida Staters will be behind Westcott a brand new auditorium, modern in every respect, with architecture designed to harmonize with the administration building's older style.

Many will remember Westcott Auditorium as it was when—some will just recollect it as the closed-off hollow part of the administration building The old Westcott will be a thing of the past, having made way for progress and a better life for all.

Five Hundred Attend FSU Picnic at Camp

500 EAT FRIED CHICKEN

TRIPLE LINE-UP—The annual university-wide picnic at FSU's lakeside camp, Flastacowo, drew large crowds of students, faculty and staff. An obviously hungry crowd was soon provided with heaping plates of fried chicken and the trimming through three serving tables which kept the three lines shown above moving steadily. Ken Adams, FSU dining Hall manager, directed his staff in supplying the food. Miss Christine Elmer, in charge of summer recreation program, greeted the guests. Swimming, boating and games before the picnic, and a magic act, and a "sing" afterwards rounded out the afternoon's entertainment.

A BIG PIECE, THANK YOU—Young Richard Parsons, Jr., solemnly reaches out his hand for the large square of cake intended for his dessert. Richard, son of Mrs. Alice Parsons, an FSU summer school student from Jacksonville, was one of many children enjoying FSU's picnic.

Games, sports swimming fried chicken and fun highlighted Florida State University's all-university picnic yesterday at Camp Flastacowo on Lake Bradford, as 500 FSU students gathered for the eats.

Games kicked off the afternoon program as more than 200 persons played horseshoes, badminton, softball, volley ball, table tennis, shuffleboard, and many participated in water sports.

AT 5 P.M. five lines of hungry picnickers lined up to be served a chicken dinner by FSU basketball Coach J. K. Kennedy and members of his physical education classes.

Dr. Sam Neel, FSU chaplain, gave the invocation.

After dinner Wayne Coloney, project engineer with the State Highway Department, performed as a magician.

LATER JIM McGarity, FSU student in music education, led community singing.

Miss Minnie Jones, chairman of the Summer Recreation Committee, helped plan the picnic. Kenneth Gulick made arrangements for tables and chairs.

BILL LANE, FSU audio-visual department, provided the public address system. Lee Causseau head of FSU labor forces arranged for transportation.

Erwin Orau was in charge of recreation. Al Hecht, FSU graduate student from Coldwater Kansas planned the program; and Earl Scott, Miami, was in charge of serving. Dr Mary Alexander, camp director, provided life guards for swimmers and persons who canoed or sailed. Mrs. Ruth DeKalb was picnic hostess.

Campers To Get Awards

The final concert of the Summer Music Camp, to be presented in Opperman music hall tonight, climaxes the five weeks of rehearsal and practice of the music campers.

The program, which includes musical selections by the camp band, orchestra and chorus, dance band and a twirling demonstration by the baton twirling class, will also see awards of citizenship, musicianship, leadership, and ability given to music campers by Dr K. O. Kuersteiner, FSU music dean, and director of the Summer Music Camp.

THE ORCHESTRA will open the program with the Finale of Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony," and will continue with "Finlandia" by Jean Sibelius, under the direction of Robert N. Sedora. The chorus and orchestra combined will perform "Glory," by Rimsky-Korsakov, directed by Herman Gunter Jr.

The Chorus will present four numbers, with Gunter and Harold Chapman, assistant director of the chorus, sharing the podium. Accompanist is Paul Perry, music camper from Miami.

TWO DANCE selections by the Music Camp Dance Band directed by William Holston Tallahassee and a demonstration by the twirling class taught by Mrs. Donna Korla, will precede the presentation of awards.

The music camp band will provide the concluding selections, directed by Oliver Hobbs and Robert T. Braunagel.

Russian Born Girl Attending Texas University Compares Students of Two Countries, But . . .

Editor's Note—The following article is on a Russian Co-Ed attending the University of Texas.

If she graduates, she knows she will be able to get a job, have a home and live quietly and in peace without being afraid of police, or afraid there won't be any bread to eat tomorrow, says Helen Bolinger, [illegible]-year-old Russian-born student at Texas U.

Helene who is spending the summer in Chicago, was brought by Delta Gamma sorority in December 1951, from a Displaced Persons camp in Germany. She and her mother, who fled from Russia in 1943, lived in camps in Poland and Germany before escaping to the American Zone in [illegible]. They later became eligible for immigration into this country.

"Everything is different between life in America and Russia," explained Helene. "First of all you have a much higher standard of living than they have in Russia."

Although there are many illiterates in Russia, she added there are many who want to study. Students there have much more enthusiasm for studying than they do here because all Russians want to go to school to escape poverty. Because they get no money for their work farmers are very poor and want to leave the farm, and the life of workers is little better, she said.

Her family's life in the Ukraine was good until her engineer father was arrested in 1937, Helene said. He was one of 16 million arrested in Russia during that period. He was called on duty to Moscow," she said.

The government was afraid of educated people, she believes. Because their system was built on tyranny, it would work against the tyrants if people knew too much or became too powerful.

After her father's arrest, Helene's mother tried to locate him, but they never heard from him again. Then, Helene said after the police confiscated everything they owned, she and her mother went to live with her grandmother in a Ukrainian village. Later they moved to a nearby city.

"In Russia they rent corners, just a bed in a room. The landlady slept in the same room with my mother," she said. In 1940 they went to live in the Caucasus Mountains where life was easier.

After the war began in 1941, she and her mother fled an almost certain trip to Siberia. They walked 100 miles to a village where they stayed until the German army came. They fled to Poland in 1943.

When the war ended they were in the English Zone of Germany. To avoid being returned to Russia they fled to the American Zone. Because they had no papers to get across the border they entered the American Zone illegally. They walked from an English train station to a station in the American Zone. After five more years of living in refugee camps and Helene's graduation from high school in Munich, they arrived in New Orleans.

Comparing American and European students, Helene said, "I don't think they take life as seriously here as they do in Europe."

A junior mathematics major who made four A's last semester, worked part-time in the library, and did household duties as a member of the Powell House Co-op, Helene stated, "Most European students have an aim in life which they follow very seriously."

Helene will be back at Texas University this fall.

Social Sciences Are Not Lagging Says Dr Beyrer

Have the social sciences lagged behind the spectacular advances in the realm of the natural sciences—such as jet-propelled aircraft, television, penicillin or atomic energy?

This is a question J. Benjamin Beyrer, assistant professor of social work sets himself to answer in an article published recently in Highlights, official publication of The Family Service Association of America.

"The achievements in the social sciences have been as important if not as dramatic and spectacular as those of the physical and natural sciences," Beyrer said.

Beyrer gives as tangible evidence of the progress made by social science, the fact that today in the United States there are 4,574,000 people receiving benefits from the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance provisions of the Social Security Act and 47 million people in work covered by its provisions.

He also points out there is a much greater complexity of subject matter in the social sciences and less money available for research than in the physical and natural sciences.

"In spite of the handicaps to research," Beyrer concludes, "the social sciences have made some significant advances and can be proud of their contributions to progress."

FSU Graduate Recipient of $700 Nurse Fellowship

Recent graduate of Florida State University School of Nursing, Mildred Bearss of West Palm Beach is one of 12 nurses in the nation to receive a $700 Nursing Fellowship Fund to attend the division of Nursing Education, Teachers College, Columbia University.

Miss Bearss, formerly a registered nurse at St Mary's Hospital in West Palm Beach and a captain in the Army Nurse Corps during the war, completed a bachelor's degree of science in nursing education at FSU this year.

3-Week Conference Aids School Teachers

A three-week Leadership conference, designed to aid school principals, teachers, superintendents and supervisors in planning, organizing and using school environment for effective learning, had its social side Monday night, when 200 persons attended a banquet at the Suwannee Room.

Dr. Mode Stone, FSU professor of education, toastmaster, introduced guests. Dr. A. B. Martin, FSU vice president, welcomed the conference members on behalf of the university.

THOMAS D. BAILEY, superintendent of Florida schools, welcomed the conference members to the Capital City and told them that although Florida has made strides in education "Florida's education leaders must continue to advance and not rest on their oars."

On behalf of the conference members Dr. Stone presented a woven basket as a memento of the conference to Miss Hazel Gabbard, specialist, extended school services and parent education, Washington.

MRS. BUENA Meade of Ft Pierce was given an award for attending all six of the leadership conferences held to date.

Mrs. Meade in turn proposed a toast to Mrs. Dora Skipper associate professor of education at FSU, "to a great leader and one who has made a great contribution to education." The assembly stood and applauded Mrs. Skipper for her part in organizing the current conference.

DR. RALPH L. Eyman, dean FSU school of education, who recently returned from Thailand where he spent two years as a representative of the Mutual Security Agency, presented record-

Green Succeeds FSU Engineer Mendenhall, Who Saw Growth Of FSU From Behind Compass

ENTER AND EXIT

RAY A. GREEN, JR., and Colonel Herbert D. Mendenhall, present and past resident engineers at Florida State University, are looking over plans for the new demonstration school, pictured above.

'Colonel' Retires After 33 Years

Retiring from the post of University Resident Engineer, Col Herbert D Mendenhall leaves a long and creditable record of accomplishments behind.

COLONEL Mendenhall saw the number of major buildings grow from 16 in 1930 to about 50 today. He designed and supervised the construction of several of the buildings. And the remodeling of others such as the education building and the dining hall.

"My first big job on the campus was building a railroad siding and heating plant," Colonel Mendenhall recalled. He added that his last job was at the university camp on Lake Bradford where he directed the construction of a concrete block boat house and bath house with concrete piers extending into the lake.

Green Appointed Resident Engineer

Ray E. Green Jr., who has been around the world twice, is the new Florida State University resident engineer, Dr. Doak S. Campbell president of the university, made the announcement this week.

Green, assistant engineer since 1949, succeeds Col. Herbert D. Mendenhall who retired July 1 after 23 years service as resident engineer.

A native of Clearwater, Green was graduated from Clearwater High School in 1939, and entered Duke University. His schooling at Duke was interrupted by the war. During his three and a half years in the Navy and Merchant Marine he circled the globe twice.

Upon discharge he returned to enter the school of civil engineering at North Carolina State College. He received a BS in civil engineering in 1949.

"I will endeavor," Green said, "to carry on the fine work of Col. Mendenhall to the best of my ability."

New FSU Counselor Acts As Go-Between

Fred Vogel, Working Under Culpepper To Advise Student Organizations

By DOROTHY MASSEY

When a university becomes as large as FSU has grown someone is needed to help keep the wheels running smoothly. Fred Vogel, newly appointed counselor for student organizations described his job as being in the nature of a go-between.

Vogel who helps solve problems that arise in faculty-student relationships says most problems are the result of misunderstandings. We are trying to encourage the students to come to us for help in solving their problems but we do not want to tell or force them to solve their problems our way."

Fred Vogel

"WE NEED to know our students what interests them, how to help them find out where they fit in and then help them solve their problems the way they want them solved."

Vogel says that his aim is to work himself out of a job. When the students develop to the point that they take the initiative and solve their own problems, my job will be finished," he said.

VOGEL WHO came to FSU in September 1952 as counselor for men will work directly under Dr. Broward Culpepper dean of student welfare.

Born in New Orleans in 1914, Vogel received his AB and MA degrees at Louisiana State University. He is now working toward a doctor's degree in education administration in his spare time at FSU.

HE TAUGHT mathematics and science also served as coach for eight years in Louisiana public schools. He has had additional experience as principal of St Charles School in Lafourche parish.

From 1943, Vogel served in the navy air corps as a lieutenant, seeing action in the Pacific.

'Poet Of Accordian' To Play For Summer Artist Series

LaVaux Dedicates Life to Elevating Accordian in World of Music

When the Broadway show "Stalag 17" opened, it was a gentle reminder to accordian artist Lloyd LaVaux that although he is now free to appear for concert audiences all over the world, he didn't always enjoy this liberty.

"The Poet of the Accordion," who will appear here Tuesday as the third presentation of the Summer Artist Series, was captured and held prisoner during the war while serving as a member of the Allied Intelligence Service.

LA VAUX IS one exception to the general feeling that an artist's career is doomed if he attains recognition during childhood.

From early childhood, he was brought up under the conviction that the elevation of the accordion in the music world was his sacred duty. He began studying the instrument at the age of five. At 16, he had to his credit solo concerts in three continents.

SINCE 1945, La Vaux has been concentrating on solo concert music, transcriptions of the classics for the accordion, and original compositions for his instrument and for orchestra. He wrote Concerto in D Minor for Accordion and Orchestra."

Since the war La Vaux has made 11 nation-wide concert tours.

A MICHIGAN newspaper critic writes of a recent La Vaux concert. "Advance press notices which often tend to exaggerate hailed him as "poet of the accordion" and "electrifying his audience." But that's what he was and that's what he did."

The Saginaw News music critic writes of "An accordion that sounded some of the time like a full orchestra and at other times like an organ," while from the Victoria Daily Times up in British Columbia comes the report that "The Poet of the Accordion galvanized the audience by playing the accordion as possibly none had ever heard it played before."

POET OF THE ACCORDION

LLOYD LA VAUX, INTERNATIONALLY famous accordianist, will present a concert Tuesday night at the Opperman outdoor theater as the third of the summer Artist Series.

Democratic Endocrination Only Cure for Communism

College students are regularly and determinedly critisized because they "have no purpose." They enter college and change from subject to subject as a butterfly flits from flower to flower. And like the butterfly, the student emerges from the subject with a little nectar.

Actually, whether the student knows it or not, there is a certain purpose to the endless subjects he must take before he can enter into the major field. The purpose being to prepare him better for what ever field he chooses to enter.

But of all the seemingly useless things that the student encounters, spoonfed to him from the time he first learns to reason and understand, is democracy. Democracy as Americans should know it.

Now this knowledge is taken for granted and no one gets up on a soap box and yells about it, but it is there just the same.

But, is this knowledge useless? Should it go to waste? Or should it just be allowed to dwindle because people with a purpose, a sinister purpose, go out and fight for their ideals.

The subject we have in mind at this particular moment is communism, and their school of undermining the American way. Their subjects are taught to hold a purpose in view and are sent into every walk of life where they come in contact with the masses to try to persuade more people that the world is theirs to divide.

That is why, today, more than ever before, the American school of democracy should have a purpose in sight. To drown out the haters of free enterprise and democratic governments.

The only way to fight it is to go out among the people and get the jobs that have the most contacts . . . teaching, government, communications, comics . . . That is what the communists urge, and that is what the democracies must urge. A full fledged endocrination of American policies where it will do the most good. If this is not done, America will soon not be a fit place to live in.

Some people seem to think that it un-American to endoctrinate. If so, the communist policy is un-American and should be outlawed, but since it is not outlawed, evil must be used to fight a greater evil.

It is the job of every American not only to believe, but to train others to believe.

● HONESTY IS THE BEST POLICY

In the past few years quite a bit of emphasis has been placed on honesty on the Florida State campus. The Student Government has taken great pains in drawing up an Honor Code and an Honor System which have been very effective in reducing cheating among the undergraduates. However, the effectiveness of the system has depended upon the cooperation of the students.

Because of the Honor System, the University has developed a very good reputation for honesty for which the student body is quite proud. However, attention has been drawn to the fact that there are some graduate students who have violated this Honor Code. We are by no means condemning our elders enrolled in the University, but to the undergraduates who have built the Honor System it is quite discouraging to realize that there are some adults who would tear down what the younger portion of the generation has fought to keep alive.

Honesty has no age limit, therefore there is no reason to believe that by attaining the legal age of 21 restrictions on honesty are no longer enforced. It is true that there are some undergraduates who violate the Honor Code at FSU, but they are dealt with severly and made to realize the importance of Honesty at any age.

We would encourage all of the graduate and adult students on the campus to familiarize themselves with the University Honor System and follow it the remaining weeks of the Summer Session. Honesty is still the best policy and especially on the FSU campus.

● WORK HARD, IT'S NEAR THE END

Summer school has been in session for five weeks now. For those enrolled in the six weeks course, the time is nearly up. But to those who are lucky or unlucky enough to have to remain in Tallahassee for another three weeks, the time is now ripe for an evaluation of the work accomplished.

Within two weeks the time for finals will have arrived. Each and everyone should ask himself whether they have done their best. Whether their battle with the heat will have been fought in vain.

If the best work has not been done, now, more than ever before, an exertion should be made to make up for the lost time. The work must be polished up. (Not the apple, though it helps.)

Students, no matter who they are, are wasting valuable time and money if they don't do the best of their abilities permit. So, if by this time they don't decide to do right by themselves, the case is as good as lost.

If action is not taken now, later, the cries of "Alibi Ike" will be heard al over. But teachers don't have it in for students, nor give them failing marks because they don't like the new haircuts. No, grades are given on merit, and if there is no merit, there are no meritable grades.

Besides, waiting to the last minute often brings on that irrisistable urge to acquire information on the neighbors' papers. Some people call it chating, others call it foolishness. We'd like to agree with the latter. It's foolishness.

The people fool themselves, they get grades they don't deserve, but if they can face people and get patted on the back for it, its themselves they have to live with and account to. But the guy that supplied the work should be getting a good union wage of $2.40 an hour.

Some of you people that find yourself in that fix can write to John L., and see what he suggests, but we suggest hard work.

● THAT OL' . . . AIN'T WHAT IT USED TO BE

America used to be a swell place to live in. Every man was his own boss and could criticize the government. A democracy where anyone could live without fear.

NOW . . . ? Now the case is different. Lurking in the minds of many Americans is the fear of being branded communistic, losing their jobs and finally exploited by newspapers until public opinion deports them to Russia.

What could be more democratic than allowing everyone to know what is going on. The book-burners are not allowing them to do that. But the book burners are good Joes. They know what Americans should or should not read. They know what Americans should or should not know. "They" is a mighty small bunch of people to decide the nations policies. That is a democracy?

Professors are quizzed relentlessly by newspapers because they are of special interest. And if these people decided not to commit themselves by answering incriminating questions that have put up in such a way as to do nothing else, these people are branded and washed out. Is this a democracy?

If so, then there should be some new definitions of democracy drawn up. Some definition that would cover the base behaviour of some of the people in this country who think themselves individuals so honest and good and intelligent, that they should decide what and who will be done.

Freedom! A nasty word now-a-days. Freedom is something you should not have if you are a true American.

AS WE CALLS 'EM

IS CLARK CLIFFORD ANOTHER STEVENSON?

By ORCHID ALONSO

While Truman was in the White House, he surrounded himself with many men. Most of them incapable of the job given them. But there was one stroke of coincidence in these appointments, and there came to the White House a young lawyer from St. Louis who was the only one of these men that was "big league".

THEY WERE SORRY TO SEE HIM GO

Clark Clifford, the handsome blond lawyer from St. Louis, went to work for Truman in 1946, and served in the capacity of special counsel until 1950, when he resigned. (He figured to make more money in private practice than the $12,000 paid by the government . . and he was correct. His influence in the White House paid off big dividends and big jobs fought to get to him.)

There was a reason why Clifford alone remained as long as he did under Harry. One was that he did not have the "Roosevelt Complex". Truman seemed to think that Clifford never compared him to FDR. (If any comparison was there.)

Another reason was that Clifford did not look or act like an endoctrinator. His democratic background was one of being born a democrat. He lived during the depression, so it is no surprise that he acknowledged the democrats. He also worked in a campaign in St Louis. Outside of that, he was new to the field. He was fresh, and that was what Truman wanted.

CLIFFORD SINCERE

Another thing, Clifford was sincere in his actions. He indirectly led the president to many decisions, but because he had no ideas of his own and if he had them, he didn't give them to Truman. He seemed satisfied in helping Truman make up his mind on vital issues.

Clifford was one of the few men that saw Truman constantly. It was he and Mat Connaly that set up Truman's busy schedule and arranged interviews.

It was Clifford who wrote Truman's address to Congress for a draft of striking railroad men. It was Clifford who backed the president to act against John L. Lewis. Clifford wrote the vetoes against the Taft-Hartley laws, and urged the President to endorse the civil rights laws.

Clifford's greatest contribution was to pick up the pieces and try to make some sort of a sound program.

His strength became noticeable in the 1948 elections. His directing of Truman had pulled the new deal through that election and as far as the democrats were concerned, he had a standing job.

RETURN ACT

Clifford might be through with politics, but then again he might not be. No one has heard of him much, but then, no one had heard of Stevenson much. Clifford is young, ambitious and cool-headed. He is wise and cautious. He is a good man for the democrats, and the democrats need a good man. It wouldn't be too great a surprise to this corner if his name didn't pop up in the National picture before too many years.

In his first jaunt, he started off as assistant naval aide. He rose to special counsel to the President of the United States. He has more than that in him. A nice job as a justice, or perhaps a future cabinet job, or maybe a big wheel for the party, and an eventual nomination is not too high winded a thought. But . . only time will tell.

THE FORUM

HE REGAINED LOSS; PEOPLE LOST ALL

Editor's note — Bruce Galphin, managing editor of the regular Flambeau, is in Washington, D. C., this summer, from where he sends us his regular column.

By BRUCE GALPHIN

This is the story of a man who regained something lost and a town which lost everything it had.

Quite a number of years ago a man named John J. Blewe owned the factory that directly or indirectly provided work for almost everyone in the town of Nostrum. Because of the power he wielded he was regularly and easily elected mayor.

Blewe was not the type of man to be attracted by theoretical schemes for an ideal society. He had got where he was with his two fists, as it were, using whatever methods were most readily available. His treatment of his employees reflected this rough-and-ready personality: he gave them as little as possible. This fact did not make him a well loved man in Nostrum, but he knew his actions were only part of a game which he played better than the others.

There came a time, however, when his high-handedness became too extreme: the conditions of the workingmen became so poor that they could no longer even buy the goods Blewe was producing. His business collapsed, and the town was in general panic.

Out of this chaos there arose a young man named Richard D. Franklin who proposed that the town should get on its feet by planned community action and passing laws to regulate Blewe's business to prevent a recurrence of such disastrous events. Franklin was elected mayor, and his plans, put into action, were quite a success.

Blewe objected bitterly. His business had been saved, it is true, but he was unaccustomed to having his imperious methods tampered with. He said it was intrusion on his rights, that it was an attempt to stifle his initiative.

Time and again Blewe tried to regain his former position of power. His favorite line of attack was to accuse Franklin of being in cahoots with Joe Rote in the neighboring town of Illorum. Rote, faced with a chaos similar to that in Nostrum, had seized control of his town and instituted many of the reforms Franklin did only Rote had used considerably less democratic methods. In many ways he was as high-handed as Blewe had been.

In any case, the people continued to elect Franklin mayor, and the city prospered. Blewe did the wisest thing possible (whether by plan or force of circumstance). He let time pass. He let the people grow content and forgetful of what he had been. And then he put his plan into action.

First Blewe called for a curtailing of the activities of Rote's followers in Nostrum. Harvey Lumpkin, Franklin's successor, realized that there were very few Rotemen in Nostrum, and he felt that though they were noisy, they weren't strong enough to do any harm. Still he knew, too, that the Rotemen in Illorum had been unmindful of many of the workmen's rights, and that to oppose Blewe's suggestion might make people think he was condoning Rote's actions. So Lumpkin saw no harm in agreeing to Blewe's law. Lumpkin was less skilled in politics than had been Franklin.

Next Blewe got people to believe the Rotemen in Illorum were about to attack Nostrum. The Rotemen had never been popular in Nostrum, so convincing them was easy for Blewe, particularly since he published the town's only newspaper.

Once he had convinced the people of the clear and present danger, Blewe took the next step and demanded Lumpkin rid his government of all Rote-thinkers. By now Lumpkin himself was excited, and he began recklessly firing all people who advocated anything the Rotemen advocated, good or bad.

The confidence of the people in Lumpkin was thus shaken by his weakness and confusion, and in the next mayoralty election, Blewe won. He quickly began returning things to the old order of things.

LET'S FACE IT

SO TRUMAN WAS LOUSY; WHAT ABOUT IKE?

Editor's note—Gene Lawler, columnist, is sending us his regular column from Washington, D. C., where he is working this summer.

By GENE LAWLER

Dwight Eisenhower is today, according to Dr Gallup, more popular with the American voter than even last November. According to that pollster, Ike's administration is favored by better than 5-1 even among Democrats.

This immense popularity, bulwarked by a preponderously favorable press, would seem to give Ike a strong position in laying down a sound, bold program to be executed with determination and self-assurance. Yet the record of achievement, after a half-year in office, is slight. Even yet, many observers on the Potomac are mystified as to just what the President's program is.

For instance, the President jointly with Republican leaders, announced an 11-point legislative program early in February. One of these points, the departmental reorganization bill, passed largely because of Democratic efforts. The Tidelands give-away passed.

As for other points little has been heard from the White House on the subject. No Presidential message was sent to Congress on amending Taft-Hartley, extending Social Security, simplifying customs procedures, or extending federal aid to schools in defense areas. A message was sent on reciprocal trade, but no administration bill. Instead, Representative Simpson of Pennsylvania, a die-hard high tariff man, wrote his own. The price of compromise on this tariff bill now appears to the assurance of a protectionist majority on the Tariff Commission.

All in all, the 83rd has been the least productive Congress in years. Truman called the 80th the "do nothing Congress," yet by June 20 1948 Truman had signed 335 public laws. In a like period this year, Ike had signed exactly 62. Compared to the 83rd, the 80th was a whirlwind.

Ike's lack of leadership does not worry the Old Guard. They came to Washington to tear down the last remnants of the New Deal and not to enact any bold new legislation of their own. The fact that Ike referred to the TVA last month as "creeping Socialism," only reassures them.

Ike's treatment of McCarthy exemplifies the appeasement of the Republican reactionaries. Apparently with the objective of "party harmony," the State Department is now more firmly under the thumb of the Wisconsin Senator than ever before. A series of inauspicious appointments made this possible: Dulles, apparently responsible for the internationally infamous "book-burning" directives, Scott McCleod, security officer, who keeps McCarthy posted on the most intimate security matters, Dr. Johnson, under whose brief tenure the International Information Administration progressed from "demoralization to complete disintegration," to quote the Washington Post.

Until Ike's statement on Mathews last week, the Wisconsin Senator had not been interested with in any way by the White House. The upshoot of this "victory" for Ike is that McCarthy retains complete authority in hiring and firing staff members of his permanent investigating subcommittee.

One cannot but help wonder at some of the other doings of the new administration. For example, Treasury Secretary Humphrey, in order to restore the "hard dollar," has had interest rates on government bonds elevated to three and a quarter per cent, the highest rate in history, thereby increasing the national debt by a billion dollars overnight.

Interior Secretary McKay appeared to be the most surprised person of all when one of his appointees turned out to be an extremely bad apple. A Congressional Committee discovered that his choice for director of the Bureau of Mines was drawing a tidy sum from a large mining company each year and admitted to a "hearty dislike" of the federal mine safety regulations. The White House requested the appointment be withdrawn.

Commerce Secretary Weeks, perhaps the least auspicious Cabinet appointment, displayed gross ignorance in relieving Dr Astin director of the National Bureau of Standards for his part in the AD-X2 "scandal." Jess Ritchie inventor and peddler of the miraculous battery potion, composed of Epsom salts and Glauber's salts, is star witness at the Senate hearing now being conducted on the subject.

The fact that NBS has spent $300 for the battery dope (actual estimated value less than $15) to conduct four well-controlled and highly negative tests seems to matter little to Weeks, who insists that the "play of the marketplace," is more important than scientific objectivity in fraud dealings.

There are some bright spots, of course, to the new administration. The Justice Department has succeeded in taking concrete steps toward banishing racial segregation from the District of Columbia. Because of enforcement of cafe integration, Negroes now eat regularly in restaurants they could formerly enter only as bus boys. Action is promised soon in ridding the city of hotel and theater discrimination.

It may well be that Ike needs just a while to get the swing of things (golf clubs excepted). His exercise of leadership or continued lack of it, will bear watching in the months ahead.

FSU May Take Part in Series For WSUN-TV

A series of FSU-sponsored programs over WSUN-TV, St. Petersburg, may take shape in the near future, according to Roy Flynn, FSU Public Relations director.

Eight such programs, presented over the Jacksonville television station recently, were produced by Ivan Johnson of the Art Educations department, in co-operation with the Public Relations office.

THEME OF the first half of the Jacksonville series was constructive use of leisure time through arts and crafts. The how-to-do-it programs included making lamps from driftwood ceramics, and how to amuse children with puppets.

Personnel for the program came from the Art education, Arts, and Home Economics departments.

OTHER AREAS of the university included in the second half of the series were hotel and restaurant management, the oceanographic institute, public administration, geology, nursing, the FSU Circus, and an interview with Coach Nugent.

Transportation to Jacksonville was provided for all members of the programs by Hertz Drive-Yourself.

Don Mover, graduate student in speech, was floor manager for the series.

WASHINGTON NEWSLETTER

CONGRESS MUST WORK HARDER

By SENATOR GEORGE SMATHERS

WASHINGTON Three weeks of hard work remain ahead of the Congress if it is to complete its job and adjourn by the first of August, the goal set by the Republican leadership. This goal can be met but many sessions beginning early in the day and lasting far into the night will be necessary. No good will come of meeting the deadline however if painstaking care does not accompany determined application to duty.

Insects and Humans: Our federal government spends 60 times as much for bug and insect research as we spend for research into the health of its citizens.

This is a well worn and odious comparison, but it should be on the conscience of our leaders. This realization undoubtedly was the underlying motive in the Senate when its refused the other day to go along with crippling cuts in appropriations for the nation's hospital program and research in cancer and other diseases.

I joined in fighting for this program which will enable Florida's health officials to carry out a realistic program, and will benefit millions of citizens in Florida and the nation. I quote from my remarks to the Senate:

"At the present time in Florida nine hospitals are under construction. I have been advised by the Director of the Improvement Commission, E. R. Roland, that unless the additional $15 million is made available for distribution in the various states that not only will we not have new hospital facilities, but the hospitals now being constructed will not be completed, their construction will have to be suspended. That will cause great waste to the Federal Government and also to the people of Florida. My state is growing rapidly. More people come to Florida every week and every month. If we have one specific need it is the need for additional hospital beds. So I am happy to associate myself with the Senator from Alabama, the Senators from South Carolina, and the other Senators who are favor of the amendment."

Newsnotes off the cuff: My orchid of the month to HARRIS POWERS, Editor of SUNTIME, Florida's weekly newsmagazine, for the generous appraisal of my Senate service . . . FARRIS BRYANT of Ocala, Speaker of the Florida House is tentatively slated for appointment to the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. Farris is a splendid citizen and President Eisenhower could not do better in selecting a Democratic member for the group. . . . NBC gave Commerce Committee members a preview of color TV and my wife who attended for me, reports she is "sold" . . . Dinty Whiting of Seminole County, is back in Washington after some time as a foreign service officer at Saigon . . . Alex Pendleton, of Eustis, now a bigtime Tokyo lawyer, is back here after a round-the-world golf tour and getting ready to tour in the states. Alex is a former Florida amateur champ and quite a golf teacher. . . . Jim Farley (formerly Mr. Democrat) had some nice things to say recently about political science courses at FSU. . . . Have completed hearings on Hawaiian statehood bill which has been virtually a full time job in past two weeks.

Opening a series in anticipation of the adjournment of Congress, Senator George Smathers, will be heard in an interview with Congressmen Courtney Campbell of Tampa, and D. R. (Billy) Matthews, of Gainesville, in his weekly radio report from Washington.

EMPHASIZING the close teamwork within the Florida delegation, Smathers invited the two Congressmen to talk with him about legislation before the Congress which they are sponsoring or in which they have been actively interested.

Mr. Campbell, representing the First District, and Mr. Matthews from the new Eighth District will talk to the Senator about taxes, veterans' legislation and problems relating to the elderly citizens of Florida.

Both the Congressmen are serving in Washington for the first time.

In the next four weeks, Senator Smathers will invite to his weekly radio program the other members of the Florida delegation and the series will be completed simultaneously with the expected adjournment of Congress on August 1.

EFFECTIVE JULY 1

VA Direct Loan Extended Year

The Veterans Administration Direct Loan Program to aid veterans in the purchase of homes or farm houses in areas where private financing is not available has been extended for one year. It was signed by the President on July 1 1953.

H K Dickensheets, Manager of the Pass-a-Grille Regional Office, said the Direct Loan Program under the old law ended June 30, and the new law extended until June 30, 1954. The law adds 25 million dollars each quarter to the direct loan fund for the entire country.

DIRECT LOANS are not made in metropolitan areas the VA said. Areas eligible for direct loans are confined in most cases to small towns and rural areas where GI loans from private lenders are not available. Mr. Dickensheets stated that the following areas have been declared ineligible for direct loans, based on the number of guaranteed loans which have been made in these areas during the past 12 months: Hillsborough, Pinellas, Duval, Bay, Leon, Escambia, Orange, the City of Lakeland (plus a radius of five miles from Lakeland City limits in all directions), and the incorporated city limits of Gainesville and St. Augustine.

Many veterans in these areas are still not able to secure guaranteed loans, but percentage wise the prospects for the guaranty market opening up still more in these territories are greater than in many of the more rural areas, Mr Dickensheets stated.

AN INTEREST rate increase from four percent to four and a half per cent has been granted on direct loans, as well as guaranteed loans.

Guaranteed loans are made by private lenders, with the Veterans Administration guaranteeing sixty per cent of the loan, with the guaranty not exceeding $7,500.00.

Mr Dickensheets pointed out that veterans in the 57 northern counties of Florida have secured 38,000 loans, since the inception of the Loan Guaranty Program and to date the repayment record of these loans by veterans has been excellent. Many of these guaranteed loans are from six to eight years old and thousands of them are already well-seasoned. Thus a great many of these veterans are well on the way towards home ownership.

DURING THE three years the Direct Loan Program has been in operation the VA has closed 32,300 direct loans, worth approximately 293 million dollars. In the territory served by the Pass-a-Grille Regional Office, Mr Dickensheets stated that 551 direct loans have been made, involving approximately 4 million dollars, and an additional 120 are in process, which will bring this total to approximately 5 million dollars.

No foreclosures have been experienced on these loans and as of the present date there are no serious delinquencies. This is even better than the National picture, which shows that only one tenth of one per cent of the loans closed have resulted in foreclosure, or voluntary conveyance to the Government in lieu of foreclosure. Thus both types of borrowers have proven themselves to be excellent credit risks.

Although VA direct loans are limited to $10,000, the average loan amount so far is $6,900. Applications for direct loans are being received in the Loan Guaranty Office, 317 Main Street, Jacksonville, Florida, and are being approved on a first come first served basis so long as the veteran's income can justify the application, and so long as the property is appraised at an amount equal to or more than the amount of the loan.

There are but three vital steps to fix in your mind. 1) Stop bleeding. 2) Protect the wound. 3) Prevent shock.

ur first and immediate concern is to stop the bleeding. If only oozing and driping of blood, put a large dressing wound and apply steady and unreleasing pressure with of both hands until you are sure the bleeding has stopped. is serious bleeding you will have to apply a tourniquet. very few people know how to do effectively.

principles are simple. You must put the tourniquet where off the entire circulation to the arm or leg. This means where the main artery enters the limb. It should be no than one hand-breadth from the armpit or from the crotch. st-aid manuals caution you to loosen the tourniquet for five every half hour . Don't do this if the bleeding is serious. patient will bleed to death. Leave the tourniquet on tight bleeding occurs as you loosen it

Your second step, to protect the wound, means to keep your and fingers off it. Cut off the clothes around the wound ed at all times.

The third step is to prevent shock You do this by 1) making patient comfortable, 2) keeping him warm 3) lowering his and shoulders to increase the flow of blood to the brain.

Chest and abdominal wounds require special attention. For wounds through which air is sucking, you must plug up the Pack it with a dressing and then cover with a piece of or other material. Bind this tightly with belts or strips clothing around the chest Have the injured person lie on unded side

For a belly wound 1) cover the wound and 2) treat for shock. sterile or clean dressing and fasten it securely. If the in- are protruding don't touch them or try to put them back give anything by mouth—no water, no foods.

OF THE WILDERNESS?

Suppose you are going into the wilderness and you are going to live off the country. You are to be allowed such essentials hooks and sinkers. But you will be permitted only a single that can be construed as an artificial lure .What would you

There have long been, and are today, all manner of lures based assisted by the revolving blade principle of movement and flash But the curious fact remains that the simple whether used in company with a bare hook, feathered or pork rind, or even a small plug, probably accounts an- for more fish under tougher fishing conditions than any piece of fishing equipment ever manufactured.

MOVIE NEWS

Mitchum, Hayward, Ferrer Take Top Spots In Movies

By BETSY LIVERMORE
Feature Editor

The movie scene shifts every-day American life across the waters to Paris, where one of the most popular productions of the year was filmed.

Beginning yesterday and continuing through Tuesday MOULIN ROUGE, produced by Romulus, tops the marquee at the State theatre

None other than Jose Ferrer takes the lead and plays a fascinating dual role, first as Toulouse-Lautrec, a troubled genius of the artistic world; and second as the artist's titled and aristocratic father.

THE PICTURE portrays the melancholy life of this famous French artist of the '80s and against the mauve background of the Paris of that day, it gives the audience a look into the tragedy of back alleys and dimly-lit cobblestone streets.

A fall down a flight of stairs as a child prevents Toulouse-Lautrec's limbs from growing and because of his extreme deformity and horrible appearance, the young man decides to break with family ties and go away to live, paint, and fulfill himself in Paris.

HIS LIFE, loves, and passions are portrayed through the rest of the picture which brings the story to a close with his death.

One of the most amazing things the audience will observe is the way in which Jose Ferrer thumps through the picture in shoes especially made for his dwarf-like size. He wears these on his knees and thus is reduced to the proper height!

SHARING THE spotlight of stars are Colette Marchand, Suzanne Flon, and Zsa Zsa Gabor, who add their own interpretation to each respective part and make MOULIN ROUGE one of the top productions of 1953.

Another shift of scenery in the opposite direction on the compass swings the spotlight to the wilds of Africa and the crossroads of the tropics which furnish the background for both of the movies featured at Tallahassee's Floride Theatre this week

WHITE WITCH DOCTOR, starring Susan Hayward and Robert Mitchum plays through Saturday and the camera catches everything from Pygmy drums, gold maned lions and Bakuba warriors to Hayward and Mitchum in one of their famous clinches!

Producer Otto Lang and a Twentieth Century-Fox camera crew spent three months filming background scenes in technicolor in the abode of a strange trible of people called the Bakubas some 1,200 miles inland from the West Coast of Africa.

THE MOVIE is based on a Stinetorf novel and concerns a nurse who goes to Africa to volunteer her services in giving medical aid to the natives. She is guided to her distant jungle outpost by a hunter (Mitchum, of course) and the strange story progresses into an unusual climatic ending

Beginning Sunday and playing through Tuesday the Florida brings another tropical thriller to the local movieland scene when JAMAICA RUN, starring Ray Milland and Arlene Dahl moves onto the program.

THE STORY centers around two opposing factions battling for control of a huge sugar plantation The estate is owned by lovely Arlene Dahl, her brother, Wendell Corey, and their slightly addled mother, Carol McComas

Corey is a ne'er-do-well who spends the greater part of the day leisurely drinking and dreaming the hours away. Ray Milland, a rugged schooner captain and deep sea diver visits the plantation and the action starts a sequence of conflict and murder

Keyed to good entertainment, JAMAICA RUN, unleashes the kind of auspenseful film fare that makes it a picture to be put on everybody's "must see" list for the coming week at the Florida Theatre in Tallahassee

FSU FACULTY MEMBER DISCUSSES PURGE

Fissures in the Soviet Monolith
By DR. VICTOR S. MAMATEY
Department of History

Things are really popping in Soviet Russia and her satellites. There is no more doubt about the fact that the Communists are in trouble. The fall and disgrace of Lavrenti P. Beria, one of the four heirs of Stalin, the firing of Vyacheslav A. Malyshev, the top-ranking Soviet economy-planner and important Communist big wig, the wholesale dismissals of officials in the Ukrainian, Latvian, Lithuanian, and Georgian "autonomous" republics are all indications that the transfer of power from Stalin to his heirs has not been effected as smoothily as it first appeared and that, in fact, a rough and tough backroom fight has broken out between his aspiring successors

To this struggle, which may surpass the epical Stalin-Trotsky feud after the death of Lenin, must be added the string of events in the satellite states, the uprising of the Czech workers in the giant Skoda armament plant in Pilsen, the bloody June 17 uprising in East Berlin followed by violent demonstrations all over East Germany, the resurgence of terrorism in Poland, unrest and sabotage in Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria. All these are fissures in the supposedly monolithic Soviet empire. Now, what do these events mean to us?

They mean, first of all, that a war with Soviet Russia in the close future is most unlikely. The Soviet leaders will do everything to evade a conflict, at least, until the question of Stalin's succession is definitely settled The various Communist peace gestures to the western nations as well as to their own disgruntled peoples will probably multiply. The Korean War may wind up after another walk-out or two. Other satellite leaders too closely identified with Moscow may follow into limbo the sinister bullet-headed boss of Hungary, Matyas Rakosi.

Secondly, these events present an unhoped-for opportunity to take the offensive in the cold war and weaken the Soviet empire by hitting it in its sensitive spots, now revealed, just as the Communists have for years been playing on the weaknesses of the non-Communist countries. After a slow start, President Eisenhower's Administration seems to be catching on to the game

The offer of 15 million dollars worth of food to East Germany was a well-aimed blow. If the Soviets had accepted it, they would have admitted the bankruptcy of the East German "workers' paradise." They chose to reject it which certainly will not endear them to the starved East Germany workers. The invitation to a Big Four conference is another good move.

If the Soviets reject or wreck it, this will belie their peace propaganda. If they accept it, they will have to make concessions, for they now need peace more than the West.

New 'Mentor' Tom Nugent Announces Three Daily Workouts Scheduled for Team

Ninety Expected; To Live Together

Fall football drills at Florida State University again will open on August 25, head gridmaster Tom Nugent announced today FSU teams of the past have commenced work on this date

Nugent stated that the squad would report on August 23 for assignment to rooms. Physical examinations are scheduled for August 24

A squad of approximately 90 largest number ever to report for Fall drills here, is expected The 90 will include only some 25 from last year's squad of 87. The draft, graduation, scholastic deficiency and athletic inefficiency all have been factors in the squad's reduction.

"THIS IS A long range proposition," Nugent said today "Incoming freshmen will compose 80 per cent of the 1953 FSU squad. This is quite unusual for a big-time football team but it is certainly a stimulating challenge We have an excellent coaching staff and a lot of raw material. We can't dodge the issues. An indication of the results should be evident in a short space of time"

The '53 squad will be housed in Senior hall on the main campus and will eat at a training table in the new Student Center building.

"THE TEAM WILL live together, eat together, learn otgether, and I hope, will play together," Nugent added "We are seeking good morale and I believe we shall have it."

Nugent will have only a month to the day before the Tribe's opening game. FSU meets the University of Miami in the Orange Bowl on September 25. The teams played their inaugural series in 1951 with Miami winning, 35-13.

NUGENT HAS promsed plenty of wide-open football for his '53 team. The seminoles will run from the 'I' formation, Nugent's own innovation, and also will uses split-T plays. Passing is expeted to be fully utilized in the Tribe's attack.

Nugent plans three a day workouts for the squad with players taking part in only two lengthy workouts and one blackboard session.

Cartier Edits Communication Journal Here

Dr F. A Cartier, assistant professor of speech, finds no trouble keeping busy with his job as editor of The Journal of Communication. Dr Cartier succeeds Dr Thomas R. Lewis, associate editor of speech, who is now a consulting editor of the journal.

Dr. Cartier is planning a symposium on the teaching of communication for the November issue of the journal, which makes a special appeal to teachers and others interested in subjects such as English, journalism, audio-visual aids, social science, military, religion, industry and labor

The symposium, besides featuring articles on speech on improving reading skill, on writing and on listening, will also contain articles on the communication theory, and on teaching the skills of interpreting pictoral material.

An article which according to Cartier, . . . helps in understanding the relation between communications" contains an experimental study on the effect of training in listening upon reading ability.

Dr Gregg Phifer assistant professor of speech, has an article in the current issue of the journal entitled Propaganda and Critical Listening." while Dr Dwight L Surton, assistant professor of education also represents FSU on the journal editorial board.

Audience Watches TV Camera, Viewer

A non-production television camera and viewer were in operation in Science hall yesterday morning for persons from various schools on the campus.

Members of the audience saw themselves on the screen as they stepped into the eye of the camera in addition to seeing the possibilities of this closed circuit form of TV on the campus

ROY FLYNN, Public Relations director and a member of the FSU Educational TV committee, states, "The Tel-eye would provide an inexpensive good method for TV rehearsals and for lecture demonstrations"

Professor W. R. Slaughter of the School of Journalism, who viewed the operation states, "The principal interest of this will be as a classroom training tool."

The camera represents a new approach to supplying a simple television system for industrial and classroom use

THE CAMERA operates efficiently under normal room-lighting conditions. It's low initial cost, low maintenance and versatility makes the camera and viewer a possibility for school use.

The Tel-Eye has a video output that can be tuned in to any standard TV receiver unde, certain FCC restrictions.

"Teachers should do educational planning now" said Dr W. D. McClurkin in the fifth lecture sponsored by the Education School Tuesday night.

After a brief recount of the history of education, Dr. McClurkin said, "It is no longer a question as to why we should educate our children. The questions are what and how the job should be done"

Dr McClurkin believes that chemistry courses should be planned by chemistry teachers—not chemists. The same is true of other courses. He urged teachers to plan education and not leave the planning to the administrators.

Dr. McClurkin is from Peabody College the Division of Surveys and Field Studies

FSU Journalism Students Publish Tallahassee Weekly

Six journalism students at Florida State University are getting the stain of printer's ink in their blood this summer

Members of a special class under Dr. Sidney Kobre o tthe FSU school of journalism, they are beating out stories and meetings deadlines in newspapers news rooms in addition to pouring over textbooks on campus.

LAST WEEK they put out The Capital Labor News, weekly published in Tallahassee, while the editor Searle Martyn, was on vacation. The journalism students took over as reporters, copy-editors, feature writers and editorial writers

Emphasis in their edition was on education, labor and the community. Several of the stories were slanted to make the public aware of the contribution labor is making to Florida cities and counties.

FEATURED IN a front page story and an inside editorial was the timely Florida subject, State Alcohol Clinics vs. State Alcohol Hospital. The editorial suggested a number of clinics to be established throughout the state as the mostp ractical first step in solution of the problem.

Student journalists who participated were: Carl Brett, Betty Jane Foley, Charles Bowden, Margaret Horrox, Dorothy Massey, and Warren Vergason.

All are FSU undergraduates with the exception of Miss Foley, who is a graduate summer student.

The students also devote part of their week to the job of helping the editors get out the Summer Flambeau. Arrangements will be made for the student-editors to work on the Democrat to round out their on-the-job practical experience.

PRESIDENTIAL SURVEY

Journalism Study Develop News-Yardstick Formula

A study initiated by Dean Lawrence R. Campbell of the Journalism School, under direction of Dr. Sidney Kobre has developed a news-yardstick, or measuring formula never before attempted.

Dr. Kobre said the yardstick can be used as a basis to determine the emphasis of each newspaper during a presidential or other type campaign. He said the formula can tell how far in the direction of one party or the other a newspaper deviated.

The FSU yardstick used eight measuring devices for this purpose. These measures include the number of news stories for each political party and the number of inches devoted to each side. Considered important too, were the size of the headlines for each party, the number of stories on the front page and the position of the stories on this page.

A national newspapermen's organization, Sigma Delta Chi, considered making a nation-wide study of newspapers' treatment of the Republicans and Democrats in the campaign, but gave up the job as "too difficult".

Students at the journalism school surveyed 34 out of the 37 Florida daily newspapers over a period of one month, from October 1, to November 3, 1952 The research covered about 900 copies of state papers.

The survey was hailed by the editor of the national magazine Journalism Quarterly, as the most extensive analysis yet made on the controversial subject of newspaper behavior in the campaign" It has been printed in the current issue of the quarterly magazine.

During the investigation, the researchers read 5,241 news articles and 607 photographs. Editorials and columns were also examined

It was an attempt to develop an objective method for determining emphasis or bias of newspapers.

The number of pictures given the candidates helped to determine the stress of each newspaper. Other factors considered were the number of editorials and columns by syndicated and local writers.

The state survey showed that generally the Democrats had a 3 per cent advantage in news and picture treatment. This overall figure varied, depending on the specific paper. It was found that 20 dailies favored Steven were pro-Eisenhower and maintained neutrality.

Analyzing the headline the researchers found the papers favored the Repu over the Democrats by a percentage, but one which ed significant since there more Democratic stories Republican ones. Students from colleges all over the country come to the table where the hostess sits making inquiries about how FSU does it.

FSU Publications To Get Professional Advice From Newly-Appointed Advisers

Kobre, Eide, Slaughter to Advise Flambeau, Tally-Ho, Smoke Signal

Starting today Florida State University's publications will be blessed with professional advice. The advice is to come from a group of selected individuals from the faculty of the school of journalism, appointed by the publications board as advisers to the school publications.

Taking over as adviser of the Flambeau is Dr Sidney Kobre, who has already helped the Flambeau this summer with his advice. Kobre, who has had brilliant experience as a newspaperman, is also working on several of the research bureaus conducted through the school of Journalism.

Smoke Signals, campus magazine edited by John Howard, will be advised by Dr. William R. Slaughter. Slaughter, who has edited several trade publications and other magazines, will endeavor to give the editors any professional advice within his power.

Tally-Ho, FSU's annual, will have the unique opportunity of being under the guidance of Dr. Richard B. Eide recently returned from Norway, where he served with the State Department. Eide, who is presently teaching a class in journalism, has taught at the University of Texas. He has also held several positions as managing editor on leading dailies.

The three men will strive to give the best they can offer in professional advice

According to Fred Vogel, student publication coordinator, the men will not force ideas upon the students, but rather, give them suggestions as to how they may improve their own ideas.

President Doak S. Campbell made the announcement to the Flambeau last night.

4-H Manual Written By Kate Miller

Four-H Club members throughout the nation have a friend in Dr Mary Kate Miller, associate professor of physical education for women at Florida State University

While sitting in on a 4-H Club short course in 1951 on the FSU campus, Dr. Miller heard leaders express the need for a manual in planning recreational activities.

Dr Miller wrote such a manual and made it the subject of her doctor's dissertation on "A Guide for Planning Recreational Activities in the 4-H Club Camps" Her preliminary work dealt only with Florida, but her expanded finished research work was of national scope.

Mary Kate Miller

Written in a style understandable to teen-agers, the dissertation might be used as a tool for planning and directing such activities as a variety of games, dramatics and rituals.

Dr Miller received the doctor's degree in education from Teachers College at Columbia University Both her BS and MA degrees were obtained at Peabody College for Teachers.

Born in Idaho, she came to FSU in 1947. She had served three and a half years in the Navy as a welfare and recreation officer Previously, she had been associated with Oklahoma College for Women in Chickasha for 11 years as director of the physical education department.

Former FSU Queen Makes Cover Girl

Jet Munroe Schmelz of Tallahassee and former Florida State University circus queen was the cover girl recently of All Florida Magazine, syndicated Sunday newspaper magazine.

The color picture was of the red-headed beauty performing on a unicycle, an act that was a show stopper when Mrs. Schmelz was attending FSU.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Munroe of Tallahassee, she is married to Bob Schmelz, former FSU football star. They have one child, a daughter, Cathy Elaine, two months old.

They have lived the past year in Quincy where Schmelz is coach at Gadsden County High. Mrs. Schmelz taught in the elementary school there

MR. RUSSELL, I PRESUME?

PICTURED ABOVE ARE S. Robert Russell, and Morgan Smith. Russell, has just returned from a motor trip to Guatemala, where he discovered sights as yet unseen by men. Smith, a graduate student, is talking over the trip, as he plans to take one himself soon. On a motorcycle.

Russell Visits FSU After Discovery, Tells Of Ancient Ruins In Mexico

By MARGARET HORROX

Explorer S. Robert Russell is here with one of the most interesting stories yet to come out of Mexico. Russell, in his small but ruggedly-built truck the "El Jeep Casita," drove into one of the wildest and most rugged areas of Chipas and discovered colossal ruins previously unknown to science.

This discovery is of major archaeological importance. It shows that a primitive people were inching enormous boulders into place in awe-inspiring ton rock buildings centuries before the Mayas laid foundations.

RUSSELL, and his wife did not stumble onto this discovery. They have been hunting the rumored ruins since 1947, working and saving between expeditions in order to begin another.

Their search took them into tiny villages whose ox-cart rutted streets had never felt the pressure of rubber tires. It bogged them down in jungle mud holes and led them across streams declared not fit for a motor vehicle. It took them across the border of Guatemala when the Latin American highway was only a blueprint.

THROUGH their perseverance and an automatic process of elimination they were finally able to pinpoint the area in which the legendary, unknown race must have lived, if they existed at all. In 1951 they visited the edge of this area, but the brief visit showed them that exploring the area would be too much of an undertaking for Mrs. Russell.

Russell decided to take the trip alone, relying on Indian guides who would know the few trails This meant days on a horse and more days afoot in jungle that a horse could not penetrate. He entered Mexico in December of 1952 and in March of 1953 he found the ruins.

THE RUINS lay in a narrow valley, the enormity of which was breath-taking, Russell said. There seemed to be no end to the enormous pieces of rock construction, which today's engineers would find difficult to duplicate with the most modern machinery.

Together, Russell and the Indian guide measured and mapped the ruins. Russell says they are completely unlike any previously discovered in Mexico. He adds that they must have been built with wooden derricks and other devices to obtain leverage, although it is still a puzzle how a people so primitive could build such pieces of construction without machinery.

Until radio activity tests can be made on material obtained from the ruins, their age will remain a mystery Russell believes they date back to the early, or archaic era of the old Mayan empire.

'52 Homecoming Program Judged Among Top Four

Florida State University's homecoming program for 1952 was judged one of the top four among the nation's colleges and universities by the American Alumni Council at its annual conference held recently in Washington.

Tied for first honors are Moravian Seminary and College for Women, Bethlehem, Pa. and Texas A&M College, College Station, Texas.

Tied for the next highest awards, honorable mention, are FSU and Case University, Cleveland, Ohio.

The FSU program consisted of 24 pages printed in three colors and illustrated with original cartoons by Peg Rigg of St. Petersburg, FSU staff artist, who also did the layout on the prize winning program.

Bob Leigh, FSU publications chairman, supervised work on the program. The conference announced the program won because of its originality of design and presentation.

More than 20,000 copies of the program were distributed to alumni, friends of the university and students several weeks in advance of homecoming.

Cost of the program was contributed by friends of the university. A Jacksonville paper company donated the paper. An Alabama engraving company donated the engravings. A Tallahassee printer printed it without charge.

Miss Mildred Parrish, executive secretary, FSU Alumni Office, and Jack McGraw, assistant to Miss Parrish, attended the conference.

Good Principal Understands 'Problems' Says Dr. Frick

"A good school principal understands the problems of modern culture and the appropriate role of the school in that culture," said Dr. Herman Frick professor of education at Florida State University, in defining the qualifications of a school principal.

The role of the school once was to teach the answers," the Florida educator explained. "Now that we no longer know the answers, the schools can only teach children and youth to recognize their problems, to solve those that they can, and to embrace the common understandings and agreements that bind our culture together, rather than whittle them away."

The other featured speaker on the program, Jim Cherry who is a county school superintendent and former president of the Georgia Education Association, emphasized "the professional approach" in running a school. He pointed out that hospitals, doctors and medical schools do not lower their standards when hard pressed for help; and schools must not accept less than adequately prepared teachers on their staffs.

More than 200 principals attended the conference of Georgia elementary and high school principals.

'Flambeau' Ends Summer; Gets Praise For Appearance

After pounding at typewriters for six weeks, the Flambeau staff is at last ready to turn off the midnight oil and start going to class. With today's sixth issue, the Summer Flambeau is laid gently to rest among the Summer Flambeau's of the past, never to rise again . . . until next spring.

Editor Orchid Alonso, who jumped from reporter to editor within two semesters, had a rough time, but says that she was really getting into the swing of things."

THE SOPHOMORE editor said she hoped that the students have enjoyed the paper. "The students who helped, worked very hard and deserve praise," she added.

Dr. Sidney Kobre professor of journalism, whose editing class worked with the editors of the Flambeau, this summer, congratulated the staff on the improvements made in news and feature coverage. He also gave the editors credit for the improved make-up.

"THE CLASS in journalism gained much from the practical laboratory afforded by the Flambeau, he said. "The class members pitched in every Thursday to help the editors get out the newspaper, writing some stories, and a number of headlines. Some worked overtime to assist in the production of a good college newspaper.

"The Flambeau editors, Orchid Alonso, editor, and Margaret Horrox, were co-operative, and being short-staffed, welcomed the class help. Flambeau staff and journalism students worked along side each other smoothly"

DR. KOBRE thought that some effective news stories and interesting features were written this summer One especially solicited article by Prof. Victor S. Mamety, of the history department, for the FSU weekly was picked up by the Democrat. The assembly of news articles, head lines and pictures all contributed to an attractive front page as well as inside pages which varied from issue to issue.

Those who were in the editing class included Betty Jane Foley, Carl Brett, Dorothy Maxey, Warren Vergason, Margaret Horrox

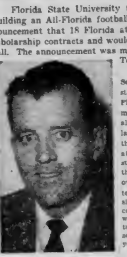
With a background of gay circus music, the entertainment is produced on and from a sawdust covered, island stage, with palm trees for Florida atmosphere. The students perform circus acts such as the high tight wire, flying trapeze, Spanish web, iron jaw, double trapeze, the toe to toe hold, and hand-balancing and high bar acts.

Johnny Fortune is directing the show and the island stage has been named the "Isle of Fortune" in his honor. Johnny received his BS degree at FSU and is now doing graduate work. He has five years with "Flying High" to his credit.

Eighteen Florida Prepsters Sign Up With FSU Seminoles

Florida State University took a long step towards building an All-Florida football team today with the announcement that 18 Florida athletes had signed athletic scholarship contracts and would enter the university this fall. The announcement was made by FSU football coach Tom Nugent.



Tom Nugent

Nugent, who took over the Seminole grid reins in February, stated today: "I want top flight Florida boys This is our first major step toward our goal of an all-Florida team. Even with our late start this year we believe that among these fine Florida athletes we shall uncover future stars. We thoroughly realized that the state had been combed over and the vast majority of potential greats had already been signed But I have the utmost confidence that these young men who are now getting their opportunity will make us happy at sometime during the next four years."

THE 18 FRESHMEN will report along with the rest of the squad for opening drills here beginning on August 25

Of the 18, five are ends, one is a center, and 12 are backs.

Included in the 12 backs is Lee Corso of Miami, a top-flight back who is rated by Indian coaches as a leading competitor for the vital quarterback post in FSU's 'T' and split - T formations. Armed Forces Apply Knowledge Of Ocean

If the armed forces during World War II had not applied the knowledge of oceanography to its problems of landing on enemy beaches, many men now living would have been sacrificed, A. G. Matthews, chief engineer, Division of Water Survey and Research, Florida State Board of Conservation, told members of a Florida State University class in marine biology Friday night

In discussing some instances of applied oceanography, Matthews pointed out his own experiences during the last war.

Oceanography is the study of geography that deals with the ocean and its phenomena.

The chief engineer said the armed forces used maps, charts, tide-tables, weather and surf forecasts, the files of written or printed materials, airplanes and submarines to gain information on the ocean and beaches

"A scientist well-grounded in wave mechanics could find an enormous amount of data about the long shore depths and bottom contours from a single aerial photo, he said.

"By using various gadgetry, such as color filters, special film, special intervalometer, airborne magnetometers and so on, Beach Intelligence teams were able to verify information on which landings were based."

He said frog-men were also used to gather information.

Matthews said his office in Washington had 72 hours to investigate the eastern face of the island of Leyte before General MacArthur's landing.

"Dr. Mason, then on the U. S Beach Erosion Board, now Dean of Engineering, George Washington University, headed a team with the job to recommend suitable assault beaches to General MacArthur's headquarters.

"We knew the tidal range and times, the annual wind rose, the cycle of direction and velocity of the major off-shore currents, and the soundings off-shore, but we knew nothing of the composition and slope of the beaches nor the bars close to shore," the speaker said.

Matthews said Dr Mason's team located an engineer's unpublished article in which the

Improved School Lunches Subject of FSU Conference

How to give Florida's school children the best and most attractive food for their lunch money will be stressed at Florida State University's second annual training program for school lunch personnel to be held August 2-7 on the campus.

More than 700 members of the state organization, representing 54 counties, have registered for the program which is unique in offering such courses to meet actual needs as Foundations of School Lunch Program Operation; Quantity Cookery; The Relation of the School Lunch Program to the Total Nutrition of the Child; and Organization and Management of School Lunch Departments.

STAFF FOR all courses will be from the FSU school of home economics and department of hotel and restaurant management, the State Department of Education, and the State Board of Health.

A number of county school lunch supervisors and representatives of the U. S Department of Agriculture and other state departments as well as commercial demonstrators will also serve on the staff.

MISS FLORENCE Wagner, school lunch program specialist of the State Department of Education, is program director. She said films will be shown in Opperman Music Hall, lectures given in Science Hall, demonstrations held in the university kitchens and discussion groups will meet in regular classrooms.

Dr. Doak S. Campbell, FSU president, and State Superintendent Thomas R. Bailey of public instruction will welcome the lunch room personnel Sunday, Aug 2

Everyone completing the FSU program week this year will receive 30 clock-hours of credit towards the course she is taking. Each course is 60 clock-hours in length. The credit will be recorded in the state department of education.

A sightseeing tour of Tallahassee, swimming, field trips and various social functions will highlight the recreation side of the program.

Agnes Reedy Explodes Idea That Poorly-Adjusted Child Comes From 'Broken Home'

Do more poorly adjusted school age children come from "broken" or "unbroken" homes?

The belief, so common among parents and teachers, that the so-called "problem child" comes exclusively from the "broken home" was largely exploded by a study by Miss Agnes Reedy.

AS A background to her study, Miss Reedy consulted key members of the State Department of Education, members of the State Department of Public Welfare, Probation and Parole Officers, ministers, physicians, lawyers and educators interested in the problem of children in need of better adjustment.

"We found the need for better adjustment seems almost as prevalent among pupils from unbroken homes as from broken homes as from broken homes," Miss Reedy said

THE SCHOOL teacher said broken homes in her study are considered those where the parents are divorced, separated or dead.

Working under the direction of Dr. W T. Edwards, FSU professor of education, Miss Reedy found that among the total number of children coming from broken homes, two-thirds were deemed by their teachers to be in need of special attention or help.

Among the total number from unbroken homes the proportion ren almost as high, between 50 and 60 percent.

THEY DECIDED the child in need of better adjustment was one who was frequently out of harmony with his surroundings or who caused a disturbance in the classroom or exhibited either aggressive of regressive behavior.

"We came to the conclusion that many 'physically' unbroken, may be actually broken, for example, by the continued friction of parents or tension between parents," Miss Reedy said.

"These 'psychologically' broken homes, with their lack of unity and cohesion, often create as many problems for children as the physically broken"

IT WAS pointed out that there is no way, however, of determining to what extent such condition as constant quarreling, tension and discord exist in children's homes.

The four most common needs of all the pupils studied from the standpoint involved, self-confidence social adjustment, emotional stability and better home environment.

"There was little difference in the extent to which pupils from broken or unbroken homes showed these needs, except, the percentage of pupils needing more emotional stability was higher in children from broken homes," she said

THE STUDY also revealed the greatest need for better adjustment by the children in the broken group was for security Nearly one-half of them had this need, while only a small percent of the children from unbroken homes showed it.

"This was also true of their need for love and understanding," Miss Reedy said. "The greatest need of the children in the unbroken home group was for more self-confidence and better social adjustment."

Agnes Reedy

AT THE conclusion of her study Miss Reedy polled the teachers of Myrtle Grove School to determine how the school might more adequately help meet the needs of children to both groups.

"Although we realize that our conclusion may be applicable only to this particular school and community, we hope the study may be of value to other educators interested in this problem," Miss Reedy pointed out

Publication Advisors Not to Suppress Press

Dr. Campbell's announcement of the new faculty advisors for the FSU publications, Flambeau, Tally-Ho and Smoke Signals, aroused various questions in the minds of the students. Especially students who for years have heard of the possibility of such a program.

Determindely, student officials of the publications have fought such an action because as they put it, it would no longer be a student publication, if the faculty of the journalism department stuck their noses in.

In such a case, it is always wise to get the attitude of the persons involved. Nothing has ever been solved by idle speculation.

We have done just that. Now here are the facts. The advisors are not wholesale distributors of administration policies. They are there to give advice. Professional advice, hadly needed by the publications.

It stands to reason that students are wary of admitting that they don't know everything, but if they are honest with themselves, they will have to admit it, and admit it freely. The students have done well by themselves for many years, but the majority of these students have never even been near the school of journalism. They do not have the background for it, even though their interests and intentions were of the best.

They have done a good job, and we are not here to criticize them, on the contrary, thye should have more than just a pat on the back for the job that they have performed.

But . . . Think of the possibilities that professional advice can open up. They can have a bigger and better program, and besides, the advice is not forced on them. The students are free to choose their own way, and if they choose to disregard the professional hints that these advisors are able to give them, bully for them and their pride. It might even be a better plan, but what if it isn't.? The student should be able to admit when he is in the right, and when he is in the wrong. From there on, the course is open to his own free will.

As for the mingled fears that is an obstruction to freedom of the press, we for one feel that experienced journalist, who have always advocated the free press, would hardly be the ones to do anything that would have a tinge of suppresion. Their own professional ethics and responsibilities prohibit that.

In speaking to Dr. Kohre, new advisor to the Flambeau, and without whose professional guidance the Flambeau would not have been able to function this summer, due to the unfortunate circumstances that threw the editorial job to completely inexperienced people, he says that his intention for the Flambeau would be an effort to give them some time if they need and ask for advise. Dr. Kobre has an excellent record as a journalist, and his full-hearted interest and cooperation this summer proves beyond a doubt that the publications will not suffer, but prosper, under the guidance of these seasoned individuals.

There is no doubt but that if time is not taken to talk over the situation, there would be more than just hard-feelings between the student officials and the new advisors. Now we know where they stand, we have but to wait and see what the students next fall will do with their new "pet."

● THANKS, ITS BEEN SWELL

It has been a long standing custom for the editor, in his last issue, to say goodbye to the old staff, and hello to the new one. In the summer, the story is quite different. The next staff that will take on the Flambeau will be the new staff for next semester, so we can take time out only to thank the present staff.

Margaret Horrox and Suzanne Linebaugh did a marvelous job supporting the editorial side of the paper. Their work and cooperation is unmatched.

On the business side, Nancy Lowe and Miriam Sawyer did more than their share of taking care of ads and seeing that the paychecks came through.

There were also many others who helped. Barbara Meadows and her big job of proof-reading, Joan Carpenter and the headline writing, Dr. Kohre's editing class, all-around helpers. They also deserve thanks.

Last but, not least are the people who were available as reporters for whenever needed. Betty Sellars, Virginia Patrick, Mary Ann Benet, John Howard and Miriam Sawyer.

Thanks to you all, gang, its been swell.

RELIGION EDITOR

'INNER FEAR' CAN BE DOOM OF U. S.

(Editor's Note: The following article was prepared for publication by "Religion at the News Desk," and reprinted with permission from their New Haven office. The group serves as religious interpreters of the news with Laurence Martin, editor.

The news from the USSR this week has dramatized the destructive effect of widespread suspicion and fear in a human community. But the destructiveness of lack of faith in each other is demonstrated in our own society as well as in Russia.

In our free country we have nothing so terrible as the systematic and universal distrust and fear and hate which fill all of a totalitarian society: our minds and tongues are free, because we can trust each other and have faith in our common institutions. But there are some very disturbing tendencies in our national life today, which move us toward fear, hate and distrust.

The name that has come to be attached to these tendencies, because of their chief representative, is McCarthyism. A frightening picture of their effect is given in the July 21 issue of THE REPORTER magazine. In careful, restrained, and responsible fashion, The Reporter traces the results of McCarthyism in creating fear, hate, suspicion, silence, and timid work in the State Department and in the Voice of America.

McCarthy's assistants will take a disgruntled employee and get him to tell on his superiors, fanning the spark of petty grievances into flaming charges. McCarthy uses his senatorial powers to subpoena and intimidate top administrators, and he uses his channels of publicity to ruin reputations. His committee never concluded their investigation of the Voice of America, nor made any report, nor proposed any legislation. Yet he crippled and nearly destroyed the agency by creating fear within it, and by discrediting it by public charges. The Russians have spent millions of dollars trying to jam the Voice, and now McCarthy's circle of suspicion has done it for them.

He has his spies through the State Department, and men are afraid to talk, afraid to propose policies they honestly believe to be the best for the country, because they fear what McCarthy could do to them in the headlines and on TV. And out beyond the government itself, McCarthyism spreads to blanket accusations against clergymen, and teachers, and movie producers: the circle of fear is widened and the crew of spies is increased.

This month, for the first time, Senator McCarthy lost an important skirmish because he became involved in one of the touchiest of domestic American issues: Religion.

The hornet's nest was stirred up after Senator McCarthy's single-handed hiring of J. B. Matthews, a professional anti-communist, as executive staff director for Senator McCarthy's Permanent Sub-committee on Investigations. Mr. Matthews in the last 10 years had written several inflammatory articles criticizing liberal Protestant churchmen and organizations.

His latest blast appeared in The American Mercury last month. It began with the words, "The largest single group supporting the Communist apparatus in the United States today is composed of Protestant clergymen." Matthews' article produces an immediate protest from three directions: His fellow Senators, the clergy and the President. McCarthy agreed to dismiss Matthews but insisted on his right to personal control over all such appointments.

Thereupon, half the sub-committee resigned rather than accept this culmination of one man's rule.

Senator Byrd of Virginia stated that Senator McCarthy's appointee, Mr. Matthews, "Should give names and facts to sustain his charac er stand convicted as a cheap demagogue willing to blacken the character of his fellow Americans for his own notoriety and personal gain."

McCarthy's hiring of a man who had injudiciously assailed a large group of the Protestant clergy in such a way that all Protestant clergymen were to be held suspect led to nation-wide clerical protest from pulpits and press releases. Dean James A. Pike of the Cathedral of St. Johns the Divine in New York City held that Mr. Matthews' statement "is so absurd on the face of it as to reflect on Mr. Matthews' competence to hold any public office."

Dr. Pike said, that ministers have spoken out on social questions because "as ministers of God they are under ordination vows to proclaim the gospel of freedom and human dignity against all that would tyrannize the soul—on either side of the Curtain."

One of the clearest statements was made by one of America's most responsible clergymen, Dr. John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary and Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. Dr. Mackay had been called by Mr. Matthews "a top collaborationist with communism." In repudiating the charges, Dr. Mackay said, "We have come to a moment when in certain circles in our country you can be anything you want if you are anti-communist.

You may be a liar, a rake, or a Fascist: everything is condoned so long as you vociferate against communism." He lashed out at the appointment of Mr. Matthews further by saying, "The fact that the appointment could have been made at all, and then arbitrarily, exposes the inner logic of a current trend.

We confront the Twentieth Century American version of the Sixteenth Century Spanish Inquisition—The new inquisition already has its Grand Inquisitor, who like his famous prototype, thinks in patterns which have been made familiar to the world by totalitarian regimes." The Grand Inquisitor, Dr. Mackay added, "seeks a henchman of a type similar to himself."

The most effective statement resulted from an action by leaders of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. Three prominent clergymen, one the president of Notre Dame University, one the president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, and the other pastor of New York's Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, signed a telegram to President Eisenhower. They telegraphed that Matthews' charges were unjustified and deplorable.

With surprising promptness, President Eisenhower replied within the hour that he agreed. The speed of his response was significant. After long conferences on what to do with McCarthyism and McCarthy, the administration had decided the time had come to make an open challenge. The President replied to the clergymen that "generalized and irresponsible attacks that sweepingly condemn the whole or any group of citizens are alien to America.

Such attacks betray contempt for the principles of freedom and decency. And when those attacks—whatever their professed purpose be—condemn such a vast portion of the churches or clergy as to create doubt in the loyalty of all, the damage to our nation is multiplied."

THE FORUM

COLUMNIST 'SITS IN' ON 'McCARPY'

Editor's note — Bruce Galphin, managing editor of the regular Flambeau, is in Washington, D. C., this summer, from where he sends us his regular column.

By BRUCE GALPHIN

The other day I wandered into a Senate Committee hearing room where Senator McCarpy was questioning writers who had produced books containing ideas. The Senator was having trouble with a certain Young Man who was not a writer himself but had inspired quite a number of books.

Those acquainted with McCarpy's moods and habits recognized from the intense look in his eyes and the assurance in his voice that he was in rare form: he was on the trail of something really big.

McCarpy: Young Man, I have before me a full account of the things you've been saying.

Young Man: My words have been for all to hear.

McC.: Yeah, but you didn't expect that there would be good people among the rabble you were talking to, or people who would turn good.

Y. M.: Just what do you mean, sir, by "good"?

McC.: Don't be irrelevant. Just answer my questions. Now, is it not true that you have said time and again that people have no right to the things they have won by their initiative and shrewdness? Have you not advocated turning good men's personal possessions over to a corrupt bureaucracy?

Y. M.: Forgive me, sir, but I did not put it that way at all. I have only said men must think of more than themselves . . . that they owe a debt to something bigger than themselves.

McC. (with a sneer): That they are their brothers' keepers, I suppose.

Y. M.: I believe I have used those words.

McC.: Don't put on that innocent act for me. One of my assistants has found a passage in a book which proves you took food away from a child in a crowd listening to your garbage and gave it to people who didn't work for it.

Y. M. (with a smile): I'm afraid that story was an oversimplification used to illustrate a point. You see I merely asked the people who had food to share it with their neighbors who didn't.

McC.: You mean you asked asked them to turn over the products of their labor to people who were too lazy to earn their own.

Y. M.: It was not a matter of laziness. These other people were born and raised under unfortunate circumstances.

McC.: You say they didn't have enough sense of right to improve themselves?

Y.M.: Senator, you distort my words.

McC.: I am the judge of distortion, and I recognize that this namby-pamby talk about sharing with your neighbors is just a shoddy attempt to cover up Communist propaganda. Why don't you just admit you're a Commie and save us the trouble of proving it?

Y. M.: Oh, no, I'm not at all. You realize, I'm sure, that Communists advocate violence; I have always spoken for peace.

McC.: You don't have to tell me anything about Red tricks. All you Commies talk about peace.

Y. M. (indignantly): Don't you believe, Senator, that a person can be in favor of something a Communist favors without himself being one.

McC.: Are you kidding? After all I've proved in the last few years?

Y. M.: But Senator, there's such an obvious flaw in your syllogism!

McC. (obviously confused): What's that? Oh well, never mind. Let's see you wriggle out of this one, another book tells how you foully attacked some honest businessmen who had set up a concession in one of your churches.

Y. M.: I suppose you refer to the money-lenders in the temple? You must realize, Senator, that these men were invading provinces in they had no business. When a man's "rights" interfere with the rights of others, he must examine himself and proceed with caution.

McC.: Do you think the majority of people were in favor of your acts? A majority of the good, substantial people, I mean.

Y. M.: (with a sigh): I'm afraid they didn't . . . but if they had understood what was involved . . .

McC.: Let's get back to your statement that the businessmen had no right in the temple.

Y. M.: There are certain things which simply do not allow room for compromise . . . for perversion. For instance, your committee claims to be for democracy, yet you pervert the democratic processes by . . .

McC.: (angrily): Young Man, let me warn you. "I'm a powerful man. I can crucify you.

Y. M. (with an ironic smile): Yes, others have done that very thing.

Other visitors to the committee hearings were waiting, and I had to leave.

Is There Less Expression Of Speech Today in U.S.?

"I am mortified to be told that, in the United States of America, a book can become a subject of inquiry, and of criminal inquiry, too; that a question like this can be carried before a civil magistrate.

"Are we to have a censor whose imprimatur shall say what books may be sold, and what we may buy? Whose foot is to be the measure to which ours are all to be cut or stretched? It is an insult to our citizens to question whether they are rational beings.

"If DeBecourt's book is false in its facts, dispose them; if false in its reasoning, refute it. But for God's sake, let us freely hear both sides, if we choose.

"The book is not likely to be much read if let alone, but, if persecuted, it will be generally read. Every man in the United States will think it a duty to buy a copy, in vindication of his right to buy and to read what he pleases."—Thomas Jefferson, in a letter written in 1814 to a friend in France.

By DR. MAURICE VANCE
Department of History

Equally important to the continuance of our democracy are majority rule and minority criticism. The original source of a majority view is always a minority—often a minority of one—and to stifle or intimidate the expression of minorities would deprive society of those new ideas without which, in the long run, it could only stagnate.

The current investigations of suspected radicals by militant conservatives make us wonder which influence will ultimately be greater, the uncovering and silencing of dangerous radicals or the intimidation of honest liberals. For despite basic differences in the solutions they support, liberals and radicals do have this in comon, that both find aspects of society to criticize.

In fact, they often criticize the same things, and the public sometimes has difficulty in distinguishing between red critics and red-white-and-blue critics. That the latter feel somewhat restrained by the climate of opinion of which Senator McCarthy's charges and investigations seem to be a thunderhead can hardly be doubted.

However, McCartheism is only one factor among several which in recent years have lessened our independence of expression. Economic conditions, changing patterns of national psychology, increasing specialization and complexity of public work and problems and new developments in the communication of facts and ideas have all contributed to this hesitance which is in some contrast to yesterday's self reliance and individualism.

This change stems in part from the fact that knowing how to criticize society constructively is more difficult today than ever before. True, we have more rapid communication and more extensive programs of education than any earlier generation. But specialization is upon us; it not only requires one's full attention and energy to master and keep up with his own field, but understanding any one of a hundred departments of current affairs could be a full time job also.

In this complex of problems and events, where issues are seldom simple and clear cut, there has arisen the professional explainer, and such has become his vogue that many a professional scholar, or politician, or local editor, flounders until he has consulted his favorite columnist of commentator.

It is unfortunate, albeit in keeping with many other aspects of our national development, that we have increasingly become spectators, rather than participants — in recreation, in politics, in social problems, even in making up our own minds.

Then there is the consideration of personal security. Americans today have more gadgets than ever before, and we are more dependent on them — we are more reluctant to forego physical comforts or risk losing them. At the same time, today's editors, ministers, politicians and teachers, who live through the depression of the 1930's, remember only too well the disturbing influence that economic insecurity can have on an individual or family.

We are less optimistic, less speculative, more concerned with tenure and pensions than with crusades. Changing international conditions, too, have made us more security conscious, and the net result is an increasing hesitance to do or say anything that might endanger birds in hand.

It is in this framework of complexity, confusion and fear of insecurity that the activities of the conservative crusader or the admonitions of the cautious board member suggest most effectively to the minister, or editor, or teacher, that he take it easy, avoid controversy, play it safe.

Meanwhile, what of the public? Does it want its servants to stay in ivory towers and shun live issues? More to the point, is that what it needs? True, agonized yelps and organized pressure arises when toes are pinched. But in a more basic and general sense, the suggestion that our public education system, our newspapers, our churches, were organized and are supported for the purpose of controlling expression, preventing progress, perpetuating problems, is patently absurd.

The public has a right to expect from its servants, not that they will live apart from the problems that beset the nation, but that they will give these problems their full consideration and to the public the benefit of their considered views whenever they can be of assistance.

The public and the administrators of public organizations in turn owe to public servants the continued assurance that the expression of minority views, even unpopular views, will meet with encouragement and not retaliation.

Only through the stimulation of free thought and expression can we meet successfully any of our significant problems, particularly the problem of disloyalty which is currently alarming Senator McCarthy and his friends.

'ORCHIDS FROM ORCHID' TO EVERYONE

By ORCHID ALONSO

This is the last issue of the summer session, and the last column by yours truly. Most people take time out in their last column to say how glad they were to have a reader (the proof reader) or some other such thing.

But I am not, I have more than one reader; they've told me so. Instead, since I have been sort of giving some background on different people, I'll do the same this time, but this time about one of our own personages on campus.

ITS BEEN A SWELL SUMMER

Indeed, it has been a wonderful summer this summer at FSU. Mostly because we had a well-rounded out program of events. The person who did most of the planning and had the headaches, was the one and only Miss Christine P'Simer, director of the summer recreation program.

Under her guidance, students had a whole swell program-filled summer. There were trips, tours, dances, book reviews, coffee hours, receptions, square dances, and free movies. With the help of her very able staff, she figured out the times and made sure that there would be no overlapping. They rounded up busses for transportation, and no one can forget that picnic with the fried chicken.

Since we're handing out Orchids (from Orchid) we'll have to mention Dean J. Broward Culpepper, for his wonderful work with the students, and untiring efforts to better the lot of the students on campus.

NEW GUYS WORK TOO

Fred Vogel, who has just been recently appointed counsellor of organizations on campus, has already gone into the full swing of things. He has already contacted many of the student officials and started a working program for next year on the basis of, as he puts it "good relations between students and administration."

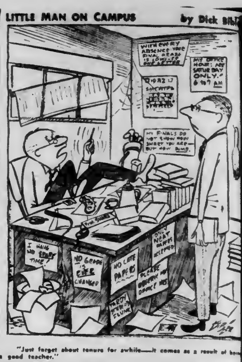
LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS by Dick Bibl



"Just forget about tenure for awhile—it comes as a result of be a good teacher."

THREE NEEDED

Vets in School Must Fill Forms

The Veterans Administration calls attention of Korean veterans, schools and establishments that it is necessary to execute three different VA Forms to effect enrollment in schools or establishments.

First: Veterans must file application for education or training benefits on VA Form 7-1990.

Second: Veteran's records will be checked and, if in order, his eligibility and entitlement will be included on VA Form 7-1993 executed by the VA and transmitted to the veteran.

THIRD: THE veteran and the school or establishment will execute and sign VA Form 7-1998 and forward to the VA, showing the actual date of entrance into training, before benefits may be authorized.

All applicable items on the aforementioned forms must be completed in detail in accordance with instructions thereon.

The VA also gave some common-sense advice to Korean GI Bill veteran trainees and their schools or establishments which should be followed after training is started in order to prevent delays in veterans' monthly GI allowance checks.

H. F. Dickensheets, manager of VA's Pass-A-Grille Regional Office stated that, after training is started, both the veteran and the school or establishment should take a careful second look at the monthly certification of training they are required to send to VA after the end of every month of training completed.

THEY SHOULD make sure it has been completely filled out, and signed and dated both by the veteran and a representative of his school or establishment. If VA gets an incomplete form, it has no choice but to return it—causing needless delay. The law requires that VA receive these certifications, properly filled out, before a veteran may be paid his monthly allowance.

Mr. Dickensheets also urged that the certifications be sent to the Regional Office as soon after the end of the month as possible. If a certification arrives too late, the chances are that the veteran's check will be late.

ANY CHANGE in a veteran's training status should be reported to VA. Such a change, for example, would be his dropping courses so that he changes from a full-time to a part-time student.

A veteran's GI allowance is based, among other things, on the number of hours he spends training each month. If his classroom time is cut down, and the VA is not notified, there a chance he would be paid much for that month. Once learns of the fact, it would have no alternative but to collect overpayment. Meantime checks would be delayed while matters were being straightened out.

Mr. Dickensneets warned that VA cannot make allowance payments under the law, unless the training program a veteran taking is the same as has been approved by his State Approving Agency. This provision has been placed in the law for the veteran protection against training that does not come up to standard.

IF THERE is any change from what has been approved by the State, the school or training establishment should lose no time getting in touch with the State agency so that new approval may be obtained for the revised program.

As an example, the State might approve an on-the-job training program which calls for a particular training wage scale. If the veteran's employer decides to change the wage scale, he shou let his State Agency know about it at once. If he doesn't the veteran-trainee may get no checks, since the law prevents VA from paying allowances to a veteran taking a training program that deviates from what has been State-approved.

VA EXPLAINED why close co-operation between the veteran and his school or establishment is such an important factor in keeping GI checks coming on time.

Machinery for certifying GI checks in VA regional offices is geared to handling large numbers of records in a short time. This is necessary because each regional office has hundreds, if not thousands, of checks to process each month.

If everything is in order a veteran's check goes out on time along with all the others. If not his records must be removed from the regular operations so that they can be handled individuall. Meanwhile, the other checks through while his is delayed.

Co-operation by the veteran and his school can prevent many of these instances that require special handling, VA said.

Bowling League

By FRED MANSFIELD

Each team appeared to be much stronger as the Intramura Bowling League, both men and women, climaxed their 3rd round of the "Round Robin Tournament." A new record for the Intramura Bowling League in the Men's Division was set by Bill Hofman, who bowled a score of 213.

In the Women's Division, Bryan "B" was defeated by the league top team which is composed of players from Bryan Hall and Landis Hall. Nancy Lowe and Peggy Blair paced the victors with 130 and 120 respectively.

Nathetta McWherter and Annette Straub were high scorers for the losers with 135 and 123 respectively. McWherter was also the high bowler for the night in the women's division.

In the other game, South Cawthon defeated North Cawthon very easily, because North Cawthon had only two bowlers present. They need more suport. Jean Stigler and Ann Donnell were high for the winners with 112 and 106. J. Standish bowled 121 for the losers.

In the Men's Division the League leading "Ramblers" defeated a strong team called the "Local 4" in a very close game. The "Local 4" now called the "Loco 4," suffered their second defeat which will probably put them out of the race. Joe and Carmine Regna led the winners with an average of 152 and 144 respectively. Fred Mansfield and Fred Griffin tried to spring an upset victory for their team by averaging 159 and 139 respectively.

Lambda Chi Alpha chalked up victory number two against one defeat, as they trounced a strong team from the 1st. and 2nd Floors of Freshman Hall. Vaughn and Wesley led the team from Lambda Chi Alpha with scores of 167 and 158. Don Cribbs and Robert Sproul were the top men for the losers.

Musical Celebration Honors Birthday Of Famous Composer

By SUZANNE LINEBAUGH
Associate Editor

Ernst von Dohnanyi, world renowned Hungarian composer and pianist who first came to FSU in the fall of 1949 because he found that the state capital and university campus satisfied a desire for contentment amidst the beauties of nature will hear his music resound in many of the cities thoroughout the world Monday, in celebration of his 76th birthday.

A custom practiced before World War II, the presentation of a Dohnanyi program was continued during the war years on July 27 by the British Broadcasting System in London and also by broadcasting systems in Hungary. The Dohnanyi family was reminded of the universal strength of music when in 1944 they heard the program over a forbidden radio in an Hungarian village shortly before their escape from the country

THE MAESTRO'S "Variations on a Nursery Rhyme" which was a portion of the earlier birthday programs expressed his "puckish spirit" undaunted by personal tragedy. In dedication Dohnanyi wrote, "To the joy of those who enjoy humor, and to the annoyance of the others."

Unfortunately, in those cities behind the Iron Curtain the music of Dohnanyi will be sung silently Monday by the composer's many old friends and admirers. His music will not be played publicly in his native Pressburg, the ancient Hungarian coronation city now called Bratslavia as part of Czechoslavakia, nor in Budapest where Dohnanyi came to know the composer Brahms personally.

DOHNANYI was honored in Budapest as director of the Hungarian Royal Music Academy, president-conductor of the Hungarian Philharmonic Orchestra, and later director of the Hungarian State Radio. Dohnanyi received a title given no pianist since Liszt, that of "Oberregierungarat," honorary deputy in Upper House of the Parliament.

As a major feature of the old and new birthday celebrations, Jeanne Byrd Rogers, a former FSU pupil of Dohnanyi, will present an hour of Dohnanyi compositions over Radio Free Europe from Munich.

PROGRAMS WILL be given in New York where the maestro gave many concerts and also Buenos Aires and Tucuman, Argentina, where the Hungarian musician lived prior to settling in the United States.

FSU MASTER OF KEYBOARD

ERNST DOHNANY, who Monday will celebrate his 76th birthday, will be honored with a special broadcast of his music over networks the world over.

Dohnanyi is able to compose under the most difficult circumstances as is evidenced in the fact that his Second Piano Concerto was composed without the availability of a piano while the composer was in Austria. He was even able to compose while bombs fell exploding about him

Dohnanyi's greatest musical satisfaction is derived from teaching which he has been doing for about 50 years. Inheriting his musical ability and enthusiasm for teaching from his father young Dohnanyi was given his first music lesson from his father at the age of six.

ERNST VON Dohnanyi came to the university as professor of music composition and piano because he said he "liked the outstanding faculty," and the modern handsomely equipped Music building. He is like a father to his FSU students and works only with talented advanced piano students. Among his students who are now famous in the world of music are Boris Goldovsky, Miklos Schwalb, Imre Foldess, Ernst Daniel, Edward Kilenyi, George Karolyi, and the late Misha Levitski.

With his summer work of teaching at FSU completed, Dohnanyi is anticipating a full month of composing which he will be assured by Mrs. Dohnanyi who allows nothing to disturb him when he is working at home.

Rain-Maker Leeds Makes Or Breaks Cherry Crop

Willard L. Leeds a scholarly specialist in science education at Florida State University, may have a lot to do with the price of cherry pie next year.

Leeds, whose main interest centers in work in science education and the FSU Demonstration School, is also a meteorologist of national prominence.

And it's as a meteorologist that Leeds has a role affecting what the cost of cherries will be next year.

LEEDS IS A SPECIALIST in bombarding clouds to make them rain or not rain. Right now the multi-million dollar cherry crop in the Yakima Valleys in Washington state depends on the success of Leeds and his associates in Weather Project, Inc.

Rain at the wrong time can ruin a cherry crop, and in Washington cherries are big business.

The cherry crop was ruined in 1950 and 1951. Last year a group of scientists and weather men were called in to stave off the rain. They had marked success, almost a 100 percent harvest.

THIS YEAR the cherry growers associations called back the weather men to try again. So far, Leeds said, they are winning.

As an educator and a qualified meteorologist, Leeds bas been invited to participate during his vacation in the cloud drying project and to appraise the results.

"What we are doing," Leeds said," is seeding clouds to dry them out. By knowing the nature of the dynamic weather picture we are then able to take advantage of the air circulation, moisture content, mixing factors, and geographical conditions tc nip the budding storms before they reach the groves."

THE METEOROLOGISTS said the clouds are dried by means of generators on the ground that vaporize chemicals. Reaction time varies from 15 minutes to four hours depending on conditions.

Record 1953 Registration Announced By Campbell

Largest Number Ever to Attend Enroll This Fall

Registration enrollment figures complete at press time show 5927 students officially enrolled, with more than 150 expected to complete registration shortly, according to an announcement by President Doak S. Campbell.

The complete registration for this time last year totaled only 5826, so the figures would indicate that Florida State University will be larger by more than 150 students.

NO FIGURES were available on a break-down of the total number by classes or on the ratio of men to women. In recent years, there have been just about equal numbers of men and women.

The total figure for registration this year marks the largest initial registration in the history of the university. This figure, of course, does not include those registered for extension and correspondence courses

"REGISTRATION was about as expected," said President Campbell, "and it fills us to capacity." He indicated, however, that this situation will be alleviated in the classrooms and library by the new construction now in progress.

President Campbell also said that indications were that the alphabetical system of registration seemed to be expediting the process, as there were fewer complaints about delays than in former years.

Modern West Hall Occupied; Dorm City's Tallest Building

Of considerable interest to Florida State students and Tallahassee residents as well, is the opening this fall of the new 11-story dormitory for men west of the Student Union Building.

West Hall, as it has been named, is the tallest building in Florida's capital city. The striking new building, emphasizing modernness, convenience, and utility, will house 572 men students.

IT WAS FIRST opened to the general public Saturday, September 12, when President Campbell held an informal open house affording everyone in the area a chance to view the impressive new structure.

Built of steel, concrete and brick, the fire-proof dormitory was completed at an approximate cost of $1,569,000. Bail, Horton and Associates of Ft. Myers were the architects, with Guy C. Fulton, architect to the State Board of Control, in general charge of the project. Beers Construction Company of Atlanta had the building contract.

THE NEW DORM is centrally located in regard to the master long-range plan for the campus.

Ample parking space and recreational facilities are available for the residents of West Hall.

A NOVEL SYSTEM of inter-interlocking double rooms with upper and lower built-in beds saved about 20 per cent in space and some 14 per cent on construction costs.

Supersleuth Discovers Frosh Think Alike About FSU Life

By JAYLEEN ROBERTSON

Three-fifteen, Tuesday afternoon . . . A call came in from the second floor precinct of the Alumni Building . . . Information was wanted . . . Your reporter, Friday, had to get the facts . . . The Case?—Find out what the Freshman class thinks of Florida State.

Three-thirty p.m. . . . Your reporter proceeds cautiously to the local hangout known as the Student Center . . . Several rat-caps were there with humans attached . . . Conclusion?—Just as suspected . . . they were Freshmen. Interrogation followed . . .

"NAME, PLEASE; where do you live; where are you from; and how do you like Florida State? Stick to the facts, please."

"I'm Grady Toller, from Leesburg, and I live in West Hall. Florida State is a grand university. I've never seen such a friendly place before. I have only one request — that they move West Hall a mile closer to the campus."

YOUR REPORTER explained that in a matter of 5 years the campus would be moved a mile closer to West Hall. The University will do anything to make the Freshmen happy.

The next Freshmen interviewed used double talk . . . Just as your reporter suspected . . They were twins.

"MY NAME is Jean Brown, and I'm from Jacksonville. The atmosphere is wonderful here. Everyone is so friendly."

June's opinion was "Ditto!"

Conclusion . . . Twins will be twins.

Five p.m., suppertime . . . Scene —the Mecca . . . Nothing fishy going on, it wasn't Friday.

SEATED AT a booth by the side wall was Pat King, a Jennie Murphree girl from Dade City. When asked for the facts, she replied, "I love FSU, it has such a friendly atmosphere."

This was suspicious . . . twice the word atmosphere had been given . . . Could this be a clue? The possible solution could be that FSU is as friendly as it is wet . . . The case was halfway solved, but your reporter could not stop at this point.

FIVE-THIRTY, p.m. . . . At the alleyway between the Amber House and the Mecca . . . Your reporter encountered new facts.

Danny Rodriquez, from Tampa, went straight to a point not covered before. "I think it's great— the girls especially," was his opinion.

"THE GIRLS are so friendly," said John Adams, a Miami freshman. "You say hello and they say hello back; they don't run like the girls do in Miami."

One more test had to be made to seal the case . . . When questioned, Miss Fleeta West, from Jacksonville, summed it up with the favorite Jerry Lewis expression—"I like it, I like it!" "All of it."

SIX P.M., Case closed . . . Facts established . . . Your reporter, Friday, returns home to type up a report of the general opinion . . .

After drag-n-et out of the Freshman, the final conclusion seems to be that Florida State is wonderful, great, especially noted for its friendly atmosphere, and for making the Freshmen feel at home on campus.

Artists Seeking Class Models; Offer Payment

The Department of Art at the Florida State University is sending out an appeal for models to pose for the various art classes. People of all ages and types are wanted; (one need not be beautiful or exotic).

There is a modest hourly wage involved, and the work can be scattered over an irregular pattern to suit the model.

Mr. Lewandowski, Head of the Department of Art, said, "This is not full-time employment we are offering to any one person, but we would like to build up a list of students, men and women whose school programs do not take up all their time and energy who would be willing to pose for our classes in two or three-hour sessions, now and then. The pay we offer could not be considered adequate and full recompense, but many people will find the work interesting and stimulating."

Those interested should contact the office of the Department of Art: extension 5281.

Rat Court Holds Plenary Sessions Twice Per Week

Members of the Freshman Rat Court are now holding sessions on Tuesday and Thursday in the Senate Room for the purpose of levying penalties on freshmen who fail to observe the rules for wearing rat caps and for failure to display the correct courtesies to Upper Classmen.

Scotty Dickinson and Bill Doxey are co-charimen of the court and will be assisted by Cynthia Sweat, La Vetra Armstrong, Betty McKeithen, Beverly Brown, Charlie Mixon, Dick Bittner, John Rodenberry, Graham Carothers and Randy Church. The group will be divided to enable them to meet on alternate days.

Freshman must speak to all Upperclassmen, and wear their rat caps at all times except after 6 p.m. throughout the week. These rules must be observed until Sophomore-freshman field day. If the freshmen win, they may discard their caps, but if the sophomore win, the frosh must wear them until after homecoming.

Norton Attends Planning Meet

"Two jobs in city planning awaited avery qualified graduate last year," an official of the American Society of Planning Officials told the Southern Planning Congress this month. Jobs in the South were increasing rapidly, but the number of trainees still lags behind. Dr. James A. Norton of the School of Public Administration represented Florida State University at the Southern Planning Congress in Roanoke, where plans were made for improving the training of planners in southern universities.

Both case study reports and internships are offered by Florida State University as a majojr contribution in this field. Dr. Norton's class in City Planning last spring prepared maps and research projects which are being used by the Tallahassee Planning Board.

Galphin Awaits Senators' Vote On Editor Post

The name of Bruce Galphin will be presented to the student Senate next Tuesday for approval as editor of the Flambeau.

Galphin, if approved, will replaced Marcia Morris as editor-in-chief. Morris, who defeated Galphin in the student elections last spring, resigned when she was unable to return to Florida State University. The editor-designate was her managing editor.

The procedure for filling a vacancy on a student publication was just settled last spring, when the student Senate passed an amendment to the University Government constitution. According to this amendment, a majority of the senior staff of the publication may nominate a new editor, and a 2-3 majority of the student Senate must approve the nomination.

UGA President Milton Carothers will place the name formally next Tuesday. The staff election was held under his auspices.

If Galphin is approved, he must resign his Senior Senate post, since the Constitution stipulates that no person may hold two major offices Pending the confirmation, the editor-designate has named Warren Cobb to fill the managing editor's position. Other shifts will be made accordingly.

Examinations Set For Scholarships Offered By State

Examinations to fill General Scholarship vacancies for the 1953-1954 school year will be held Tuesday, October 13, at 8 30 a.m., in the Leon High School library. Miss Nelle Wright will be the examiner.

The examination is competitive and will be to fill vacancies that have occurred in the spring. Applications may be obtained from the School of Education Scholarship office, room 215 Education.

The $400-a-year General Scholarship for the Preparation of Teachers is the only type of State scholarship now available to applicants. The $200-a-year House and Senatorial scholarship are no longer awarded.

Any student eligible to apply for a teaching scholarship may take the test, regardless of whether there is a vacancy in his county. Applicants who have taken the test before and do not wish their score to count, may take the examination again.

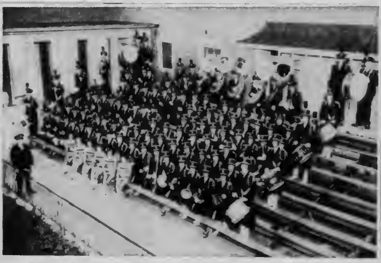
"Only people who are genuinely interested in teaching should apply," said Miss Margaret Blair, office of Vocational Guidance and Placement. "This is definitely a recruitment program. The plan has been set up in order for people to teach in Florida."

Students are urged to make application as soon as possible, according to Miss Blair.

Day Students Plan New Organization

All day students are encouraged to attend an organizational meeting of Delta Sigma Omega today at 5 p.m. in the student lounge in the basement of the Alumni Building. Delta Sigma Omega is an organization for day students; its purpose is to enable them to take a greater part in campus activities.

One of the organization's first projects will be the Day Students' dance to be held October 17. All day students are urged to attend this meeting so that preparations may be made for the dance, and so that they may be present for the elections.



PROMINENT AMONG the "new looks" on campus this year are the newly reorganized Marching Chiefs. Adding to the "sharp" effect created by their snappy drill formations are the new uniforms: black, with garnet and gold trim, white spats and gloves. The band this year is under the direction of Manley R. Whitcomb, nationally-known bandmaster who attained distinction as leader of the Ohio State University Buckeye Band at the Rose Bowl in 1950.

Library Adds Modern Touch, New Hours

Several changes have been made in the University Library rules and facilities for this year.

A checking desk has been set up at the entrance to the Library. Norman Kilpatrick, new head librarian, said the purpose of the checking desk is to assure that records of books checked out are properly made.

The library will offer three types of reserve book loans this year. Overnight reserve will remain on the shelves behind the desk as they were last year, but two-day loan books will be kept on open shelves. Besides the overnight and two-day loans, the Reserve Room will include some books for one-week loan. These will be shelved with two-day loans on the open shelves.

The Reserve Room has been redecorated, and two lounge areas are being provided.

Library hours have been changed so that all departments of the library will be open at the same time. The new hours are 8 a. m. to 10 p. m. Monday through Friday, 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. Saturday, and 2 p. m. to 5 p. m. Sunday.

Tryouts for male cheerleader positions will be held at 8.30 p.m., Wednesday on the circus grounds at the West Campus.

The tryouts are open to all freshmen and upper-classmen, and six male cheerleaders will be selected from those participating. This will be the only tryout and the judges will select the six at that time. Those chosen will be used for the first home game on October 2, when the Seminoles play Louisville.

The judges will be: Charlie Booth, president of Inter-fraternity Council; Milton Carothers, president of University Government Association; Gene Lawler, vice-president of Legislative Affairs, UGA; and Bill Suttlemeyer, president of Lamba Chi fraternity.

"We hope there will be a large turnout as men on the cheerleader team will boost it a great deal," said Carothers.

Howard Outlines Magazine Plans For Coming Year

John Howard, editor of Smoke Signals, has announced his plans for this year's campus magazine. According to Howard, "Humor is the word around campus, and humor it will be. Too often in the past the magazine has stuck to the literary to the boredom of the student body, but this year it is breaking all precedent by presenting its version of a humor college magazine."

This year's staff includes: Margaret Horrox, Managing Editor; Nancy Wilson, Business Manager; Bob Rice, Advertising Manager; David Dreis, Humor Editor; Nelda Fielding, Art Editor; Bob Folsom, Literary Editor; Fred Mansfield, Exchange Editor; Nancene Price, Office Manager; Dave Kennedy, Sports Editor; Jannings Rehwinkle, Photography Editor; Martin Culbreth, Circulation Manager; and the faculty advisor will be Professor Slaughter of the journalism department.

First issue of the magazine will be around October 15. There will be five issues in all.

Dr. Green, Nuclear Physicist, Joins Staff

Dr Alex E. S. Green has been appointed associate professor of physics at Florida State University.

Dr. Green came to FSU from the University of Cincinnati where he was associate professor of physics.

HE RECEIVED a citation from the War Department for the Medal of Freedom for meritorious service while taking part in combat as an operations analyst with the Air Force, 1944-45.

Dr. Green was made a member of the crew of a B-29 photo airplane on one of the longest and most hazardous reconnaissance flights of the war, according to the citation.

"ON THIS mission Green used a ship-length computer he had devised in helping to identify major units of the Japanese fleet lying in the Kure anchorage.

"As a result of this flight the U. S. Navy made a highly successful attack on the enemy fleet," the citation reads.

DR. GREEN said he is more proud of his citation than of all his scientific research and technical writings. He recently finished a book, Nuclear Physics, which will be published by McGraw-Hill.

He received a BS degree at City College of New York, a MS at California Institute of Technology and a PhD at the University of Cincinnati. Among his affiliations are the American Physical Society, Sigma Xi, Phi Beta Kappa, American Association of University Professors and Alpha Phi Omega.

DR. GREEN is married and has three children.

Faculty Recitals Opened Tomorrow By Wright, Beard

The first faculty recital of the year at Florida State University's school of music will be a joint program featuring Mrs. Ramona Cruikshank Beard, organist, and Thomas Wright, pianist. The program will be presented tomorrow night, 8:15 in the Opperman Music Hall and is open to the public without charge.

The program will feature organ solos and two works for piano and orchestra transcribed for piano and organ.

THREE YEARS ago Beard and Wright presented for the first time on the campus a program of piano concertos with the orchestra part transcribed for organ by Mrs. Beard. A year later they were featured together during the Gershwin Commemorative Concert.

Mrs. Beard, associate professor of organ at FSU is also organist for the First Presbyterian Church, dean of the Tallahassee Chapter of the American Guild of Organists, and serves as president of the local chapters of Phi Beta Kapa and Pi Kappa Lambda

ON LEAVE from FSU during the summer, she attended the Organ Institute at Andover, Mass. and played at Wheaton College and Carleton College. She also served as organist-director at the Congregational Church at Attleboro, Mass. Work on her Doctoral dissertation was done at Columbia University.

Mr. Wright, concert pianist, radio and television artist and associate professor of music at FSU returned this month from Nashville, Tenn. He appeared there on several radio and television programs for station WSM and WSM-TV. At the Summer Festival of Arts in Sarasota, Fla., in July he performed twice as soloist with the State Symphony of Florida. His summer concert activities also included piano concerts at several colleges in Georgia and Alabama.

ORGAN SOLOS at the recital will include the Toccata in F Major by Bach, the Prelude and Fugue in G Minor by Dupre, and Introduction and Passacaglia in D Minor by Reger.

Piano works, by Wright, will include the Concerto in A Major by Mozart and the Symphonic Variations by Franck. Wright will present the solo part, and Mrs. Beard will play the orchestral accompaniment on the organ.

Flambeau Outlines Policy For This Year's Editions

It is difficult for a newspaper, particularly a college newspaper, to choose between "popularity" and obscurity in its editorial policy.

In this country, there are far more of the popular variety, and these are generally the more successful financially. They play to sensationalism on their front pages and reduce themselves to trivialities on their editorial pages, saying only what the public wants to hear and rarely campaigning for something new. Following such set patterns is imperative to their bread and butter.

A college newspaper is in a different situation. First of all, it speaks to a much more homogeneous audience. Its readers are supposedly of more than average education or at least are supposedly improving their education. They should be able to grasp ideas just a little better than the general public.

Second, since a college newspaper need not operate with a large profit in mind, and since its circulation is comparatively secure, it is much less involved in the time- and energy-consuming tasks at the business end. It has more opportunity to concentrate on the quality and content of what it is saying.

However, a newspaper strong on ideas runs into dangers which in many ways are as disastrous to its value to society as the commercialism of "successful" papers. Namely, it runs the risk of speaking over the heads of its readers or of writing in so bombastic a style as to weaken and destroy its prestige.

The Flambeau this year, while trying to keep the campus informed and to stimulate interest in what is going on here and elsewhere in the world, will try assiduously to avoid the pitfalls mentioned above.

Good writers and good newspapers always keep in mind that they are writing for people who are not likely to be so well acquainted with the subject matter as themselves. They avoid the overuse of technical terms and prefer clarity to stylism. We hope to keep these as guiding thoughts for the Flambeau.

Even worse than poor style is poor taste in journalism. We hope this year to increase the prestige of the Flambeau by avoiding sophomoric attacks on individuals and conditions. From time to time we will feel free to offer constructive criticisms, but we shall endeavor to check our facts, to write with dignity and restraint.

As the year progresses, we hope to give the campus better and better news coverage. This we will accomplish through cooperation with news writing classes in the School of Journalism and through encouragement of interested students not in journalism classes. We plan to print a certain amount of national and international news as well as local.

Editorially, we will make a special effort to bring competent, interesting writers to our columns. The staff editorials will in general reflect the majority view of the entire senior staff, but we will give wide opportunity for people of varying points of view to present their ideas through the medium of signed columns. We want particularly to broaden the scope, and thus the readership, of the Flambeau by introducing columns by trained students on such things as drama, opera, records and literature.

We know our program is ambitious and will not be achieved overnight, but this is our goal: to publish an interesting, informative and thought-provoking newspaper, written with discretion and keeping the reader in mind.

● VENI, VIDI, VICI

You 1300 new freshman, who are on the threshold of your college careers (which, in turn, must serve as the thresholds for the years that lie beyond graduation) may find it rather difficult to picture yourselves in position personally to apply the above quotation.

The outward confusion at the beginning, the awesome grind ahead, the constant development of apparently insurmountable obstacles will serve to discourage many, eliminate some. This is an inevitable process of the survival of the fittest, the most competent, those who — to quote UGA President Milton Cathothers—have faith in themselves and their God.

Many will come, many will see, and the fortunate will conquer in that they will establish a strong foundation and derive meaning from their efforts here that will enable them to face the years ahead of them without fear or indecision.

This is a period of transition for you, the freshman, a transition from adolescence to the eventual acquisition of maturity and wisdom. Assuredly, the metamorphosis which you will undergo here will not be an effortless process.

You have become a part of a vital, living organization, our university. We welcome you — and warn you of the responsibilities which lie ahead.

Fruit from the tree of knowledge is sometimes bitter and it is never acquired easily. Your withdrawals will necessarily depend on your deposits.

You stand before an open door and what you find beyond will be determined by your individual vision, sweat and enterprise. You will set your own goals. And you will reach them or fail in accordance with your own ambitions and effort.

Remember that you are here not merely to learn an infinity of facts, but to think, and for yourselves rather than as you are told.

This, then, is the meaning of education. This is why you are here.

According to Horace Mann, education alone can conduct us to that enjoyment which is at once best in quality and infinite in quantity. It must bring the practice as nearly as possible to the theory.

As the children now are, so will the sovereigns soon be.

● CHEERERS NEEDED

FSU is ready for male cheerleaders—the football team agrees, the coaches agree and the girl cheerleaders agree. Now the student body needs to agree.

This campus has been changed from a girls school to an up to date co-ed university. With this advancement there have been many changes regarding campus life and the cheerleader question should not lag behind the times.

The addition of male cheerleaders would bring new strength and pep to the yells. This is of course partly due to the fact that male voices are naturally stronger than girls' and it is often hard for the male cheering section to yell with the higher pitched voices of the girls. With a girl and boy cheering section there would be a better response from the student section.

People are talking about the "new look" here at Tallahassee—the new coach, the new band uniforms, new band director—and it is also felt that we need a "new look" with the cheerleaders.

Of course for anything to be good there must be enthusiasm behind it. When September 30 comes around we hope there will be a great number of men students ready to try-out for the cheerleader position. Then we will have a hang-up good group to lead our football team to victory.

● MORRIS MISSED

It would not be fitting to let the first edition of the Flambeau go by without expressing our regrets that the girl who was to have been editor cannot be with us.

Marcia Morris had all the qualities for a good college newspaper editor. She had the intelligence, experience and taste needed to hold down the position, as well as the spunk and determination necessary to keep it operating smoothly. Her friendly, easy manner with diverse groups about the campus would have assured her cooperation from all sides.

When Marcia wrote us that she would not be able to return to FSU this year, it was a blow both to the Flambeau and to the campus. Her place will not readily be filled.

Soft Music Sets New Trend In Library's Materials Center

A new trend in library facilities was noted on the FSU Campus with the opening of the fall semester.

The Materials Center of the Library School has installed a record player and amplifiers, so that soft music creates a more pleasant background for study. Dr. Louis Shores, dean of the Library School and Mrs. Bess Daughtry, librarian of the Materials Center, worked together to obtain the equipment to "start the music."

The idea of playing music in the library was tested out during the last few weeks of the summer session. The musical background was received enthusiastically by the majority of students and faculty using the library. So much interest was created that as a result the FSU Bookstore recently added music also.

Some of the comments of faculty, students, and visitors about the music included:

"I think it's a fine thing to have music in the library, as it's conducive to more relaxed study."

"I enjoy the music here in the Materials Center. It is good to know that someone isn't afraid to try something new. I hope you continue to have it."

"I like it. I only regret you didn't do it sooner."

"I have enjoyed the music; it's relaxing."

Perhaps the shortest and most explicit commentary was "Good! Good! Good!"

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS by Dick Bibler

Letters to the Editor . . .

Pen-Pals?

Dear Editor,

I am an Australian soldier serving here in Korea in the Commonwealth Division in the United Nations.

I would like very much to corresponds with some American friends. Since being here and in Japan I have met many American troops and my buddies and I find we are glad to have your servicemen on our right flank.

While in Tokyo on my 21-day furlough recently, I had some wonderful times with your countrymen and countrywomen. Also I met them in Australia during the 1939-45 war.

Something about myself, am 28 years of age 5 feet, 9 inches, blue eyes and fair hair. My hobbies are golf, tennis, surfing, dancing and table tennis. In music I prefer jazz and blues numbers, Kay Starr is terrific.

Hoping you can help me secure some pen-friends among your students.

Yours respectfully,
Donald F. Holland

Athletic Spirit

Dear Editor,

Another year has rolled around, and among the new faces is the Coach's. These wholesale reshufflings of football mentors, we think, betray a woeful lack of understanding of the true athletic ideal on the part of all concerned. The theory behind them is that a win indicates excellence, a loss, the opposite. There is a mathematical snag in that, which is the fact that half the teams must lose. By what right do we say that exactly fifty per cent of the contenders in this area of endeavor are great, and the rest lousy? Most activities admit a difference between the good and the poor in them. Few have classified these categories so precisely as football, and on such feeble grounds.

Imagine a game which through most of its duration saw one team outclass the other as was expected: until the closing minutes, when a spate of unusual and truly inspired play landed Team B just short of the winning score. Who won that game? Team B, that played the more satisfying football. I don't care how the scoreboard reads. Ridiculous to think that a few minutes can make the difference between heroes and bums.

Let us take the case of Mythical University. M. U. spent a million dollars on football; finally aggregated a combination of talent sufficient to beat everybody in the nation. Just what are the fellows to do now? Go out and get roaring drunk? This would hardly be appropriate, as it is possible to get roaring drunk without first winning a game; without costing M. U. a dime. No, the essence of the game is in the playing, so that here, as in all sports, we must agree with Montaigne that le but n'est rien; la voie, c'est tout.

Van G. Peterson.

Beware Monsters

Dear Editor,

Through my careful research and diligent investigations I have come to the conclusion that our fortress here on the hill is being invaded by those little monsters. While walking up just one block of College Avenue I saw five of these little monsters scurrying about on the sidewalk. Upon reaching the campus gates I saw another one and when I entered Westcott for a drink of water I saw another of these horrible creatures run under the door of the registrar's office. Later I visited a friend on the fourth floor of a certain eight-story dormitory here on campus and I saw another one. If too many of these little monsters get loose on our beautiful campus they will increase and multiply and thus fill our classrooms and dormitories. This must not happen.

In order to avoid embarrassment to both the administration and student body I shall withhold the genus species of those little monsters but I shall leave them with one bit of advice—GET SOME ROACH POWDER.

Always a friend of FSU,
Sheldon Musgrove.

Talent Sought By Music Group

The first rehearsal of the Choral Union was held this week under the direction of Herman Gunter Jr.

The Choral Union is open without tryouts to all students, faculty members and townspeople without charge.

The group presents several concerts during the year, principally larger works from opera and oratorio literature, such as "The Messiah," which is presented during the Christmas season each year.

This organization is the largest singing group on campus.

Gunter announced, that this year the group will sing an original choral work written especially for the Choral Union.

Last season the union gave a very successful performance of Cavalleria Rusticana.

Dear Jeffrey:

Sorry I missed you in Lyon last week . . . the trip up from Cannes was uneventful for once, and we did make it in time for the Countess' cocktail party last night . . . really a rather delightful party, you know, but the poor Countess seems to have lost everything since the war . . . do you know she's gotten down to only six full-time servants . . . we all think it's dreadful . . . we've started taking up a collection for her . . . You should have been at the Marquis' ball in Barritz . . . he really did quite well for once . . . (I understand he's working in some department store in Paris now, trying to pay for the thing) . . . you should have seen Elsa on that horrible donkey . . . most disgusting . . . everybody that's anybody was there . . . they were all asking for you . . . Saw Hemingway in Havana just before the Biarritz affair and got the word on his new novel . . . seems Kit Cornell wants to do it in New York next season as a play . . . with herself in the lead, naturally . . . Hemingway also mentioned what a wonderful time you had deep sea fishing off Morro Castle in Havana a year ago last Christmas . . . though I could have sworn I saw you at Farouk's party in Cairo that Christmas eve . . . but never mind that . . . everybody knows how absent-minded Hemingway can be . . . why last year he swore he saw Gertrude Stein in the main ballroom of the Ile de France talking to F. I've finally managed to acquire the house at Neuilly . . . you know how much trouble it has meant . . . but of course it was worth it . . . you just wouldn't be anybody if you didn't have a house at Neuilly . . . well, so much for all that . . . 'The Monster' Takes Over Tallahassee's Quiet Homes

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Elsewhere in today's issue, a letter written complains that "monsters" are invading Tallahassee. The monsters he refers to are small, oval in shape, brown in color and short of leg. Vulgarly, they are known as roaches, euphemistically as palmetto bugs.

Personally, I am much more worried about another kind of monster invading the city. They are at present small in number, but they are large physically, have a tendency to multiply rapidly, and their effect on the human population is far more damaging than that of the friendly roach.

The monster that terrifies me has long shiny arms and a huge gray face, often covered with snow. When the wonders of science made possible the power boost from Jacksonville's station, one of the last advantages of living in the sticks disappeared, and Tallahassee TV came of age.

I suppose I have a certain amount of pioneer spirit in me and wouldn't object strenuously to venetian blinds, rolling and bas relief effects, if—if there were something worth seeing even occasionally.

As is the case with all new gimmicks, such as 3-D movies, television is going through a long period of exploiting its novelty value. Quality be damned!

In a few noble cases, radio and the movies have risen above the level of the trite. A few "good music stations" have sprung up in the East, playing to the high-fidelity crowd with a solid day of classical music. And there have been notable ventures into excellent drama by movies, as attested recently by From Here to Eternity, Forbidden Games, etc.

But unfortunately, television programs are quite expensive to produce. They require big sponsors, and big sponsors demand big audiences. The larger the audiences, the lesser the excellence of the production, and so the vicious circle goes.

TV today is flooded with programs which fit into a small number of categories. Of course there is soap opera, and there are the panel quiz shows, whereon the experts have 20 questions to guess such things as "Wh kind of dog does this man own Another popular type is "family" drama, in which ty cal, normal families become volved in the most atypical, a normal affairs. The biggest h of all are the mysteries, howe These are either downright gr soms, or they are based on f garnered all the way from t FBI to the local hardware sto

And when television move to "higher things" . . . eve greater misery. Shakespear would have become a veritabl whirling dervish six feet un der if he could have seen recent Brooklynised version o Othello.

All the above criticisms course would be minor if it we possible to escape from the mo ater television, but once it's your house, it takes over. Eit you stumble through a dimly living room with your frien or you become a social outca in the privacy of lighted roo

I wonder whether TV has h Samoa yet?

Chambers' Book Relates Tale Of A God That Failed

By WARREN COBB

One of the best selling books in the country at the present time is Whittaker Chambers' Witness, an 808-page account of his acceptance of a false god, his gradual disillusionment, and his final decision in the critical conflict of the two irreconcilable faiths of our time — Communism and Freedom.

Witness is a book that presents an honest, intelligent explanation of an idealistic young liberal's venture into the realms of the communist dogma in the middle 20's. To Chambers, and to many restless intellectuals of that period, Communism seemed to offer "what nothing else in the dying world had power to offer at the same intensity — faith and a vision, something for which to live and something for which to die."

It can be seen that this embracing of the Marxist doctrine involved much more than the espousal of an economic theory. It involved, actually, a religious experience relating to the conversion of the spirit, a total conversion — religious, moral, intellectual, social, political, economic.

It is significant that millions of people between the years of 1917 and 1939, faced with the same crisis which confronted Chambers, made the same choice he did. Their apostasies were just as complete.

During the late 20's and early 30's, Chambers conscientiously served the Communist Party.

It did not seem to him then that he was engaged in the betrayal of his country for, as a Communist, he adopted their perverted line of reasoning. This he explains in Witness: "They (the Communists) regard any government that is not Communist, including their own, merely as the political machine of a class whose power they have organized expressly to overthrow by all means, including violence. Therefore, ultimately, the problem of espionage never presents itself to them as a problem of conscience, but as a problem of operations."

Chambers explains his growing disillusion with his adopted faith as stemming from the Great Purge of 1936-38, th Communist-Nazi pact of 193 and, finally, the emptiness o soul which led him to the con clusion that "man withou mysticism is a monster."

And so, Whittaker Chambe renounced the faith that ha some 13 years earlier, seemed him the solution to the wor crisis. He came to the same co clusion that such brilliant wr ers as Arthur Koestler, Richa Wright, and Ignazio Silo among others, were later to co firm — namely, that they h worshipped a god that had fail them.

Witness goes on to give a d tailed account of the Hiss tr and Chambers' own gradual r adjustment despite the conde nation of friend and foe alik

It is a penetrating book th probes the very soul of a m and the world in which he h been a witness to a great mor and historic conflict.

It is a book to be apprais not by the past deviations of author, but by the intrins truth of its content.

CAMPUS CARAVAN

Caravan Includes Psychologists, Returnees, Freshmen

By BEVERLY LACAYO

Welcome home everybody! And Freshmen, you'll soon know what I mean. It seems that Florida State can't get rid of its students once they know the place. I've seen more people that received their diplomas in June and August back for more. Then there are those that everyone thought had received their diplomas . . . well that's life.

We all seem to have had a grand summer, which is just what we needed after last year. A psychologist told me this summer that going to college is the hardest type of work that most people ever have to do in their life. Don't laugh; he said it in all seriousness; but my suspicion is that he must have had eight o'clock classes all four years.

A brief look at this summer's mail shows that last year's Senior class is scattered all over the globe. Mary Ruth Sommers is still in Germany and may start school this fall. Margret Krasemann is marrying the boy next door in October (in Homberg, Germany). The Army finally got Bill Dunn, so I hear. Kappy Skotgstad is teaching speech correction up in Atlanta. Bobbie Thomas and Babs Henry are both married and living in Miami. Bob Ducker is working up in Chicago so he can finance his ministerial studies next year. If any one hears from others, please let me know.

Before we go any further let me announce that this column will always be written in words of three syllables or less. I have found this to be much easier on the reader and less embarrassing for the writer. Okay, so I'm a liar. But still you may take refuge in my trivialities when the other columns get too too.

For those of you who registered at F. S. U. for the first time this fall, it would be hard to appreciate the wonderful work that has been done in taking the snags and bottle necks out of registration. When I was a freshman the average length of getting completely registered was three hours and students stripped of all their college-acquired dignity could be seen in all states of frustration, from gritting their teeth through tears and tearing of schedule books all the way to actual spasms and fits as they poured down the back stairs of the gym. This time I have heard many say they made it in less than half an hour.

If I speak mostly to Freshmen now, it is because we "oldsters" have been more than impressed by this year's Freshman class. Their good spirit in wearing of rat caps, their social "savoir faire" at the President's reception, and the terrific show of talent at Stunt Night all indicate an up and coming group of young men and women.

If you are as bright as thes things indicate, you will soon dis cover the many facets of Un versity life other than "scho spirit" and socializing. Amon these are the opportunities f studying new, varied and fasc nating subjects; the chance f self-advancement and self-disc pline under student governmen the rich reward of a new an maturing outlook on religio life; the many outlets for sel expression anywhere from dra ing cartoons for the Flambeau t Flying High with the Circus o doodling with the square roots o minus numbers.

Which ever path you follo during your stay here, if yo can fill it with the spirit of di covery, if you can fully explo the adventures which you me along it, then you will beg every year with the exhilaratin feeling that, as enjoyable as las year may have been—the be is yet to come.

ETCETERA ETCHINGS

The Glamor Grind Often Lays Hollywood's Greats "Away

By DAVID DREIS

There's quite a big campaign going on in movieland today. Besides putting all the bad films into the third dimension, the industry is moving to, what it calls, "greater heights." They want to "bring back glamour." Ugh!

The producers of those wonderful celluloids which constantly pop up into the nation's theaters want to restore the feeling that youth have for Santa Claus, that the haughty have for royalty and that the poor have for money. "The old days," they comment, "had people walking miles to see their idol. Maybe it was Rudolph Valentino or Wallace Reid or John Gilbert, but at any rate, they went out of their way to see their favorite stars in old fashioned two-d and black and white. The movies didn't talk or throw knives at you." I guess they figure "glamour" would be cheaper.

Actually, the big-wigs will be causing more misery for themselves than joy, for each star will be put under a greater pressure and may end up in the same heap as the top stars of old.

John Gilbert had a huge following in silents, but when the talkies came around, because of a screeching high-pitched voice which irritated the microphones and the audience, he was out in the cold. Fatty Arbuckle made a mint for himself and for comedy-producer Mack Sennett but when he was involved in a hotel murder, although found innocent, he awoke to the fact that his fans couldn't think of him anymore as a comedian. He too found doors closed to him. Wallace Reid had to always appear lively and bright to his public and his public was everywhere. He submitted to drugs and drugs killed him. Frances X. Bushman had to keep his wife and six offsprings a secret because the public thought of him as single. When he sought a divorce to marry his leading lady Beverly Bain, the news broke and soon F. X. B couldn't pay his rent.

Valentino, of course, was the greatest, but he too died before much downfall could come to him. Because of public committments, his designer wife divorced him and would not remarry him. Valentino was quoted as saying, "she is the only woman I have ever loved."

Nowadays, time has change We treat the movie persona ties with respect, but not wi idolization. If one dies, we fe regret not great sorrow. If on marries . . . and they do marry we feel joy not admiration. It a cleaner, better, more adu feeling for both sides. Pressur on the star isn't as strong a before and if Bob Mitchu should start in with drugs an John Agar with drink, we kee their personal life apart fro professional just as we do wi the grocer or family physician— even in old fashioned two-d.

Frosh Vote Nov. 3

The first primary for the Freshman class elections will be held on the first Tuesday in November, according to Joe Harris, member of the elections committee.

Further details will be published in subsequent issues of the Flambeau.

There were 127,400 more persons injured in U. S. motor vehicle accidents last year than in 1951.

'Houdini' Cuts Peep Hole Into Almost Forgotten Past

By AL PIERCE

Rarely do the members of this generation get the op- unity to look back into the past for a glimpse of how parents and grandparents amused themselves. We books and stories to read of happenings of yester- r, we have our elders to tell us of things that have ssed in their lives. But these are all too often super- al and inadequate, giving us a shallow picture of years ne by.

ur great present-day movie ducers realize the value of rical data and the presenta- of true facts about life in past. With the goal of ing to the movie-going a true view of the charm, enture and fashions of by- days the men behind the ion pictures today do con- t research in the archives of past to bring to the screen most accurate of stories. No ne of the dark past seems to reach in order to make movies as convincingly real ey possibly can be. No fea- of the private life of a pub- gure is so personal that to- screen writers can't tact- work it into an interesting ghly enjoyable part of a . That's why we have such es as "HOUDINI" playing at ahassee's own State Theater y and tomorrow.

The world knew Harry Houdini as the greatest escape artist of all time; but not so generally known is the dramatic love story of Harry and Bess Houdini, which Paramount Pictures has put into technicolor for the screen. Hollywood's colorful young married couple, Tony Curtis and Janet Leigh have been teamed to play the leads in a story packed with excitement, suspense and, of course, the seemingly unbelievable feats of the great Houdini.

Tracing the rise to fame of the man who many have called "Fantastic," much advance preparation and research have made the film an accurate account of the public and private triumphs and pitfalls in the life of the famous magician. Although the spotlight is on the suspense generated as Houdini illustrates his extraordinary agility in escaping from strait jackets, "burglar-proof safes," Scotland Yard's jail cells and a various assortment of manacles, water tanks and locked trunks, there is engendered in Houdini's life story a tender tale of love, and who could portray a pair of lovers like Houdini and his wife so well as one of filmdom's most glamorous married couples — Tony Curtis and Janet Leigh?

It's a clear case of love at first sight when Bess meets Harry Houdini at a side-show carnival. She follows him through his early career as they make their way through more carnivals, sidewalk magic shows, honkey-tonk theaters and the like until he finally gets his "Big Break" by escaping from a strait jacket at a national convention. From this point, there's no stopping Houdini as he climbs to fame as America's, and later, Europe's greatest magician and escape artist of all times.

Hollywood has made "HOUDINI" a movie that has something for everybody. Advance reports acclaim the script as "A dandy mixture of thrills, chills and romance that vividly tells the story of one of showbusiness' most fabulous immortals."

That's "HOUDINI" at the State Theater today and tomorrow.

Neel's Interests Wide In Filling Dual Role

Dr. Sam Neel, FSU chaplain, is an ordained Methodist minister, but his interests and his work cross all denominational lines.

As the chaplain of a university which is larger than many towns, Dr. Neel in many ways lives the life of a minister but splices it with his other role as teacher.

A typical day might find Neel —besides teaching his regular university classes — making a hospital or home visitation to sick faculty members or students, or speaking before a PTA group.

In the chaplain's report for 1952-53 contacts by Dr. Neel with more than 25,000 persons is indicated. The contacts range from teaching a Sunday school class to being a leader in the Florida Teen-Age Workshop.

Dr. Neel also serves as the co-ordinator of religious activities at FSU and in that capacity is active in everything from the World Student Service Fund D[illegible]elligent Faith Week, or Je[illegible] Education Week, to the St[illegible]nt Christian Association.

A member of the FSU faculty since 1948, Dr. Neel's teaching was interrupted by the war in Korea where he served as a front line chaplain. His unit, the 31st Infantry Regiment, won distinction in battles for possession of Triangle Hill.

In special services last Jannary he was presented the Bronze Star Medal for meritorious service in Korea.

In World War II as a combat chaplain with the 106th Infantry Division in the European Theater, Dr. Neel was taken prisoner by the Germans during the Battle of the Bulge. He was protestant chaplain for 3,300 fellow prisoners until liberated.

The energetic chaplain has cut out two more projects for this school . . . regular visitation in the university hospital and regular religious programs over the campus radio station.

Watson Returns From Arts Study In California

William Watson of FSU's arts education department returned to Tallahassee last week from a summer's study at Pond Farm, Calif.

Under the direction of Marguerite Wildenhain, internationally-noted ceramic artist, he studied the problems of the potter in the contemporary world, the subject of first consideration.

Watson was also engaged in the study of glaze chemistry with Hira Nirodi, formerly a graduate of the Indian University of Mysore and currently a member of the staff of Mills College, Oakland, Calif.

Miss Wildenhain's extensive experience in European ceramic industry as well as her association as teacher during the early years of the Bauhaus School of Design in Germany have provided her with a unique potential in the field of ceramics in America, her adopted home, Watson said. Watson said he feels that the period of study at Pond Farm was given a significance of international scope through Nirodi's background of Hindu culture and scholarship.

Marching Chiefs Band Performs In Miami

Florida State University's 100-piece Marching Chiefs band will be in Miami tonight to play at an FSU pep rally and the FSU vs. University of Miami football game, where they will put on a half hour half-time show

The rally — open to everyone who wishes to come — will be held in the Bayfront Park Bandshell beginning at 4 p.m. For the band, it will be their first concert of the season. The Marching Chiefs will split an hour show at the rally with FSU national champion gym team

JUST before the game, at 7 p.m., a parade will form at the bandshell which will wind through town and out Fifth Street to the stadium.

The FSU band will be sporting for the half-time show, new director Manley Whitcomb, former band director at Ohio State University, new uniforms, new formations, arrangements and personnel.

HIGHLIGHTS of the show in the Orange Bowl will include a flashing drill as the band plays "Music, Music, Music." Then the "Chiefs" will swing into the outline of a concert grand piano to the strains of the "St. Louis Blues March." The band will then begin the classic strains of Rachmoninoff's "Prelude in C Sharp Minor" which will break into swing as Ed Franklin and Richard Puckett, FSU freshmen from Miami, present a twirling-dance routine

"Tea for Two" will provide the musical background for the Marching Maidens who will be poured out of a teapot formation into a teacup formation.

LATER, the band will turn to play football pep songs and "Hail to the Spirit of Miami U" will bring the band into an "M" formation which will melt into a "FSU" formation as the "Florida State University Fight Song" is played.

Novelty is taken care of as Leroy Anderson's famed "Syncopated Clock" is played with antics provided by the band. The half-time show will end as the band forms a red-white and blue shield and march off the field playing "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Classrooms, Offices Moved In Big Campus Facelifting

orida State University's long- ge permanent building pro- m will show definite results fall in the moving of a mber of academic divisions, ing facilities and extra cur- ar activities from west cam- the main campus.

Business Manager R K Shaw the ROTC units, both army air force will be trans- red to the main campus this . Temporarily, they will use of the maintenance build- s and adjacent grounds in nity of the student cen- for classrooms, offices and Administra- offices of the men's physical ation department will re- n on West Campus for the me being however, and the st Campus gymnasium will be used for such sports as etball.

d football practice fields on st Campus will be used this by the FSU Demonstration Shaw pointed out.

THE UNIVERSITY'S circus, ng High, has already been ed onto the main campus, on West Call Street across from the new 11-story men's dormitory. Circus Director Jack Haskin is delighted with the move because his troupe no longer has complicated transportation problems. Members can work in more, shorter practices whenever class schedules permit.

Completion of FSU's skyscraper dormitory, meaning the housing of 572 more men students on the main campus than ever before, will solve some of Robert Brewer's more pressing problems. As director of men's residences, Brewer's work was facilitated last year when the new eight-story dormitory was designated for men.

UNDER THE MEN'S housing management the university subdivision, Mabry Heights, adjacent to the 11-story dormitory, will be given over this fall to full-time married students with dependents. Heretofore, it has housed faculty and staff members as well as students. Officials estimate the new designation for Mabry Heights will make possible the moving of more than 100 students and their families from West Campus, leaving a similar number of married students still on that campus.

The old officers' club on West Campus, which has been used in recent years by FSU as a student union, will no longer be operated fulltime by a director with student assistants. But Business Manager Shaw said the building will be operated by the university for special uses.

SHAW SAID the State Home Demonstration Extension offices will remain on West Campus this coming year. He added that probably well-established school or department laboratories and classrooms will be continued on West Campus, but qualified the statement by insisting "the full new status of West Campus depends upon registration."

The evacuation of old Dale Mabry Field by FSU is making impressive progress this year. How fast the whole evacuation takes place depends on legislative building appropriations.

DR. DOAK S. CAMPBELL, president of FSU, is happy about the progress made for the new year in concentrating the university on one main campus because the centralization means a great saving of student and faculty time and taxpayer money.

But travel between the two campuses has been curtailed, and its elimination seems within sight. Both students and teachers can function better with permanent facilities than with the makeshifts necessary in the old converted barracks.

ALTHOUGH Dr. Campbell appreciated the use of Dale Mabry Air Base as an emergency solution to meet FSU's tripled enrollment after Wor War II, he is now eager to get the university united on one permanent campus. Here 15 expanded divisions can utilize fully the complete resources of the university.

Homecoming Date Established For Hatter Game in November

The date for Florida State University's 1953 Homecoming has been established as November 20-21, according to an announcement by President Doak S. Campbell.

The celebration will begin Friday afternoon with the dismissal of classes at noon. Alumni registration, daytime judging of decorations of residence halls, sorority and fraternity houses, and a parade in downtown Tallahassee and on the FSU campus will high-light the afternoon activities.

FRIDAY EVENING the traditional Garnet-Gold Key banquet will be held. The equally traditional Pow-Wow and pep rally in Doak S. Campbell stadium will be held after the banquet. Night judging of decorations also will take place.

Saturday will get under way with an alumni breakfast in the home of the university president, to be followed by the annual business meeting and election of officers.

THE HOMECOMING barbecue will be held at noon at the university's Camp Flastacowo on Lake Bradford.

Kick-off time for the game between the Seminole gridders and their traditional rivals, the Stetson Hatters from DeLand, has been set for 2:30 p.m. that day.

FOLLOWING THE game there will be a number of open houses and coffees for special groups. Festivities will wind up Saturday night with the annual Homecoming Dance.

Business Staff Meets

There will be a meeting of the business staff of the Flambeau September 28, 4:00 p.m., in the Flambeau office. All interested people are invited to attend.

Three of the night contests are home games (Louisville, Abilene Christian, VMI) while four of the games are on the road (Miami, Louisiana Tech, Mississippi Southern, Tampa).

Twenty-five per cent of all drivers involved in fatal auto accidents in the U. S. last year were under 25 years old.

FSU Counseling Program Among Best in Nation

Florida State University now provides a well rounded counseling program designed to help students help themselves in the development of their total personalities.

It is recognized as one of the best counseling services in the nation. The program is centered in the Division of Student Welfare or in offices closely related to it

THE UNIVERSITY feels strongly the obligation sincerely and accurately to reflect to prospective students the educational opportunities offered. The institution accepts the responsibility, when a student has decided to attend the university, of helping him efficiently and accurately to make the required preliminary arrangements for attending the institution. Clear and explicit directions are given to applicants in the preparation of forms. Through its process of admissions, the university strives to give students the feeling that they will not be lost in the bigness of the institution and that there is interest in serving their needs in every way possible.

During the week of orientation, information concerning each student is accumulated through conferences and testing. This information, along with information received from the high school of the student, is placed in the hands of a faculty adviser who confers with the student prior to the time of registration. This year 135 faculty members have counseled incoming new students in helping them make wise decisions for registration. During the Orientation Week, students are also given an opportunity to learn the resources of the university so that they may be used to the greatest advantage

IN ADDITION to the counseling given during Orientation Week, faculty members serving as educational counselors work with the student in exploring his major field and helping the student who is undecided to determine a major by exploring the various academic offerings. When the student has decided upon a major, the various departments continue to counsel with him as needed during the years of his attendance at the university.

Faculty members serving as residence counselors, trained in student personnel, work with students to give wise counseling with regard to such problems as boy-girl relationships, family problems, financial problems, and problems of social adjustment to help the students make the necessary decisions for successful and wholesome living. Social experiences are provided students to help them develop an appreciation of beauty and good taste. Opportunities are afforded them to enjoy good music, good literature, outstanding art, and the other finer things of life.

THE UNIVERSITY provides health services for all full-time students. The University Hospital gives all types of diagnoses and treatment ranging from the common cold to major surgery. Emotional problems are cared for through the Psychological Clinic or by the university psychiatrist.

A broad program of intramural athletics, physical and social recreational opportunities are given for students to provide them with desirable relaxation and recreation.

BELIEVING THAT pleasant surroundings do much to help the student succeed in his college program, the university at present is able to house in spacious and attractive quarters 2,100 women students, 1,500 men, and 150 apartments are available for men students with families. Cafeteria service is given students at the Student Service Center and at the University Dining Hall.

Many deserving and capable students would not be able to attend college were it not for scholarship aid or part-time work. Nearly one-third of the students of the university engage in part-time work during the course of the academic year.

GROUP AND individual vocational guidance is provided for college students who are uncertain as to vocational choice. Through testing and advisement, many students have been helped to find the vocation for which they are best fitted. At the time of graduation placement services are given to get qualified students and prospective employers together

Students experiencing difficulty in speech, reading, spelling, hearing, or other difficulties are provided with remedial services so that they may measure up to their full potentialities.

ADVISEMENT is provided for veterans, foreign students, married students, and students who are handicapped. The university also gives advisement concerning selective service matters to young men students eligible for the draft.

The University Chaplain, the University Religious Council, and the various denominational student centers provide religious, moral, and spiritual guidance for the students of the University.

MANY VALUABLE experiences of citizenship are provided through participation in student organizations, student government, and student activities. Students are encouraged to participate in group activities which are of particular significance and interest to them.

An inclusive testing program provides valid and dependable information to administrators, counselors, and instructors which is invaluable in counseling with students

A CUMULATIVE record is kept for each student registering in the university. Here is compiled all essential information and data which will be helpful in the counseling program of the university.

The results of this broad program are that students quickly and efficiently are helped to find their interests and to measure up to their full potentialities. During the current year, the indications are that the services provided by the Division of Student Welfare have already been and will continue to be thousands of students.

Seminoles, Miami in Orange Bowl Battle

Sands Slants

By TOMMY SANDS
Flambeau Sports Editor

The man looked tired. Yet there was a sparkle in his s, a confidence, an enthusiasm. It was all there. The of course, was Tom Nugent, who was in the process sending his Seminole footballers through their final es before loading them on the plane and the trip to Orange Bowl.

ad been a long grind, starting back in mid-August when the import from VMI assembled around 100 candidates, the of whom were getting their first taste of the college side

e had to wade right in, starting from scratch, trying to mold een bunch of boys into what resembled a football team. He month

Then came the first prediction, if you could call it that. "We'll be young and interesting," he said. There were times during that month when things went from bad to worse. "We don't have a passer. Our ends are weak. We need that breakaway runner." Still there was the confidence and the optimism.

All Football Diet

had his players sleeping, eating, thinking and probably dreaming football. Some days there were three field workouts, with two-a-day blackboard sessions sandwiched in. Even night meetings. In passing the stadium late at night, the office lights were still on, the coaches' cars were there.

Nugent

Then came the announcement he had found his passer. He was a freshman, weighed 165, stood 5-10, was only 18 and ironically enough, was snatched from under the Miami noses. He wanted to play, had the desire and said so Asked if he thought he could have made the Hurricanes' squad, he quietly replied, "I could have played first string there, too." Corso was his name.

Standing on the field glancing moment to moment to either side where two squads were going through their patterns against red-shirted defensive elevens, simply but emphatically. "We want to win." We're far a polished ball club, but we have the raw ingredients — desire, and spirit."

There'll Be Rockin' Tonight

"You'll see these kids bustle," he continued, "we may look ragged but we're going to rock 'em. I've never gone into a game however, with so many things yet to do. "You know, we haven't even had time to practice our kickoff and point after touchdown plays. We may be able to work them in after we get in Miami and practice.

know, my VMI squad opened with Miami last season, too. were better prepared at this stage than we are, but they fell apart after the first quarter. We've found our best We think they block and tackle well, but after that we know" could tell the man was high on Corso. "You know," he said, amazing how the squad has acepted him. Right out of high only a freshman. He's the key to our attack and they

Was he afraid of the Miami aerial game? Yep. "They have three or four fine passers, all on an equal par. Then he pointed across the field to a well-muscled young man dressed in shorts and fingering a football. "He was (referring to Mike Norman) fourth string quarterback at Miami. Yet he's better than any passer we have." "I hope it rains," he added with a smile.

Some 'Southern' Hospitality

things come first, you just can't get around "little" Southern's shocking upheaval of mighty Alabama, pre-season polls to finish fifth in the nation and possibly Southeastern Conference.

"They're already acclaiming it the stinger of the year. "Looks like the nation's latest football power," is one of the comments. Was the win a fluke? Just one of those one-up and one-down-nights? Not hardly. One fellow, an expert on such happenings and who should know, said it wasn't He didn't lay the blame on one-platoon football. "We were beaten by a very fine football team." 'Bama Coach Red Drew, said. He should know.

An Intellectual Conversation

Gus Fan Well, if it ain't ole Doc Football. How goes it, Doc? seen you since FSU lost to Tampa last year.

Football: You said it friend. I went underground after

Fan: Oh, well, Doc, another season, another reason. You ow the saying goes. Guess you know the Seminoles high- ed it down to Miami yesterday. The smart boys uptown claim smell a small upset in the making. How so?

Football: Relax son, the're playing Miami, remember?

Fan: Sure Doc, but look what happened to Alabama last when they played little Mississippi Southern.

Doc Football. True friend, but in the first place Mississippi South- n't small change. Their enrollment is larger than both that Mississippi State and Old Miss. And besides, son, ever hear of ple of Southern gentlemen named McElroy and Pepper?

Doc Football: Sure, but the smart boys forget that four or five of the Nugent's starters are going to be freshmen and rest are sophomores. Besides, they have an untested frosh the passing while Miami can call on one of three vets. and son that means a lot.

Gus Fan Yeah, but Doc th' smart boys—

Doc Football: Know what you mean, son. The Nuge has his boys than a farmer at the county fair. Good shape, too. Be interesting ball game, I have to admit.

Gus Fan Good ole Doc. How about a prediction.

Doc Football: Silly boy!

Brighter Year Is Seen For FSU

By CLYDE WARD

After looking through a copy of year's football yearbook, feel a bit more optimistic about the chances of the sluggin' Seminoles this year.

The experts see in their crystal ball that Florida State will have a 600 and possibly a .700 This wouldn't do Coach lifetime coaching average any good, which stands now 778

So far, Nugent has had three perfect seasons, all with prep school teams. His best year at VMI consisted of a .700 mark in upsets over Georgia Tech and William and Mary.

The keydets, by the way, are scheduled to fall under FSU's power, according to the yearbook. We're also supposed to trounce Louisiana Tech, Furman, Stetson and Tampa. The Louisville game rated a toss-up. In the Miami, Mississippi Southern, and North Carolina State games, the Tribe goes in with an underdog rating.

Could be this guy from Virginia will prove them right. Take a look at the player's wing of Senior hall some night after 10:30. Dark as a deserted mansion and so quiet you could hear a mouse in velvet slippers walking on tiptoes.

This is an improvement you can spot before you even see them on the playing field. It has long been advocated by men in the know that late hours and good football doesn't go together.

If the players are scattered all over campus, each player would need a trainer to see that he was in his own room in bed at a decent hour.

Coach Nugent is hoping that this emphasis on conditioning will partially offset his lack of experienced reserves. With the new substitution ruling, no team can afford to have the players getting winded early in the game.

The only Tampan on Florida State University's fotball squad is Jimmy Lee Taylor, a letterman end.

PETE'S THE MAN

Campbell Pasture Ranks With Best

If Florida State University's football team is as well "conditioned" as the turf it will play to here this fall, Seminole grid stock can't go any direction but up.

Lambeth

That's the way it appears to head Coach Tom Nugent, who says "this is the finest looking football field I've ever seen." And, in his coaching career, Nugent has touched his shoes to gridirons all over the nation.

Oddly, the man responsible for the "condition" of the Seminoles' home playpen has never seen but one football field—the two-acre lot that Shines below FSU's Doak S. Campbell Stadium.

He is Groundskeeper James M. ("Pete") Lambeth, a 39-year-old ex-gardener who takes as much pride in his gridiron as Nugent does in his Seminoles. And that's plenty.

"I never have seen another football field, except in the newsreels," Lambeth smiles, "so I don't know how it compares with those of other schools. I do know that ours is in perfect shape for football."

Pete has worked countless hours in making the FSU field as smooth as a billiard table. He manicures it with a whirlwind mower twice a week and douses the lawn with water whenever it "looks dry." The field is fertilized three times a year.

BEAUTIFUL LAYOUT

The entire plant layout at Campbell Stadium has become a valuable FSU asset. There are rows of beautiful shrubbery decked out in front of each side of the stadium.

Pete has been testing the lawn and laying out shrubbery for three years, and he likes his job better every day. "I've always liked to grow stuff," he says.

Pete doesn't know it but he's made the old adage "the grass is always greener on the other side" a forgotten saying at Florida State University.

Five of Florida State University's football players hail from Miami. They are ends Hal Powell and Tom Price, Guard Charles Jacobs, Center Bob Crenshaw and Quarterback Lee Corso.

Bob Crenshaw, Florida State University's sophomore center who lettered as a 165-pound freshman, gained 125 pounds during the summer. The Miami product now weights 190.

Holder, Signorelli Lead Gymnasts

By DICK GUTTING

Replacing the famous Regna twins this year as co-captains of FSU's varsity gymnastcis team will be Don Holder, member of the 1952 United States Olympic team and Pat Signorelli.

Holder and Signorelli, who have been friends and teammates since their high school days, are hoping to lead the Seminole team through many victories despite the loss of such men as Joe and Carmine Regna, Bob Bollinger and Dick Gutting

Holder started his gymnastics career at Dickinson High School in Jersey City, N. J. After graduation in 1946 he entered competition for the Swiss Gymnastic Society of Jersey City. In 1950, Don won the Metropolitan Novice All-Around Championship in New York. He came back in 1951 to win the Junior and Senior All-Around Championship.

THEN A SEMINOLE

It was after this that Don entered FSU and, while still a freshman, was selected as a member of the 1952 Olympic team, a feat which has been accomplished by only one other college freshman.

Other championship titles Don has won include the Southern Intercollegiate All-Around Championship of 1953 and the National AAU Indian Club Championship.

Co-Captain Pat Signorelli also received his early training at Dickinson High School and in the Swiss Society in Jersey City. After graduation in 1947, Pat entered the Air Force for three years. After his discharge in 1950 Pat's interest in FSU was aroused by Bill Koslow, another former high school friend and currently a member of the FSU gym team.

RIGHT BEHIND HOLDER

In 1952, while competing under the Garnet and Gold, Pat won the Southern Intercollegiate parallel bar championship, and the following year placed second to Holder for the All-Around Championship.

In addition to the regular gym meets the team will be called on to perform at such functions as the Miami football game tonight and at future Gymkana shows.

FSU to Be Host To VB Tourney

Athletic Director Howard G. Danford has announced that Florida State University will be host to the first annual Florida High School volleyball tournament here Oct. 24.

Approved by the Florida High School Activities Association, United States Volleyball Association rules will govern the double-elimination affair.

Entries should be mailed to varsity coach Bill Odeneal not later than Wednesday, Oct. 21.

Four Florida State University football candidates played prep football in Jacksonville. They are end Sam Griffis, tackle George Boyer and backs John Griner and Jimmy Messinese.

Hurricanes Favored In Season Opener

35,000 Fans Expected to Watch Nugent-Led FSU Go After Upset

MIAMI—Coach Tom Nugent rolls back the covers on his question-mark Florida State University football team tonight when they battle the strong University of Miami Hurricanes in the Orange Bowl.

Upwards of 35,000 fans are expected to file into the spacious Orange Bowl to watch the Nugent-coached Seminoles and Andy Gustafson's gridders do battle for the second time in the history of the two schools.

Miami University officials say interest in the intra-state affair is running high and are hoping for a possible opening game attendance record for the tilt. Miami took the opener of the series in 1951 by a 35-13 score.

NEW ERA

For Florida State it will mark a new era of football, with Nugent at the helm for the first time. With only 14 lettermen in the fold, Nugent is relying heavily on freshmen to carry the load.

Nugent who didn't announce his starting lineup until Wednesday, emphasized the role the first-year men would play.

"With four freshmen in our starting lineup and more freshmen on the second team, anybody's guess is as good as mine on what we will do". Nugent said

"I have confidence in these young men. I know that they'll constitute good football players someday. They have confidence, enthusiasm, and great morale which will have to offset, in part, their lack of seasoning."

The four freshmen ticketed for possible starting roles are quarterback Lee Corso of Miami; either Ray Staab of Charleston (W. Va.) or Al Pacifico of Altoona (Pa.) at right guard; Bud Leonard of Ocala at right end, and Joe Holt of Graham (N. C.) at fullback

OTHER SIDE

On the other side of the fence, Miami's Gufstafson had this to say:

"We're just about ready to go. All we need is a little polishing and then we'll be ready for FSU. What we need now is game experience."

Gustafson is making no secret of it that he plans to use some of his highly publicized freshmen backfield giants against Florida State. None of them will start, but he reported today that he will use several of them once the game gets under way.

Among the more promising of the rookies are Don Bosseler and Jack Lowe, two bruising fullbacks; Ed Oliver, John Shields, Dan Dorshimer and Robert Getty.

Dorshimer has terrific speed and is a crashing runner, while Getty looks like a real broken field running prospect. He's one boy the Seminoles will have a tough time stopping if he manages to grab a punt.

MIAMI BACKFIELD

The Miami starting backfield will have all veterans, Gus said. John Melear will open at quarterback, with Art Knust and Whitey Rouviere at halfbacks and Gordon Malloy at full.

Another veteran halfback, Bill Smith, who ran wild in the Marine practice game, also is expected to see action once the clash opens.

Here's the FSU traveling squad:

Right guards—Al Pacifico, Ray Staab, Charley Jacobs

Right tackles—George Boyer, Dwight Osha, Marrell Hathcock, Burt Shroyer.

Right ends — Buddy Bryant, Bud Leonard, Lou Manning, Fred Twomey.

Quarterbacks—Lee Corso, Harvey Massey, Leonard Swantic, W. L. Harper.

Fullbacks—Eddie Johnson, Joe Holt, Ronnie King, Robert Grenn.

Wallace Forecasts .500 Ball for FSU

The Seminoles will have a much-improved football team this fall if Francis Wallace's 14th football preview in the current edition of Collier's magazine is an indicator.

Wallace predicts FSU will have a .500 season, winning five games and losing five, in their first campaign under Head Coach Tom Nugent.

"Tom Nugent is aiming to establish another major gridiron grove at Florida State," Wallace concluded.

Last year's traffic toll of deaths and injuries was the heaviest in history.

Pigskin Preview

By BOB TAYLOR

Outside of bullfighting or maybe stock car racing, predicting the outcome of college football games is perhaps the roughest job in the sport world. Especially with the one-platoon system now in effect.

Take Mississippi Southern's conquest of Alabama last week, that's enough to drive any crystal-baller to the wagon for keeps. Yet, it's a challenge that always puts extra interest into Saturday's games, so here goes. How do your selections compare with these . . .

Friday night's headliner, of course, pits FSU against Miami. We'd sure love to see the Seminoles' cop it, but Miami is out to redeem itself from last year's poor record, and they have too much for our Tribe. Two years ago, it was 35-13, this year it could be about the same . . . 34-14.

Kansas invades UCLA in the only other important Friday game. We give it to the Bruins, with all-America candidate Paul Cameron the big difference.

On Saturday, it's . . . Army over Furman in what should be just a Kaydet warmup . . . Auburn over Stetson, but watch those Hatters at our Homecoming . . . Clemson over Boston College in an upset . . .

Duke to best Wake Forest in a toughie . . . California's Golden Bears' to come back with a win over Oregon State . . . VMI over George Washington, even without Nugent . . . Oregon on top of Stanford; they Miss Mathias . . . Northwestern over Iowa State . . .

Georgia Tech in front of Florida, with Hardeman outshining Army-bound Casares . . . Virginia over Virginia Tech . . . Mississippi over Kentucky, with Jackie Parker carrying the load . . . Princeton over Lafayette in a slaughter . . .

Notre Dame, with Lattner playing 60 minutes, to take Oklahoma in the game of the week . . . Vanderbilt over Penn in another tossup . . . Ohio State on top of Indiana; watch those Buckeyes this year . . . Illinois over Nebraska.

Alabama over LSU; cronic slow starters, Corky Tharp and Bobby Luna will break loose in this close one . . . Neyland-less Tennessee to roll over Mississippi State . . . Maryland to have a picnic with Washington and Lee . . .

Georgia over Tulane in a real SEC battle; the Bulldog's Zeke Bratkowski is a dark horse for all-America honors, watch him . . . Michigan over Washington in a toss-up . . . Mississippi Southern over the Parris Island Marines, but it'll be tough . . .

Louisville, FSU's next, over Camp Attleby by an eyelash . . . Navy over William and Mary . . . Minnesota over Southern Cal in the upset of the week . . . Texas ahead of Villanova . . . Washington State over determined College of the Pacific . . .

Wisconsin over Penn State . . . North Carolina over NC State . . . Purdue over Missouri in a tight scrap . . . and Yale over Connecticut . . .

And that's it for now fans, so until it's stick-your-neck-out time again next week, so long.

Gymnasts, 'Chiefs' Stage Big Miami Rally Today

A giant pep rally in Miami's Bayfront Park Bandshell will be staged by Florida State University's national championship gym team and newly organized 150-piece band, the "Marching Chiefs," today at 4 before the University of Miami vs. FSU football game in the Orange Bowl.

Miss Anne Marie Gregory, Miami, president of the Dade County FSU Alumni Club, said the rally is open to everyone who wishes to come. She said a special invitation is extended to students of Dade County schools, their faculty and principals, and friends and alumni of FSU.

The Florida State Gym team which has won four national titles in the last three years, will stage a half-hour demonstration of their championship form during the rally. The band will play a half-hour concert.

Under the direction of Coach Hartley Price, the team has piled up a record that includes the national AAU gymnastic crown won this May in Chicago, the NAAU title in 1951 and NCAA honors in 1951 and 1952. In addition two of the team members went to the Olympics in Helsinki last summer.

On hand at the Bayfront Band Shell will be Dick Gutting, trampoline champion, Jack Sharp, flying rings champion; and Jack Miles, former rings titlist, along with the other gymnasts.

With a new director, Manley Whitcomb former band director at Ohio State University, new uniforms, new formations, arrangements and personnel, the FSU 150-piece band will stage its first concert of the season at the rally.

When the Seminole band appears, Miami will be well represented in the group that fronts the band. Susan I. Ball, is head majorette; Dick Mayo, drum major, and Ed Franklin and Richard Puckett, twirlers.

At 7 p.m. a parade will form at the bandshell and will go west on Southeast First Street to the railroad, over to Flagler and down Flagler to the Bay, up the Boulevard to Fifth Street and out Fifth Street to the stadium.

Headquarters for FSU alumni will be the Shorecrest Hotel, Miami Beach. A swim-dance is planned at the hotel Saturday beginning at 2 p.m., to honor the football team, band and gym team.

Building Boom Promises Frosh Modern Campus

By LONA COCHRAN

While exploring the grounds of their new university, this year's freshmen may be wondering just what all of the seemingly general upheaval of earth, cement, and timber is all about. And well they should be concerned, for they will probably be among the first to profit from the additions and general face-liftings which are taking place all over campus this year.

That yawning cavity behind Westcott will soon be transformed into a modern auditorium to replace its 43-year-old predecessor, which was torn down last spring. The half-finished structure across from the Student Center will be the new geology building which is estimated at $325,000.

THE PRESENT student body is now taking advantage of 17 buildings which have all been added to the campus in the short space of six years since 1947. They include Florida Hall, West Hall, eight small dorms being used for fraternity houses, Senior Hall, Cawthon Hall, the Student Center, a maintenance shop, a supply storage shed, the fully air-conditioned Opperman Music Hall, and Doak S. Campbell stadium, which has a capacity of 15,000.

West Hall which has already been nicknamed "The Hotel" by many envious freshmen women, is open this year for the first time and has quickly gained a reputation for being a campus showplace. It was built at a cost of $1,569,000 and has the distinction of being the tallest building in Tallahassee. A few of the 'hotel-like' features which it boasts of are a top floor solorium with a study hall, sundeck, and library and a snack bar and indoor fountain on the ground floor.

IN THE EXPANSION plans for the immediate future are four other buildings which were authorized by the 1953 state legislature. They include a general classroom building, a home economics building, a men's physical education building, and a new library. Also included in the 50-year plan for the more distant future are a new demonstration school which was approved by the 1951 legislature, four buildings to house the departments of biological science, art, business and commerce and social work, a hospital' and an addition to the Alumni building.

A scale model of the entire master plan is now on display outside of the University bank on the second floor of Westcott.

Beauty Contest Open To Southern Co-eds

Some lucky Florida State co-ed may get the chance to tour glamorous far-away places in her own, individually styled cotton wardrobe if she can fill the bill set up for the 1954 Maid of Cotton Contest.

SPONSORED by the National Cotton Council, the Memphis Cotton association and similar branches in New York and New Orleans, the annual contest opened September 9. The winner, who has to have been born in a cotton-producing state, will appear in New York on major radio and television networks. From there, she will be flown as a good will emissary of the United States Cotton industry to 40 leading cities of the U. S., Canada, Europe and South and Central America.

Among other awards, the lucky 'gal gets a complete cotton wardrobe and a new car, presented by the Memphis district's automobile dealers.

TO BE ELIGIBLE, the girl must be between 19 and 25 years old, un-married and at least five feet-five inches tall. Her home state, of course, should be one that grows cotton.

Of the past Maids of Cotton, 13 have been college co-eds or had just been graduated at the time of their selection. Last year's Maid was a sophomore from the University of Alabama and was seen or heard in movies, on radio and TV at one time or another in many parts of the world.

APPLICATION blanks can be gotten from the National Cotton Council, P. O. Box 18, Memphis 1, Tennessee and must be returned not later than December 1 of this year. Each blank must be accompanied by two photographs of the girl applying: one, a head and shoulder portrait and the other a full-length picture.

From the thousands of applications received each year, 20 finalists are selected and brought to Memphis for personal interviews, public appearances and social events. Final judging is early in January and will decide the Maid of Cotton and two alternates on the basis of personality, intelligence, poise, background and appearance.

Journalism Gets 3-D Look With Added Radio, TV

Journalism at Florida State University will be three-dimensional in 1953-1954.

It will stress instruction with expansion of teaching in advertising, radio and television.

IT WILL emphasize research in its program of scientific study of mass communications in its new Bureau of Media Research and Service.

It will play up service to the professional press as well as the high school publications of Florida.

TELEVISION news and radio news will be stressed as a part of the university-wide plan to provide effective instruction in radio and television. The department of speech, school of music and other units also offer significant instruction in this field.

Daniel Wozniak, until recently television news editor of WOI-TV of Iowa State College, will teach introduction to radio and television as well as radio news reporting.

PROBABLY no southeastern university can offer as effective instruction in advertising as FSU. This is true because of the excellent staff working with Dr. Royal H. Ray, head of the department of advertising.

Richard Joel, until recently director of the Emory University Division of Journalism, will teach advertising copy and radio and television advertising as well as basic courses. He is regional vice-president of Alpha Delta Sigma.

ADVERTISING design courses will be taught again by Rudolf Jegart of the art department. J. Richard Stevens, formerly of the State University of Iowa, will teach courses in advertising as well as marketing.

Dr. Ray, who is president of the Tallahassee Advertising and Sales Club, will continue to be a flying professor. Last year he taught advertising courses in Clearwater and Jacksonville. He is scheduled to teach in Orlando this fall.

INSTRUCTION in public relations and magazine training is being developed by Dr. W. R. Slaughter, former newspaperman who taught at Northwestern 17 years. His programs will be similar to those he originated in the Middle West at the Medill School of Journalism.

Newspaper study is being improved through provision for improved facilities for teaching press photography. Dr. Zell Mabee has developed one of the best photo-journalism laboratories in the Southeast.

INCREASED emphasis will be given to the world press now that Dr. Richard H. Eide has returned from Europe. He served as public affairs officer for U. S. Department of State Bergen, Norway, and later m a first-hand study of Europe papers.

Programs will be available home economics journalism, torial librarianship, profess writing and teaching. Non-m jors may enroll in many journ ism courses other than those cifically developed for the eral education program.

RESEARCH projects are planned by Dr. Sidney Ko head of the new Bureau of M dia Research and Service. Seve studies in the past have arou national as well as regional terest. These included studies news coverage of the presid tial election and the state leg lature.

Service to press, radio, and evision also will be emphasi by this bureau. The FSU press bureau will continue serve student publication sta as it has in the past.

Marine Officers To Discuss Program Here Next Month

The Marine Corps Officer Procurement Team will land on the campus October 5 and 6th at the Trophy Room in the Student Center. Applicants are assured the situation will be "well in hand" if they can qualify for one of the programs leading to a commission in the U. S. Marine Corps Reserve.

Captain F. R. Hittinger, Jr., USMC, Officer Procurement Officer will be on hand to discuss these programs and to interview applicants.

Captain Hittinger emphasized that there is no interference with regular academic studies or campus activities. Summer training for the Platoon Leaders Class consists of two six week classes at Quantico, Virginia, with the rank and pay of a corporal, $149, for the first year, and Sergeant, $163, for the second year. PLC's are draft deferred so that they may graduate from college and receive their commission.

Young ladies may also qualify for a commission and are invited to inquire about a similar program, the Women Officers Tra ing Class.

Marine Corps Officer Procu ment Team welcomes your quiries. Remember it costs no ing to ask. See the Marines October 5th and 6th in Trophy Room in the Stude Service Center.

Florida State's Seminoles play seven night and three games this football season. first five games are under lights.

Chairman Explains Student Traffic Rules Copy of Senate Traffic Statutes Reprinted

By PINKY NOWLIN

The Student Traffic Safety urt of Florida State Univer- is moving into full opera- n this week, and motorists are ised to become familiar with parking and traffic regula- ns.

There is evidence from early mations of student automo- s that Florida State will have largest registration of ve- es on the campus of the ool's history.

THEREFORE, the Court plans put more emphasis on safety to encourage a decrease in tions on the part of the stu- nts.

The parking and traffic prob- ns on the campus can be d only by those drivers and estrians in control of the cir- mstances which led to the vio- ns. The Court can define problem and present it for on, but only the students olve the problem.

FROM A PARKING survey de at the close of tha spring semester, the Student Traffic Court has pin-pointed certain areas for students to caution:

1. Students should become familiar with the "first four spaces to the right and to the left, north and south, of the East Gate in front of Westcott Building which are reserved for 15-minute parking for students and University employees.

2. The stop sign in front of the East Dining Hall has been labeled as a caution area by the Student Court.

Judging from past violations, these two areas accounted for 50 per cent of all violations on the campus.

IN ADDITION to avoiding violations in the caution areas, students are reminded to register their cars with Don Farquharson at his office in Room 104 Westcott Building. Students who do not display a University registration sticker on their windshield are violating the Student Traffic Court regulations.

Frank Stoutamire, Tallahassee Chief of Police, informed the Student Court that student motorists have been parking their cars "on the grass in the center of the street, over the curb, in 'No Parking' spaces" along Park Avenue in front of the Sorority houses and in the areas of the Mecca and the Amber House.

THIS IS against City and University regulations, and the Student Court will cooperate fully with the city police in enforcing these regulations.

In an effort to decrease the number of violations, each misdemeanor will be placed in the student's personal files and will become part of the University records.

THE TRAFFIC-SAFETY Court has the authority to penalize any member of the University Government Association for violation of the FSU vehicular regulations by monetary fines, recommendation for disciplinary action to the administration, or reference to municipal or county court.

Traffic laws have come about with the development of the automobile. The majority of traffic rules and regulations are designed to facilitate the safe operation of motor vehicles. For this reason each vehicle operator should make it his business to obey traffic laws to the best of his ability.

COPIES OF the following regulations will be mailed to students operating automobiles on the campus.

Guests of the University and business people visiting FSU in autos will park in the inner circle in front of the Westcott Building to be reserved for such parking.

All University faculty and staff members parking motor vehicles on the Campus will be required to register such motor vehicles with Don Farquharson at his office in Room 104, Westcott Building.

All University students parking motor vehicles on tha Campus will be required to register such motor vehicles at a designated place at registration time. Later those with motor vehicles will be required to register their vehicles with Don Farquharson at his office in Room 104, Westcott Building.

Upon registration of motor vehicles, the students, faculty and staff members will be issued car stickers to be placed on the windshield.

No parking will be permitted near fire hydrants or street entrances to sidewalks and buildings or along painted yellow curbs.

"Loading Zones" must be observed between tha hours of 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. except on Sundays or University designated holidays.

Vehicles parked on University streets are to be parked parallel to the curb, within 18 inches of the curb, and within the white lines, unless angle parking is provided and outlined in white lines.

The first 4 spaces to the right and to the left (north and south) of the East Gate in front of the Westcott Building will be reserved for 15-minute parking for students and University employees.

The maximum speed limit on all Campus streets is 20 miles per hour.

All "stop" and "slow" signs are to be observed.

Reckless and careless driving is forbidden on the Campus.

Movement of traffic along the Campus streets is not to be obstructed by stopping in the streets for any other purpose than parking.

Parking on the lawn or driving on Campus where University streets are not provided, is forbidden.

Pedestrians may be held responsible for failure to observe Traffic Safety Regulations on the Campus.

Carothers' Speech Outlines Qualities Important To Success For Students

(Editor's note: the Flambeau felt Milton Carothers' address to the incoming freshmen to be of such value that it is reprinting the speech almost in its entirety.)

By MILTON CAROTHERS

There is the familiar story in the Old Testament of Esau and Jacob, in which Esau comes home worn out from the hunt and begs his brother Jacob to give him some food. Jacob bargains with Esau for his birthright, which belonged to the oldest boy, and Esau chooses to exchange his birthright for a bowl of pottage.

As you come to college you are faced, as one is in every new situation, with many choices that you have to make. You are in much the same situation as Esau found himself. The choices you make may not seem as important at the moment, but in the long run some of the choices you must make may be as significant as Esau's trading of his birthright. Unlike Esau, we should carefully consider the consequences of our choices and make sure that we are making a fair trade.

YOUR COLLEGE career is a vital time in your life. It is an exciting time, four years of development in all areas of life. In your choices here at college you will exchange some old ideas for new ones. You will choose new friends and new activities. New areas of learning and thought will be opened up to you. All this is a part of you making your own decisions and choices. Many of you will be on your own for the first time. Therefore, the responsibility for your choices rests upon you alone. In as far as possible, look at your choices in the light of future years, not just as in a passing moment.

I would like to suggest several things for which nothing is a good exchange. In any choice in which you swap these things for something else you will come out on the short end of the deal, as Esau did many years ago.

THE FIRST thing which can not be traded without one getting cheated is Faith — faith in God and a corresponding faith in man and one's self. Professor Peabody of Harvard University had this to say about faith: "Did you ever fairly face the conception of a logically completed unbelief, a world stripped of its ideals, with no region of spiritual hopes or of worship, a world absolutely without God, a permanently faithless world? What is the difficulty here? The difficulty is that these aspects of life, though they are often hard to maintain, are harder still to abandon."

Faith in your fellow men conveys also the thought that most of the people you meet here at FSU, teachers as well as classmates, will be worth knowing and having as friends.

SOME STUDENTS become discouraged and feel they can not do college work, but with faith in yourself you realize that even though it's sometimes hard you can pass with hard work, conscientious effort and faith in your ability.

There is also that faith that your parents have in you. This together with faith in God and in yourself should give you a strong driving force. Few things have ever been accomplished by men of little faith.

THERE IS another thing for which nothing is a good exchange. That is honor and integrity. In a poll taken in recent years, and I'm not thinking of the Kinsey Report, the leading businessmen in the country were asked what they most wanted in a college graduate who would be a prospective employee. The answer was not good grades, although they are very important; the answer was not a long list of extra-curricular activities, although they too are often important; but the answer was a man with a sterling character. One who has a high sense of honor and integrity. Thomas Macaulay has said "The measure of a man's character is what he would do if he knew he would never be found out. "When faith is lost, when honor dies, the man is dead."

The recent cheating episode at West Point and the scandals in our government point to the need of men of sterling character in college life and in high places.

THIS university has an honor system. You will hear a lot about it in the coming weeks. This honor system is an important part of our university, and a part that demands your cooperation and support. It isn't perfect and we have our difficulties in living up to it. But if one freshman class would go through their four years here closely obeying the honor code we would never have any more major trouble concerning the honor system. I hope that this freshman class will be that class.

The motto of one of our military schools, I think it is West Point, is "Death Before Dishonor." If each of us would individually accept such a motto as our own, Florida State University would have the best honor system in the country.

ANOTHER thing which I hope none of you will trade is a sense of humor. All of us need that faculty to laugh, at ourselves as well as at others. It is said that "Imagination was given man to console him for what he is not, and a sense of humor was provided to console him for what he is."

Dr. Lingle, the president emeritus of Davidson College, had this to say about freshmen during my orientation week. He said that college freshmen were a lot like Columbus. "When they left home they didn't know where they were going; when they got there, they didn't know where they were, and when they got back home, they didn't know where they'd been; and all on borrowed money." . . . The reason the average college girl would rather have beauty than brains is that men who can see greatly outnumber those who can think.

WHAT I really mean by humor is not just the ability to laugh at jokes such as these, but the ability to take the tension out of life by seeing the funny as well as the serious side and also the ability to laugh at one's self.

Tha capacity for making and keeping friends is another quality for which there is no substitute. One of the most important aspects of college life, and one which brings some of the greatest rewards, is the cultivation of the art of making friends. We should never become so engrossed in our studies and in our extracurricular activities that we fail to practice the art of friendship. One is never poor who has friends. There are many, many opportunities here to make friends. It is highly probable that at no other time in your whole life will you have a better opportunity to be a friend and to make friends.

ENTHISIASM is another thing that we should never trade or lose. If you start off your first week of university life with enthusiasm plus hard work you probably will have no trouble making the grade.

Your student government needs your enthusiasm and your participation. You are now a part of FSU's student government. I remember as a freshman I had the idea that only the upperclassmen could participate in student government, but I soon learned that I was wrong. I want to encourage all of you to begin thinking and planning the activities in which you'll engage in your spare time. You need to plan ahead your whole school program to try to determine how much time you'll have to give to activities besides your studies. It's important not to become over-loaded.

I hope that many of you will decide to participate in student government.

FRESHMEN elections will be in the near future. I hope that many of you will decide to run for a class office. This is an excellent opportunity to become acquainted with your classmates. I also hope that many of the boys as well as you girls will try out for cheerleader.

As you participete in the whole university program, do it with enthusiasm; from studies to pep rallys and the football games. The entire school often takes its cue from the freshman class, and its enthusiasm is nearly always contagious. We are counting on you freshmen to enter into the spirit of university life with enthusiasm.

IN THE choices you must make choose wisely, after careful thought and consideration. Make sure that your new ideas are better than those for which you have exchanged them. Don't be like Esau and trade your birthright for a bowl of pottage. Remember that there is no substitute for enthusiasm, for friendship, for a sense of humor, for a high sense of honor and integrity, and for an abiding faith in God and in yourself.

New Air Force ROTC Program Now In Effect

Colonel Paul W. Campbell, fessor of Air Science and s at Florida State Univer- has announced that more 110,000 young men were ected to enroll in the com- y re-oriented Air Force TC program this year in col- and universities in the ed States, Hawaii, and Rico.

onel Campbell expected an lment at this university of 500 students in the ROCT gram.

THE AIR FORCE'S recent re- . from a build-up for fiscal 1954 to a reduced force for military, brought on by low- budget and manpower au- ations, has a definite ef- on the Air Force ROTC pro- m Campbell said.

le also said that reduction will mean a drastic slash nior and senior class enroll- in the AFROTC program ead of producing as many as 50 officers in a single year, was once planned, or 18,000 planned since 1952, the ROTC is to level off with an 8,000 a year output officers will be earmarked lvine

COLONEL CAMPBELL stated t the number of college fresh- and sophomores to be en- ed will not change. He em- sized that there is no restric- n or control over the Air rce basic course, freshman ophomore years, and that any hman interested in Air Force TC is encouraged to enroll.

He reiterated, however, that tion requirements for the anced course would be much her and more competitive. nne of the primary criteria be that nearly all students king must desire and physi- qualify for flight train- A small number of AFROTC dents, who possess the tech- and scientific background ded by USAF, will be ad- ted into the advanced course out the flight training stipu- n.

COLLEGE FRESHMEN enroll- in the AFROCT program at will be introduced to an ely new and interesting cur- m. Objectives of the new e of study are to produce educated, basic Air Force nd lieutenant.

During the four year course, phasis will be placed on the aracteristics and qualities desired in the Air Force leaders. A great many of these qualities are exactly the same as those required in any good citizen of the United States. The AFROTC program is similar in many ways to civilian educational programs in that its objectives have the same ideal, which is developing better citizens, whether in or out of uniform.

THE NEW COURSE of study for AFROTC cadets is divided into the basic course covering the first two years, and the advanced course covering the junior year, summer camp, and senior year.

Briefly, the basic course consists of introductory material on aviation, the Air Force itself, and the world situation. Subjects are Introduction to AFROTC, the Aviation, Fundamentals of Global Geography, International Tensions and Security Structures such as NATO and the United Nations, Elements of Aerial Warfare, and Career Opportunities in the Air Force.

THE COLLEGE junior and senior delve more deeply into the organizational machinery of the Air Force. To better prepare him to assume his responsibilities as an officer, the junior takes such courses as The Commander and His Staff, Problem Solving Techniques, Human Communication, Correspondence in the Air Force, Military Law, Courts and Boards, and Applied Air Science.

In his senior year, the cadet studies the Military Aspects of World Political Geography, the Use of Military Aviation, and the Art of War. During his entire four years of AFROTC, the student receives a heavy concentration of leadership training. In leadership training, the cadet learns by doing. He is given responsibility with the cadet corps. The cadet learns how to wear the uniform, military bearing and courtesy, commands and command voice, and drill. His duties include the actual planning and supervision of cadet corps training, administrative, and supply activities.

THERE ARE FEW requirements to enroll in the basic course of AFROTC at Florida State University. Principally, they are that any young man may enroll providing he is a citizen of the United States and meets certain physical requirements. Once a student is enrolled in the basic course, he may be eligible for a deferment from induction under present Selective Service laws so long as he remains in good academic standing and indicates the potential abilities desired in an Air Force officer. In addition, he must sign an agreement that if he is commissioned, he will serve a minimum of two years active duty if called, and six years in the Air Force Reserve.

Entrance into the advanced course is highly selective and is based on many factors. Among these are a relatively high academic standing, outstanding leadership characteristics, an interest in the Air Force, and a desire to undergo flight training if physically qualified. If selected, the cadet then signs a contract with the Government agreeing to complete the AFROTC course, accept a commission and serve his reserve obligation.

AS A BASIC cadet, students are issued an Air Force uniform, but receive no monetary payment. Once selected for the advanced program, the cadet is furnished a complete Air Force officer's uniform and is paid at the rate of $27 per month. During the summer camp period at an Air Force Base, tha student receives traveling expense to and from camp and is paid approximately $75 per month for the four-week period.

Methodists Plan FSU Men's Club For Activities

A men's club is being organized here on campus. It is underwritten by the Wesley Foundation, but is not a denominational group, nor is it a fraternity.

It will participate in intramural sports. Anyone who likes to play football, softball or any other sport, is invited to play for the foundation.

Wesley is planning many activities and social functions — beach parties, suppers, etc. Anyone not wishing to play in intramurals, but who would still be interested in the club, is invited.

There is to be an informal smoker to acquaint you with the club Tuesday, September 29, at the Methodist Student House. There will be refreshments and entertainment, but no rushing. If you are interested, come to the smoker or contact Dale Johnson, 215 Florida Hall, or go to the Methodist Student House.

Nearly 750,000 persons were injured in weekend traffic accidents last year.

Open Letter to the Students

Richard Jackson
Chief Justice, Honor Court

Let me take this opportunity to welcome you back to school after what I hope has been a wonderful summer for all of you.

If we are going to keep any semblance of the honor system at Florida State, then we must take more and more responsibility upon ourselves. I have been told by a source high in the Administration that unless we, as students, do a better job the University is going to take it away from us. I think that all of the students had rather students administer the system than the administration.

I am asking you as upperclassmen as well as freshmen to help yourselves to keep the honor system by living up to the Honor Pledge: "I pledge myself to uphold tha highest standards of honesty and I refuse to tolerate dishonesty on the part of another." Please let us take this pledge seriously.

In times like these, this country as well as our beloved state, needs men and women of the highest loyalty and honor to one's self, school, state and country.

Let us prove to the people of Florida that we are worthy of the millions of dollars spent each year on our education — we most surely are not worthy if we live withour honor. The future belongs to us. Someday we will be the leaders of this state; let us train ourselves well in the kind of honesty we want out of our leaders of today!

I close with what my father told me when I left for college three years ago. "Most of us come into this world with nothing but our name, and what is a good name without honor. When you've lost that — you've lost everything."

Respectfully,
Richard H. Jackson
Chief Justice, University Honor Court.

Pinky Nowlin
Chairman, Traffic Court

We welcome all motorists to Florida State University and hope you will find our campus a safe and friendly place to drive your automobile.

Traffic safety does not stop with the students who drive automobiles, but is a function of everyone on the campus. The students, professors, instructors, personnel of the University, visitors, local business firms who supply our campus with the necessary goods, Policemen, bus drivers and all others contribute to traffic safety. To make our traffic safety code a success this year, everyone must pitch in.

Little things go to make accidents; a careless hand signal, a car parked in a location that obstructs traffic can and have caused accidents. Small things also prevent accidents; a few seconds to stop for intersecting streets; even a short wait for the amber light to change to green.

The goal of our traffic safety program should be to make everyone conscious of the big and little things that lead to accidents and how to prevent them.

Florida State could become one of the safest universities of the year by making strong efforts to think and practice traffic safety regulations during the next nine months.

Klyne "Pinky" Nowlin
Chairman of the Traffic Court.

(Editor's note: A fuller explanation of the FSU traffic regulations appears elsewhere in this issue.

FSU CIRCUS IN SEVENTH YEAR

'Flying High' Is Dubbed 'Greatest Collegiate' Today

The sky's the limit for Flying High, Florida State University's all-student circus, this seventh or lucky year!

It has proved itself, after six years at Tallahassee, as the "biggest collegiate show on earth."

Featured in newspapers at home and abroad, in national magazines, in motion picture shorts, and on radio and on television, it has earned a reputation which has to be maintained.

CIRCUS DIRECTOR Jack Haskin has about 150 old troupers back, ready for circus. The new practice field is on Call Street across from the new men's dormitory. The recent move from the practice field on west campus means no more waiting around for busses and more practice hours between classes.

A couple of dozen circus-minded Tallahassee freshmen have been working out the past summer under Circus Trouper Betty Ann Munroe. The Tallahasseeans have an edge on other freshmen in this respect.

COACH HASKIN is full of ideas after the first vacation he can remember ever having. Until last June he had stuck with the FSU circus month-in and month-out since launching it. But the past summer he and Mrs. Haskin took an 8,000-mile motor loop around the country to give him a physical education professor's idea of a holiday. He studied recreation departments and set-ups from Texas to the state of Washington.

He said he is pleased with summer circus work done in his absence under supervision of his assistant, Jim DeCosmo. A new flying team has emerged from the hot weather workouts. It is made up of all sophomores, including Dick Slade, Bob Page, and Flyers Ann Callahan, Charlotte McCants and Richard Sanderson.

SUMMER WORK results indicate Hill will be featured this year riding a bicycle on a tight wire. Misses Gessler and Kellogg will be seen on the Cloud Swing, and Misses Callahan, Hutto and Gessler will have a go on the big aerial Anchor.

Flying High has a way of getting and keeping a hold on a family. There are the Fortune brothers — Johnnie, Jerry and now Jack, a freshman. The oldest, Johnnie, was in the FSU troupe for five years, returning last year as a graduate student. The middle brother is going strong in circus as a junior. And Haskin is counting heavily on Jack.

THEN THERE are the Yates sisters, Anne and June, junior and sophomore this year, both active in circus. They say younger members of their family are on the way, bound for FSU and circus.

Haskin has always been on the directing side of circus, a teacher of physical education primarily interested in developing good mental and physical co-ordination in his students. He seems to have influenced a number of circus students into going on to teach some phase of physical education.

THERE IS little tendency for former FSU circus students to go into professional circus or acrobatic work. John Mabee of Tallahassee is the outstanding exception. He is now working as catcher with a professional flying-casting act on a New England tour, booking fairs and shows. A partial exception is Johnnie Fortune who is directing as well as participating in an aquatic show at Ponce de Leon Springs.

Haskin came in with co-education at FSU. He was brought to the campus in the fall of 1947 as assistant professor of physical education for men with the head of the department, Dr. Howard Danford.

IT WAS ONLY a matter of weeks before the circus idea was planted and took hold in Tallahassee.

Since the arrival of Haskin and Dr. Danford, circus has grown from the first troupe of 48 to five times that number, from only a campus show that first year, performing in borrowed and make-shift costumes, to a home and traveling show made up of amateurs still, but with professional ability and equipment.

The first FSU circus in the spring of 1948 was held in the men's gym on West Campus, and was mostly low aerial work. Next year circus was moved to Tennessee Street with horses and fancy driving added, and the show was also presented at the Leon County Fair. Horses were only used in the circus two years because they tore up the grounds and were superfluous as an attraction featuring so many FSU co-eds.

GAOSDEN COUNTY Tobacco Festival was the first out-of-town engagement for Flying High, then came fairs and civic functions in rapid succession at St. Petersburg, Orlando, Pensacola, West Palm Beach, Fort Lauderdale, finally climaxed by an appearance in 1951 at the Jacksonville Gator Bowl as a polio benefit, and in 1952 at the Orange Bowl in Miami as a cancer benefit.

Special acts are in demand for special occasions, like at the FSU-Georgia Tech football game last year in Atlanta Flying High was featured between halves.

CIRCUS students have to maintain a C average to make road trips. In just about a month they'll be ready to hit the road. On major trips they travel in the university football Seminole bus. Coach Haskin always travels with his troupe, sits near the front where he can see everything going on.

Another part of the "new look" at FSU was in the Sophomore Council. For the first time in the university's history, men joined the ranks of the blue and white clad girls. More than 100 students joined in the program this year, serving as guides and carrying baggage. Shown above in front of Reynolds hall are: Front row—Beth Suggs, Randy Church, Curtis Jackson and Sylvia Parrish. Second row—Virginia Neill, Barbara Ann Vickers, Shirley Boulware. Back row—Ellen Campbell, Mary Louise Dee.

Florida State University's 60 varsity football players represent 14 states. Twenty-seven are natives of Florida.

Freshmen give Stunt Night Program To Two Jam-Packed Audiences

Two jam-packed audiences filled Opperman Music Hall last Friday night as the class of 1957 took part in the annual variety show on the campus, Freshman Stunt Night.

Although there was an over-abundance of vocalists on the bill, careful planning in the appearance of each act gave the show balance.

JO JONES, a pert little freshman, opened the first performance with a melodious rendition of "Blue Moon." Set in a background of blue lighting, the song was well received.

Blanche Alligood gave a sultry rendition of "Stormy Weather," and Grady Toler, the only male vocalist on tap, sang "One Alone." Jo Ann Taylor added variety to her vocalizing. She sang "Almost Always" in both dance and calypso tempo, giving the tune an added flavor.

SHIRLEY Paonessa had the music professors and students taking note as she gave out with "Love is Where You Find It."

Marie Harrison, dressed in a long white evening gown, was well received with her rendition of "With a Song in My Heart."

Transfer student JoAnn Hosback was on hand with her accordian and her voice in a snap arrangement of "That Old Black Magic." She returned in the next show to round out a quartet with Marcieta Napier, Gene Cokeroft, and Danny Whipple.

ALONG the novelty lines, a comedy vocal solo by Claire Oliver added refreshment to the talent night, as did Sid Silver and Andy King's guitar-bango act.

"The Bumble Boogie" was given out by Beth Farris.

PAUL WOLFE tap danced for the occasion.

ELLEN Drigger, in a dress which was in style around the turn of the century, gave her rendition of a humorous dramatic reading, "When Pa Was Courtin' Ma."

The master of ceremonies, Dale Stranahan, announced the acts.

OTHER important contributors to Freshman Stunt Night were Lee Hildman, stage manager; Rosemary Hollander and Ann Printup, publicity; Walter Agel and George Bennett, the stage crew; and Sophomore Councilor Nancy Vaughn, who made certain that "the show went on."

'Flying High' Hits Movies Once Again

State Theater Shows Grantland Rice Short For One Full Week

Students will have a first chance of seeing Florida State University's circus, Flying High in a new 15-minute Grantland Rice sports review called "Collegiate Circus Champs" produced by Paramount—it opens Wednesday, Sept. 30, for a week's run at the State Theater along with Gregory Peck in Roman Holiday.

Shooting for this film was done last May during the climaxing circus home show at Doak Campbell Stadium. Rod Warren and Rus Ervin were the Grantland Rice cameramen on the assignment.

Many students have seen the all-student, self-supporting FSU circus one or more times, but all will want to see this new film and realize how fast and far Flying High is soaring to world renown.

Paramount did one of the first short-shorts on the circus, back five years ago when the show had just begun its flight to fame. Also Fox Movietone has done a short-short and a longer short on the FSU feature. It has been nationally televised.

Flying High has been written up in such national magazines as Life, The American and Seventeen, in newspapers all over the country including Sunday supplements, also in foreign newspapers since it has been internationally circulated on wire services.

Notice For Interns

All students planning to intern second semester are requested to pick up their papers at the internship office, 204 Education Building. These papers are due back by October 9.

APO Holds Meet For Interested Men

An informal fellowship meeting for men students interested in entering Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity will be held Monday at 8 p.m. in the Longmire clubroom.

The FSU chapter, one of 280 chapters over the United States, welcomes any male student with a good scholastic record and who are former scouts.

ID Coses Avoiloble

Celluloid cases for student Identification Cards can be picked up in the Office of Personnel Records, 204 Westcott. Mr. J. T Flournoy made this announcement in answer to many requests during the Fall registration for the transparent protectors. Those wishing cases should show their ID card at the office.

Thomasville Artist Series Sponsors DeMille, Three other noted Groups

FSU music lovers will be interested in the announcement that four concerts of unusual merit are being offered in the annual series of concerts sponsored by the Thomasville Entertainment Foundation.

Heading the list of attractions, announced last week by the Foundation, are two new musical ensembles in the concert field—the Agnes DeMille Dance Theatre in its first season and the Vienna String Symphony, in its first American tour.

ROUNDING OUT the four-fold program are the noted duo-pianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff and the American Album of Familiar Music, a long-time radio favorite now offered as a full evening of songs and music.

The Foundation, a non-profit community effort, put its tickets on sale last week offering all four concerts for a reserved seat price of $8.50 for adults and $5.00 for students. Headquarters for the sale of tickets will be Co-Croft Music Co. in Thomasville and mail orders will be filled for out-of-town patrons addressing Box 330, Thomasville.

MISS DeMILLE'S new American company in a program ranging from Bach to Broadway will open the series on November 4. Choreography from some of her most famous hit shows has been adapted to the talented company of dancers and singers she has assembled. FSU Film Center Brings Audio-Visual Teaching Here

Use of audio-visual materials in teaching is not new, according to Florida State University's Dr. Otis McBride, but the use was accelerated by World War II when more emphasis was given to adult education.

Dr. McBride, the director of audio-visual service, said films are effective in teaching at all levels from elementary grades on up through college courses.

"DURING THE past year we have supplied Leon county 113 films and filmstrips," he said, explaining this local distribution is done through the Leon County School Materials Center.

Several hundred of these service films are available in the audio-visual center which is part of the FSU Library School. A majority are sound films, some are in color and others are in black and white. Usual length of running time is from 10 to 25 minutes.

SUBJECT matter ranges from Atomic Energy to Reach and Sea Animals. There are also films on Distribution of Food, Tuberculosis, Russian Ballet and Folk Dances, Principles of Baking, Poultry Raising, Mechanics of Breathing, How To Keep a Job, Eskimo Sea Hunters, Basic Typing Methods, Earth and Sun Rays, Baby Sitting and Shakespearean plays.

The films are produced under such educational direction as Life Magazine Inc., Indiana Univrsity, Health Publication Institute, Creative Art Studio, Inc., Museum of Modern Art Film Library, Coronet Instructional Films, Florida State University, Visual Sciences and United States Office of Education

FSU'S AUDIO-visual supplies recordings, lantern slides and graphic arts as well as films and filmstrips The service operates on a non-profit basis, and fees charged for rental cover only costs of handling and replacement of worn and damaged materials. All materials may be rented by schools, clubs, business groups, public libraries, churches or private individuals.

The center offers information or instruction pertaining to equipment, new films and other audio-visual problems. Previews are arranged at the center for those wishing to view films before renting.

PROVIDING materials is only one phase, the service phase, of the university center. Its overall objective is to aid in the improvement of teaching on the FSU campus and throughout the state of Florida. Instruction and production are also important parts of its function.

Courses are offered on the campus and in the extension field covering Audio-Visual Materials, Construction and Use of Graphic Materials, Sound Film, Construction and Use of Still Projected Materials Correlation of Radio and Audio-Visual Aids in Education and Cinematography.

THESE FSU Library School extension courses are offered for university credit throughout Florida. FSU faculty members set-up the extension courses in designated cities with materials and equipment so the instruction parallels instruction offered on the home campus.

The FSU center has the responsibility of producing as many audio-visual materials as possible. This work includes producing filmstrips, lantern-slides, motion pictures and graphic arts. Production ties in closely with instruction because in classes teachers learn to do a number of things in the field of graphic arts and in the field of audio-visual production generally.

Expanded Program Announced For Home Economics

Dr Margaret R. Sandels, dean of the school of home economics at Florida State University, has announced the development of an expanded program in home demonstration education.

For a number of years FSU has offered at intervals one or two courses for prospective home demonstration agents. The courses were possible only when a sufficient number of students requested them, and when members of the state home demonstration staff felt that they had time to offer them.

BEGINNING this fall, the university is expanding the program in home demonstration education. Miss Eunice Grady has been appointed as part-time professor in the department of home demonstration education, school of home economics, and part-time on the staff of the state home demonstration office.

Miss Grady is responsible for the teaching of the home demonstration courses and will supervise the field experiences.

This program is being developed in cooperation with the Educational Consultant from the United States Department of Agriculture and will be in line with the accepted programs offered in various state universities

MISS GRADY earned both her bachelor's and master's degrees in the Florida State College for Women where she majored in nutrition.

She has been County Home

'Ain't College Grand!' Squeals Frosh In Homespun Tale

RULES OF RAT CAPS AND SCHOOL SPIRIT

Rat caps should be worn from the time you get up till 6 o'clock. When you see an upper class man you should smile and greet him congenially. The reason the rat caps are to be worn is to promote school spirit. The rat caps do help a lot to promote school spirit. It combines all the freshman and also presents a feeling of rivalry between the freshman and sopmores.

Dormitory life is a wonderful asset to school spirit. All the girls after a while get to feel like sisters because living together they discuss all of their problems. I feel a very strong loyalty to Jeannie Murphree because of all the house meetings and Junior Counsulor helping you out.

As a freshman I felt right until I saw the clever signs on the lawns. They made me feel one of the school, and also how nicely the bus driver stops and ask you to let him take you places. Eating at the cafeteria makes you feel very peppy. It is so much fun to eat with all the members of your class.

The educational counselor helps you so very much and all the deans and professors are so very friendly to you, all the time. They are remind you of your mother, and father a little and you have a feeling of security when you are with them.

The band is one of the greatest contributors of all. When the band comes marching on the field with the trumpets blaring, the drums playing and the pretty majorettes with their heads held high with dignity. One gets a funny sensation. A choked up feeling, mingled with pride of belonging to Florida State University and also of appreciation of a beautiful band. At the games every one is happy and cheering It is a wonderful occasion. A football game. The players are fighting to win victory for us and we are cheering them on. If the football players win. We feel like all of us helped and were part of the playing.

Sororties and fraternities help to promote school spirit. At the first of the year when the rush parties are given you are able to met and get to know other freshman and upper class men. Then you and the girls most like you put down their choice if you get a bid and are excepted you have a wonderful feeling One knows then she has a home away from home. Girls who will always be true friends or maybe more like sisters. A person feels she has some one looking out for her & also pulling for her. Yes, sororities help to play an important role in your life at college. Fraternities do the same thing for the boys.

The curracal activities are another important factor contributing to school spirit. When you work with a small group hoping to bring victory and fame to Florida State University it just makes you feel closer and love FSU even more. Remember the old saying, the more you put into some thing the more you get out of it."

The contest between the Freshmen & the Sophomores should be vary very interesting. I sure hope we freshmen win because if we don't we will continue to wear our rat capes till home coming. Gee it sure is easy when one is in a hurry to forget to wear a rat cap since you aren't a custom to wearing one and the penalty is great if you get caught. I am telling you because I know, and my arm feels like it is going to fall off.

FSU MODEL BAKERY:

New Equipment Recently Added

When the wind is right, there is a tantalizing fragrance of home-made bread drifting over the Florida State University campus.

It comes from the recently remodeled university bakery, where new machinery and equipment were recently installed to take care of the growing university's baking needs. About 4,000 pounds of bread a day is the capacity.

THE FSU BAKERY is now a small-size model bakery. All machinery and equipment was custom made for the university. It is all the latest thing in scientific design, and tops for turning out a full line of breads and variety baked products for use in the university dining hall, restaurants and cafeterias.

Students in the FSU baking science and management department will be given instruction in practical baking procedures and machine production methods in helping produce the baked products in the model bakery A heavy duty revolving tray oven is used.

ADDITION of Charles D. Stone as instructor to the staff of the department of baking science and management makes more practical teaching possible, according to Dr. L. A. Rumsey, department head.

Stone has had business experience as well as sound academic training A graduate of the University of Georgia, he had two years of army baking experience during World War II.

HE TOOK bread and cake courses at an industrial institute in Minneapolis and completed the regular baking courses at the American Institute of Baking in Chicago.

Before joining the FSU faculty this fall Stone served as secretary-treasurer of the Georgia Retail Bakers Association. In addition to teaching he will superintend all FSU baking operations. He will also share the administrative baking load with Miss Anna Mae Tracy head dietitian.

NOW BEGINNING its third year of operation, the expanded FSU department of baking and science management now offers practical training for students to back up the science and theory they learn in the laboratory The department is unique in the country in offering a four year university course leading to a BS in baking science.

Returns Decisive In Election Runoff For Senior Class

Betty Whitmire and Charlie McDaniel will be candidates in a final run-off election which will be held Thursday, October 1, to select a vice-president for the Senior class. They are opposing each other for the third time because of a peculiar situation which occurred last spring; they both received the same number of votes in the second primary.

Bill Stancik, secretary of elections, has announced that voting will be held from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m., at the Student Center, in lower Wescott, and in the lobby of the Seminole Club.

Students Giving Approval To Paper's Broad Outlook

During the past week the Flambeau has received a whole flood of offers from writers about the campus. We are frankly proud of the fact.

The people who are coming to us are from all manner of academic background on campus, not just journalists. They are presenting us with columns on many varied topics, and this is the source of our pride.

The fact that so many people already are taking an interest in the Flambeau seems to indicate that our policy of broadening the scope of the student newspaper is gaining approval.

The idea of a newspaper devoted to many interests certainly is not a new one on campus. A look through old issues of the Flambeau shows that there was such an interest in the past. In recent years, however, this sort of writing has disappeared more and more from the campus scene.

Some people may think it strange for the student newspaper to make what might be considered a venture into the literary realm, but we feel it is an entirely natural development.

We must emphasize that we do not intend to let news coverage slip. Indeed, under new arrangements with the School of Journalism's writing classes, we expect to have the most competent reporting staff in the paper's history. It's just that we feel adding these new features will add more depth and maturity to the Flambeau.

It has always been our contention that there are talented writers on this campus who for the most part confine their abilities to class work, letters home and doodling, because they have no outlet on the campus. Of late they have been confronted with a strictly news newspaper and a mostly humor magazine. Both of these things have their place on the campus, but its unwise to exclude other types of writing entirely.

Thus, the Flambeau is issuing a call to the general student body. We are interested in what you have to say.

This week we point with pride to a particularly good example of undiscovered talent. Robert Strane's "Recitative" is drawn from a rich store of knowledge about opera and operatic recordings. His prose, almost poetic in its easy, flowing style, is worthy of a top-notch professional.

Strane's audience, of course, will be limited, but this fact does not in any way diminish the significance of what he writes. We feel, furthermore, that many people who would not otherwise have come in contact with opera will become interested in it because of this column.

As this second issue of the Flambeau goes to press, we are already able to bring to the student body columns on opera, drama and literature. We hope the idea catches on and continues to meet your approval. We will always have an open eye and open ear for the students.

● ON COLUMNS

The Flambeau wants early in the year to make a clear distinction between its two types of editorials.

The staff editorials, which are printed on the left hand side of the page, usually reflect the opinion of a majority of the senior staff.

Columns, however, are sounding-boards for the writers who sign them. We feel that it is wise to print the works of writers with varying points of view, including those different from our own, in order that the newspaper not become too one-sided.

The editor retains the right to approve or disapprove a column, but he will change nothing. Only under extreme circumstances when the editor considers a column to have wandered too far from the broad governing principals of responsibility and restraint will a column be turned down. Point of view will not be a criterion.

● NO UGA

The Flambeau must apologize for being old fashioned. It seems that in the first edition we made several references in headlines to UGA, the University Government Association.

Vice-President of the Student Body Gene Lawler informed with restrained indignance that we were old hat. Last spring, we learned, all that was changed, when by constitutional amendment UGA was changed to the Student Body.

Upperclassmen probably didn't notice the difference (except Veep Lawler), but to the freshmen who didn't know what the heck we were talking about, we offer apologies

● COOPERATION

The Flambeau feels that it should voice its approval of the new cooperative policy between the School of Journalism and itself. We feel that this policy will aid immeasurably to the news coverage that we c provide for the student body. We also feel that this will prove beneficial to the reporting classes who will work with the Flambeau in that it will afford them practical journalistic experience.

As Dr. Sidney Kobre, newly appointed faculty advisor has pointed out, the editors of the Flambeau will maintain their identity and responsibility in all respects. We feel that we cannot overemphasize this point.

At the same time, though retaining our independence from the School of Journalism, we will be afforded the assistance of a large corps of newswriters and some professional help.

This cooperative effort of the Flambeau and the reporting classes can serve to make our student newspaper one of the best semi-weeklies in the Southeast.

We would like to express our appreciation to Dr. Kobre for the instrumental part he has played in effecting this new arrangement.

The Flambeau feels that one of its primary purposes — that of providing the students of this university with a responsible organ of news communication—has been substantially furthered.

Series Gives Four Plays

By RICHARD STEVENS

Each year the Speech Department of Florida State University produces four plays on their community series program. These productions habitually go unnoticed by the great majority of FSU students. The same situation persists in the offerings of the School of Music and the exhibitions of the Art Department.

I am not deriding the student body for its lack of "art appreciation," for I realize that the average student can find more than enough to do during his spare moments in Tallahassee than to improve himself culturally

The idea of the students that theatre is arty is in itself responsible for the low attendance marks at Conradi Theater in past years The idea of a theater is not one of improvement, but of appealing to the emotions of its audiences There is something for everyone in theater, and our own plays under the direction of Dr Orr Dr Davee, and Co. never fail to be interesting. Each one of the community series plays runs for four days So if during the week of production of these plays, you can find a place in your schedule open at the correct time, try a play. Who knows? — You may even like it. The price of admission is somewhat less than those of the local movie houses, and the calibre of entertainment somewhat higher than the average of said movie houses

On Friday, October 21 at 8 15 p.m Life With Father takes to the stage in Augusta Conradi Theatre Written by Howard Lindsay and Russell Crouse, it is a laugh-loaded, long-run Broadway hit It is the story of that unique character of characters, Clarence Day.

Shortly after the final curtain falls on Life With Father, tryouts will be held for the big event of the year, theatrically speaking, on this campus — William Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet. Rowdy romance, and tragedy combine to make this an unforgettable day

Although the third play has not yet been picked, the Insect Comedy has been selected for the fourth and final community series production The Insect Comedy, authored by the brothers Kapek, is an imaginative satire on the many quirks and foibles of human beings. It will represent this university at the Sarasota Art Festival in the spring

Just a word to aspiring actors on our fair campus — the Speech Department always welcomes anyone in the university to try out for parts in these plays or to assist with the technical work If you were among the many who tried out for Life With Father last week and did not receive a part, don't be discouraged No matter how fine an actor you are, you will not be suitable for all roles As an example, Marlon Brando is certainly a good actor, yet I doubt if he could have won the part of father

I do not expect to see each and every one of you in Conradi during the course of the recently commenced school year, however there are many worthwhile things going on here on our own campus, and you just might enjoy looking in one somesome of them.

ETCETERA ETCHINGS

Three-D's Bloodiest

By DAVID DREIS

While in Miami for the Semi-Cane tussle, we peered through a pair of polaroids and gazed at a third dimensional piece of nothing called, "I, the Jury," based on the novel by Mickey Spillane The picture was a sorry mess in more words than one

Hero Mike Hammer played by Biff Eliot, with whom we have personally dipped doughnuts is a rough, tough detective who's not beyond slugging girls, kicking old women and spitting into the eyes of blind men. Hammer is an over-sexed Sam Spade

The film has the usual "types" which frequent celluloids such as these. You've got the baffled cop, sexy blonde, clean-cut secretary, sexy blonde, wise-guy crook, sexy blonde and Hammer, who breezes through a case which the cops can't figure out even with their crime labs and years of experience.

In this epic, half the cast is bumped off; the audience, thanks to three-d, is almost wiped out; and those who escape contend with the acting which makes the theater look like Little Big Horn

Needless to say, Spillane fans, and our campus is filled with them, will eat this thing up. Books by Mickey can be found anywhere if you want to look for them. A few years back the detective fan was reading Dashell Hammett and going along with Sam Spade The big difference between Spade and Hammer is that Spade is a high-moraled character caught in low-moraled circumstances. Hammer is a low-moraled character caught in low-moraled circumstances. To some, this brings a sigh of ecstacy

Spillane and Hammett both have been praised for eloquent descriptions. Hammett by critics and Spillane by his fans. A typical piece of Hammertane is something like this, "I shot periods into her belly which turned to commas by the blood" Other pieces of description are more than likely underlined in the reader's books.

In analyzing these books we must consider that although tastes differ in literature, Mickey Spillane's works have been riding the top of the New York Times' and Herald Tribune's best-selling lists for a long time. "I, the Jury," was in its sixth edition by the second month the book hit the stands No doubt the film will be one of the top grossers considering the fools who go for any picture as long as it's in another dimension.

As we came out of the theater, two kids about 10 were talking. "I read "I, the Jury" months ago," said the first, "It wasn't as good as "The Big Kill" or "The Long Wait."

The other thought a moment and answered, "Oh, I don't know, . . I think the best was "Kiss Me Deadly"

RECITATIVE

Cetra - Soria's 'Boheme' Artistic Gem

By ROBERT STRANE

This column is penned rather prematurely in respect to its primary purpose, that being, to orient the reader somewhat to Saturday afternoon Met broadcasts. Until the first broadcast, then, this review recommends certain meritorious operatic sets, wearily sought out among the oderiferous deluge of drivel issuing from the innumerable studios of the Occident. For this introduction, Puccini's hauntingly romantic gem, the great white hope of the opera box-office, La Boheme as performed in the recent Cetra-Soria release proves a most savory work for appraisal

Maestra Gabrelle Santini directs the orchestra and chorus of Radio Italiana and the brilliant Italian cast including Ferruccio Tagliavini, Rosanna Carteri, Giuseppe Taddei, Cesare Siepi and Elvira Ramella. Technically, the recording is superb, clear in the usual bright treble tone of Cetra disks; well-arranged studio positions for the artists are compatible with those observed in a staged performance. There are two 12-inch LPs in the album, complete with photos, background notes, and libretto-price, $11.90 plus tax.

Words about the individual performers . .

Baritone Taddei's Marcello must demand first mention as befitting the most arresting member of the cast Those of the readers who admired his scintillating and poinard-witted Gianni Schicchi will, I am certain, experience somewhat of a raptus over his completely human (and I revere the word) interpretation in this set Sig. Taddei's lusty voice is admirably suited to the role, being at once mellifluous, gentle and rich, powerful. He can and does sing Puccini's sensuous line as written and . . . how rare . . color and inflect with the convincing effect of polished speech He is, in my opinion, the finest Marcello on record, in that he believes in every line he sings. In this recording I can compare the beauteous effect of the love of Marcello and Musetta with that of Mercutio's mercurial bravura Taddei make use of his cultivated mezza voce to a singularly high-comic effect in the first-act duet with Rodolfo . . . and in the impassioned duet with Mimi at the tavern (Act III) his pianissimo is as soothing as a "hand laid softly on the soul." There is penetrating pathos in the separation from Musetta . . his distract "corragio" to Rodolfo at Mimi's expiring is electrifying.

In the Romantic Era, the times of the four Bohemians, friendship was held as a sacred institution; a friend knew his comrade's agonies, aspirations and devined the tremalos of his soul . . . the highest relationship of a woman to a man was indeed erotic friendship. The crimson virtue of Sig. Taddei's conception lies in that thought: he is at all times a warm, concerned and enthusiastic friend.

Rosanna Carteri blends acute sensitivity of insight with free modulation between delicious dolce and ringing forte to execute an unusually creditable Mimi. It is urged that the hearer fix her photo within the album firmly in mind for artistic satisfaction—she, from what I may judge, ranks as the most physically alluring Mimi It is a rather shallow person who cannot glimpse the spatial through imagination and the temporal. Carteri's heart is a trifle as chilly as her hand during the first act, an aspect of interpretation possibly undesirable to some. However, to my thought, a subtle indication of restrained amor as here is well-calculated to convey the wariness begot of much agitation within a broad expanse of love and sensuality, and moreover to give dim, wispy foundation to Rodolfo's third-act accusations In the Marcello-Mimi duet, Act III, the dramatic high-point of the performance her flustered fears of love's extinction and anguish of bitter-sweet remembrance are thrillingly poured out. Mimi's likening her love to the profound depth of ocean and her softly evanescent death (Act IV) bear the transfixing sweetness of an Autumn dusk.

Tagliavini's tenor, the Italian lyre, IS the poet in Rodolfa. His top tones was strident when strained for great volume, but his mezza voce is unsurpassed in fluidity and disarming suavite. Rodolfa is declared the tenor's best role dramatically, the role of his Met debut in 1941, but its intensity seems a bit offset by stock affectations. The characterization, far from disappointing, is, however, rather like a cloak pulled over than a subjective emotional synthesis emerging from within. The gem of his repertoire is most probably "Che gelida manina", and his treatment in the Cetra is properly tender at the beginning and enraptured in the soaring climax. Rodolfa's devastating cry MIMI is certainly uninhibited and delivered with that sobbing effusiveness ever demanded.

The Met's most seductive Do Giovanni, basso Cesare Siepi, stra a truly captivating Colline. Or is absorbed in the dashing, you ful elegance of his cantabile de livery . . never is he the sep chral "heavy" with the black lumbering timbre of operatic me odrama's sneering villains H Colline leaps into the jollity w a witty gusto . . and is as deep concerned as the others in the im minent pathos. Siepi's "Co Song" conveys a reserved, mela choly sentiment for that symb of intellectual and artistic fre dom, and the untainted camarade rie before the fateful Christm Eve . . not sung with the fre zied grief of a bereaved fathe

Elvira Ramella's Musetta sprightly, frivolous, decided "cute" in the Cafe Momus scen (Act II) and kind as a loving s ter in the last scene of the oper Her remarkably light coloratu impresses one with the abandon a lilt of gay youth, with an unde tone of sympathetic loveliness. Si Latinucci as Schaunard would re ceive more than a crush of pea nuts for curtain-call.

The performance is generally believable that it may well becom a "mirror to nature" for the hea er and its action and emotio fragments of his own experienc recall.

LET'S FACE IT

Here's How To Guag Frosh Progress

By GENE LAWLER

"We will make a special effort to bring competent interesting writers to our columns . . ." Thus immediately compromising editorial policy, the editor has allowed our pattern of printer's ink to be smeared across this little newsprint rectangle.

Of what shall we write this first time? We have accumulated over the summer a foot-tall stack of pamphlets, articles, clippings and notes Suitably plagiarized, pasteurized or pablumized this should be apt column material But later First let's record a few observations about the freshmen

We take a more optimistic attitude than ex-President of Harvard Conat who said that the freshmen brought a little knowledge when they came to college, the seniors left without any, and the stuff just accumulated on campus. This may be so of enthusiasm; the frosh's rosy gaze and boundless energy seem to disappear about Thanksgiving time.

Freshmen are here at college because they want to have a good time, they want to find a mate, they want to make more money, or possibly even because they want to learn. Somehow, we can't help feeling that no matter what their purpose, nearly all of them again something during their time here.

We offer a few questions, suggested by a friendly faculty member, with which to appraise the progress of this year's freshmen

How many, while not appreciating it, will still be able to retain their composure if somebody puts Stravinsky or Offenbach on the phonograph instead of Dixieland jazz?

How many, while still patronizing the upper shelves of the magazine rack at the book store where MAN, TRUE CONFESSIONS, 1000 JOKES, and REAL ROMANCES are found, will occasionally bend their knees a bit to peek inside the cover of HARPER'S or the ATLANTIC?

How many will become able to purchase a hard-covered book occasionally without feeling the stigma of intellectualism?

How many, though they still attend FSU football games, will begin to question just what it that big time intercollegiate athletics contributes to the process of higher education?

And finally, how many will become a wee dissatisfied with the campus and the world they live in? Dissatisfaction, after all, is the seed of progress

Movies Vie For New Filming Methods

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Hollywood was frantic when it turned to the new filming devices that are now competing for acceptance, and its shakiness is reflected in the confusion which the general public displays concerning the various processes.

Being quite interested in movies, and having followed the development of 3-D, Cinerama, panoramic screens, stereophonic sound, Cinemascope, etc., I was surprised to find that many people are confused by the many names. The more I think about it, though, the more I realize there is good reason for not knowing what is going on. The motion picture industry really is in a mess.

Actually, it is television which is prompting all the changes in filming processes More and more, the snowy, squawking boxes are keeping people at home, it appeals to their natural inertia to crawl to the nearest chair rather than go out to a movie house I do not believe TV will kill the cinema, any more than the cinema succeeded in killing the legitimate stage. Obviously, though, accomodating changes will have to be made.

Hollywood needed a gimmick, and it came up with a handful of them. Commercial interest prompted the change, no doubt, but this is no particular reason to condemn what has come about. I believe that out of the turmoil something truly worthwhile will develop.

The general trend in all the competing processes is increased realism, and each in its own way has done fairly well.

Natural Vision, which is generally referred to as 3-D, has probably created the greatest illusion of depth, but it has certain disadvantages which may eventually doom it after its novelty value has worn off.

The Natural Vision process is photographed with two cameras about four inches apart. The film in each camera is "polarized," each in an opposite direction. A polarized picture may be thought of as made up of parallel lines of light, rather than an entire picture. Thus if one film is made up of horizontal lines and the other vertical, then viewing glasses which are also polarized oppositely effectively black out one of the films for each eye. One eye sees one projection, and the other sees a second slightly apart from it, and an illusion of depth is created.

In 3-D, however, one must wear glasses and at all times keep his head straight. One is, furthermore, at the mercy of the human error involved in synchronizing two films which must be dovetailed to the millesecond The first three Natural Vision movies, which were truly abominable from the dramatic standpoint, grossed something like 21 million dollars in total. Pure novelty. Receipts are already falling off, however, and unless studios begin producing something worthy of literary praise in the process, 3-D will soon be a museum piece.

Cinemascope employs a different approach to the three-dimensional effect. Noting that side vision was as important to the illusion of depth as the stereoscopic principal, its promoters have introduced greater width per height. The cinemascope camera has a special lens which compresses what it sees onto a film of ordinary size; then the picture is re-expanded by a similar lens on the projector.

The wide, curved, panoramic screen which is designed to accomodate Cinemascope is now being widely employed by many theaters for ordinary movies. The result has been an increased "feeling of participation" but a chopping off of the tops and bottoms of pictures.

With the coming of the wide screen has been the development of stereophonic sound. In this process there are two sound tracks which reproduce the sound occurring on their respective sides of the screen. Some people have objeted that the two speaker systems are distracting, and it is true that stereophonic sound is only at its best when the listener is in the center of the theater, but I believe that it is a significant step in the direction of increased realism.

The most fabulous of all the systems is Cinerama, which is so complicated that its boosters only expect 25 or 30 theaters throughout the world to carry it. Cinerama employs three projectors to encompass the action; it has something like seven sound systems, so that if a fire truck flashes across the screen, the sound goes along with it. Cinerama is expensive to film and expensivo to show. It depends on long runs for its bread and butter

It is hard to say who will eventually win the battle of the vying systems. It is really confusing, and I hope I have not added to this confusion.

Martin Announces Sandspur Contest Open to Students

Budding writers and choreographers will be interested in knowing that scripts for SANDSPUUR, the all-student production, which is held annually, may be submitted at this time

Ron Martin, chairman of the student committee to select the script for the production, announced that entries may be taken to Karen Bell, the secretary of the Student Body office, on the second floor of the Longmire Building until 5:00 p.m. Tuesday, October 6, 1953.

The Faculty Adviser for this year's production, Mr. Fred Vogel, announced that there will be a $50 prize awarded to the winner. The decision of the judges will be final.

All those interested are invited to enter their work.

James Michener Pens Novel On Ancient East-West Conflict

By BOB FOLSOM

James Michener a former school teacher from Pennsylvania, is probably best known as the author of Tales of the South Pacific, a Pulitzer-Prize winning novel in 1947. Later made into a Broadway production, produced by Rodgers and Hammerstein, South Pacific went on to become one of the great stage hits. Michener is recognized as one of the post-war writers. He served as a Navy lieutenant-commander during World War II in the Pacific area, from which he gained his book material.

His most recent work, The Bridges at Toko-Ri, the second book length novel to be published in its entirety in LIFE magazine (the first: Hemingway's The Old Man and the Sea) and later by Random House, dealt with the war in Korea and its effect on reserve officers recalled to active duty and sent to fight in Korea A superb portrait, it is by far the best novel yet written on the Korean War. The N Y. Times has had it listed as a best seller for eight weeks.

NOW MICHENER, only a few months later, has come out with another novel. It is called Sayanara, and is being serialized in three parts by McCALL's magazine starting with the October issue now on the newstands, and ending with the December issue.

McCALL's has given it top-drawer treatment, with illustrations by Jon Whitcomb, and on the preface, some interesting comments by four well-known personalities. They are Frederick Lewis Allen, Pearl S. Buck, Mary Martin and Richard Rodgers.

MISS BUCK, herself a Nobel Prize winner, says partly . . if anyone cares to go deeper, is the authentic explanation of why, if we Americans do not change we can never win in Asia." Miss Buck, naturally sympathetic towards the Oriental, obviously means our attitude should change, and it should be one of brotherhood towards the Oriental. From this we can derive beforehand an idea of Sayanara, as Michener has, of lately, written works revolved around a problem arising from every day life

After the war, Michener toured the Asian continent, writing about the peoples from time to time and getting first hand knowledge, which was later published in various magazines. During this journey, he undoubtedly saw many of the problems that have arisen because of the American occupation and the American attitude towards the Oriental He must also feel that some of these should be solved

IN SAYONARA he presents the problem of fraternization and marriage between Americans and Japanese and the opposition felt towards it against a background of love between an Air Force pilot and a general's daughter.

After shooting down seven MIG's in Korea, Maj. Lloyd Gruver is ordered to an easy desk job in Japan by his future father-in-law General Webster, whose daughter he hopes to marry. Gruver comes face to face with the marriage between GI's and Japanese girls. An enlisted man in his squadron, Joe Kelly, marries a Japanese girl, and Gruver is unwillingly involved in it.

THE POSITION is in the form of General Webster, base commander at Kobe, and his socially minded wife (as all general's wives are) who feel, disgustedly, against Americans fraternizing with Japanese girls. General Webster goes so far as to having an order posted ruling against it, and "Mrs General Webster", when at a party thrown in Gruver's honor, and to which officers have brought Japanese women, says to her daughter "If I knew it wouldn't humiliate you, I'd leave. Who won the war, anyway?" The party was a failure

The lovers quarrel over personal beliefs, and there is a cooling off period in which Gruver meets and falls in love with a beautiful Japanese actress, Hana-ogi Thereupon the first installments ends; its likened to falling off a cliff

MICHENER uses stock situations at times, and has the hero, Gruver, sound stuffy once or twice but Sayanara is written in fine, clear prose, by one of the finest authors living today. If you like Michener, you'll like Sayanara.

We hesitated for a moment when we saw the announcement on the cover—"The Greatest Love Story of Our Time" — then we thought "Our Time" must surely mean 1953, and after all, McCALL'S is a woman's magazine.

Letters to the Editor . . .

ports Chatter

By CLYDE WARD
Flambeau Sports Editor

A small but enthusiastic group of Seminoles watched a ball saga in the Orange Bowl Friday night that made m both optimistic and pessimistic, happy and just a bit sad.

They were optimistic because they saw their team hold cious Miami squad scoreless for 25 minutes. They e pessimistic at the chances of the Tribe without ade- ate reserve strength. They were happy at the fine wing they made in the face of superior odds, and sad course) because we lost the ball game.

The fans who made the trip got a very raw deal at the ds of the Orange Bowl committee. When they looked the FSU student section, they were told there was no ion In order to form a booster section, it would have n necessary for them to pay 3.85 for reserve seats in- d of the 1.85 general admission.

This rsulted in most of the faithful few being seated the end zone. The cheer leaders were trying to coax s from a group that was sprinkled quite liberally with ile faces. The University of Tampa, although it does have access to a stadium as impressive as the Orange wl, does manage to furnish us with a student section.

Looks as if Miami would let a couple of lousy little hucks nd between them and Southern hospitality.

The next game with Louisville will be another tough Coming right after the bone-crusher with Miami, rying towel is again brought out because of lack of erves. A tired team is vitally handicapped over a team t rotates to keep the men fresh.

Coach Nugnt, who was no doubt having the usual light ches snack of mangled fingernails Friday night, had s driven home all too clearly. In the first half, the ians were superb. They had worked hard and learned And they were ready to show the world that they ren't a young bunch of upstarts playing out of their ss They were dangerous then.

In the second half the pace began to tell. Most of the ers had seen considerable action the first half, and y were alrady tired. Thir blocking wasn't quite as d, and their tackles weren't quite as sure. There was plenty of spirit but the overworked muscles couldn't h it. So the score began to look lop-sided.

RETRACTION

Far be it from me to besmirch the fair name of the Editor of the Flambeau BUT I would appreciate it if you would give credit where credit is due. Last week's article, which was painstakenly written by yours truly, Bob Gutting, was printed under the name of Dick Gutting.

In all sincerity this has caused embarrassment to my brother, Dick, who's name appeared throughout the article. Therefore, it would be greatly appreciated if you printed some sort of retraction.

Thanking you in advance, I remain

Your humble servant.
BOB GUTTING.

'Ed's note—Consider it retracted, Bob. It was a glaring mistake. We bow our heads in shame.

Business Men Give Advertising Department Aid

Advertising students at Florida State University will work closely with the new Tallahassee Advertising and Sales Club this fall, according to Dr. Royal H. Ray, head of the university advertising department.

To further cement the relation between the FSU advertising department and business men, Dr Ray is developing an internship program which will enable his students to acquire on-the-job experience in Florida business houses as part of their training.

THE PROGRAM is co-sponsored by the FSU schools of business and journalism. Courses in advertising design are given in the department of art. Also helping train students for advertising careers are the departments of art education, clothing and textiles and marketing.

"Educational advertising services have become an important responsibility to FSU," Dr. Ray said, citing how university staff members have co-operated with Tallahassee merchants on various projects.

RICHARD JOEL and J. Richard Stevens, new members of the department's staff, are offering courses this fall in advertising, marketing and journalism.

Although only a year old, the FSU advertising department has expanded under Dr. Ray's leadership by increasing educational services to business organizations and offering an enlarged academic program.

CHAPTERS OF both Alpha Delta Sigma, national professional advertising fraternity for men, professional advertising fraternity for women, have been organized and installed on the FSU campus during the past year.

Gym Personalities

By BOB GUTTING

Starting this week I will begin a new series of articles on membership of the Gym Team. I would like to begin by presenting to you Joe Taylor, the newest addition to the team.

This dashing young fellow is an old Grad from Northeast Public High School in Philadelphia where he lettered two years on the Varsity Gym team. Joe graduated in 1945 and then went on to win the Middle Atlantic AAU Flying Rings Championship in Philadelphia during 1947. In 1950 at the National Turner Gymnastic Meet at Rochester, New York, Joe took second place on the parallel bars and third place on the still rings.

At this time his gymnastics career was interrupted by a call from Uncle Sam. Joe entered the Army in 1950 and served a two-year hitch, 11 months of his time being spent in Korea with the 21st Infantry Regiment where he earned six battle stars for his Korean Campaign Ribbon.

Joe was discharged from the Army in August, 1952, and would probably still be in Philadelphia except one of our star athletes, Jack Miles, convinced Joe that Florida State was the place for him.

Joe registered as a Freshman this February and two weeks later, while representing the Garnet and Gold for the first time, won the Florida AAU still rings championship. This proved to be only a warm-up for Joe who then went on to win the Georgia AAU flying rings championship at Atlanta several weeks latre.

Joe's gymnastic achievements have greatly pleased the emminent Dr. Hartley Price FSU's outstanding gym coach, who believes Taylor has developed into a major threat to our future gymnastic opponents.

Rogers Receives New Grant-in-Aid

There has been an ever increasing interest on the part of Florida State University faculty members to carry on independent research since the FSU Research Council was created in 1949, according to Dr Paul Reynolds, associate dean of the college of arts and sciences.

"The council this year will not begin to be able to make all the grants requested," Dr. Reynolds said.

THAT DOES not mean that the faculty concerned will be discouraged on their research, he added, explaining how some of them go ahead, paying expenses personally; others seek outside support through various agencies; and some are able to get financial help from their departmental budgets.

As the recently appointed new chairman of the council, Dr. Reynolds, who is also head of the sociology department, is encouraged by the whole research picture at FSU.

FACULTY RESEARCH applications keep coming to the council, and grants-in-aid continue to be made. However, there is not yet enough money. The council has an annual budget of about $20,000, and applications for grants for the coming year already exceed that amount. But the set-up and results are stimulating to all concerned, particularly to members of the council.

Six faculty applications have been made to the Research Council representing six diffirent departments. They are: chemistry, history, bacteriology, sociology, physics, philosophy and religion. Amounts ranged from $1,187.00 for the chemistry project to $99.00 for a history project.

SEVEN GRANTS-in-aid, totaling $4,875.00, have been made by the Research Council since Dr. Reynolds became chairman July 1. Six of them are to continue projects carried on last year under grants made by the council.

Largest grant made in 1952 and largest to be continued in 1953 was for the study of underwater sounds made by marine organisms—$2,775.00 increased by $1,775.00, to Dr. W. N. Kellogg, professor of psychology.

THE ONLY NEW FSU grant-in-aid made by the council went to Dr. Carmen Rogers, associate professor of English, for a project, "Medical Symbolism in the Faerie Queene."

For the year from July 1, 1952 to June 30, 1953 the Research Council made 20 grants totaling $19,855.25. Dr. Kellogg's grant was the largest, and $60 to Dr. Howard B. Baker, associate professor of psychology, for study of adaptation phenomena in vision, was the smallest.

THERE WERE only four grants made that year for amounts between one and two thousand dollars. They went to Dr. John J. Spitzer for study on nature of the lipemia-clearing effect of heparin, and to Dr. H. D Baker, Dr. Daniel R Kenshalo and Dr. John N. Nafe for research on investigation of the relationships between the properties of the stimulus and the properties of the nerve discharge in cutaneous sensitivity to pressure.

DR. DOAK S. CAMPBELL, president of the university, is a strong advocate and supporter of scholarly research. He recommended the creation of the Research Council, and it was officially approved by the Board of Control. He appoints the ten member council for three year terms on a staggered annual basis.

Dr Milton Carothers, dean of the graduate school, is an ex-officio member of the Research Council, and also serves as its secretary. The council represents various academic divisions of the university.

UNDER CHAIRMANSHIP of Dr. Reynolds, the current FSU Research Council is composed of R. G. Clapp, assistant dean of the Library School; Dr. J. Frank Dame, head of the business education department; Dr. Harold Humm, director of the oceanographic institute; Dr. Karl Kuersteiner, dean of the school of music; Dr. Eugene Lawler, professor of education; Dr Coyle Moore, dean of the school of social welfare; Dr Richard Morse, professor of family economics; Dr Guenter Schwarz, head of the physics department; and Dr. Francis Walton, head of the classics department.

Fiveash, Corso Pace FSU; Corso Suffers Concussion

Thirty thousand fans watched the Seminoles fall beneath the power and superior reserve strength of a hungry Miami team Friday night.

The Miami team, hungry for both victory and an impressive margin of points, was held scoreless in the first 25 minutes of play by a determined but overmatched Seminole squad

Bobby Fiveash, a letterman, and Lee Corso, a rookie, played a large part in keeping the 'Canes' first half almost scoreless. Fiveash came close to being a 60-minute iron man, while Corso was knocked out of the game late in the second quarter.

FIVEASH DEADLY

Fiveash, especially, was a fly in Miami's ointment that they will long remember He was everywhere, blocking, tackling, knockdown enemy aerials, and lugging the leather like an all-American. He was credited with 8 tackles and 6 assists He carried the ball 9 times for 35 net yards and a 3.8 average.

Corso held the reins superbly until a slight concussion put him out of the game. Corso's injury seemed to "open the gates" for the Hurricanes. After he left the field, the Miami offense seemed to take hold and they started scoring.

VOLUME TELLS

Later, though, Coach Nugent thought it was sheer volume of manpower that wore the Indians down. The Hurricanes rotated three top-rate teams in succession. These fresh teams proved to be too much for the weary Seminoles, who for the most part, stayed in until injuries forced them out

The Tribe played a defensive ball game for the most part, electing to kick when they won the toss The first quarter went by with Miami coming close several times and running head-on into a steel line that couldn't be broken, bent, or gotten over. Then with slightly more than 4 mintues remaining in the first half, Rouviere lugged the leather over after a pass had set things up on the three

Miami then whipped up two more TD's in the third period to run the score up to 21-0 In the final 15 seconds of the game Miami had driven to the FSU 8 yard line They lined up without a huddle and James rifled a throw to Shields that was good for the final score of the night. The try-for-point was wide and the game ended with Miami on the top side of a 27-0 score.

Public Administration Students Intern At State Capitol

PUBLIC Administration Students

The School of Public Administration trains students for positions in government and positions which involve close relations with governmental officials.

The school is interested mainly in training leaders in government and offers a program that will give students a keen insight into government as it actually operates.

GRADUATES OF THE school are now holding important positions in the federal government, in the Florida State government and in city and county governments.

Every year the top officials of the Florida State government and top officials of the Federal government are brought into the classroom. Throughout the year the staff of the school is advising and helping governmental officials.

THE SCHOOL'S internship program offers students the opportunity on a part-time or full-time basis to work in a governmental office and see government from the inside. This internship program also helps students to secure god positions in government.

The school offers two different curricula for students going into career positions in the administrative branch of government and for those who expect to obtain a law degree before entering some phase of government.

THE PUBLIC service curriculum has been developed to prepare students for career positions in state, federal, or local governmental administration, such as personnel administrator, budget or fiscal officer, public relations officer, city manager, city planner, and other governmental positions involving executive responsibilities.

The pre-law and public service curriculum has been developed for students who plan to obtain a law degree, after their undergraduate degree, and who wish to combine the practice of law with service in the State Legislature, the courts, the Congress, or a city council or county commission. Both curricula provide internship experience and the opportunity to see the state government in action, including sessions of the Florida Legislature and its committees, the State Cabinet, the Florida Supreme Court and sessions of city and county governing bodies.

FOR STUDENTS in the pre-law and public service curriculum the internship is generally arranged in the Office of the Attorney General or the Legislative Reference Bureau.

The school also has an active research program to aid governmental officials in meeting problems of government. These research activities have increased to such an extent that a separate research unit called the Bureau of Governmental Research and Service was recently set up within the School of Public Administration.

SINCE ITS establishment the school has conducted many research services for committees and individual members of the Legislature, the governor, the state department heads, and local officials.

The program of the school has become widely known throughout the United States and abroad. The enrollment in the school includes students from many other states as well as students from Florida, and even from foreign countries.

LAST JUNE three students from El Salvador who have been studying in the school for one and one-half years returned to their country after receiving certificates in Public Administration from the school.

In 1952, 265,430 pedestrians were injured in U. S. traffic accidents.

Principals Try Wednesday For Roles In 'Fledermaus'

Tryouts for the principal roles in Die Fledermaus, an opera to be presented in December by the Light Opera Guild, will be held tomorrow from 7-9:45 p.m., in the Choral Room of the Music Building.

All students at Florida State University who have a singing and acting talent are invited to attend these tryouts, according to Dr. Robert L. Briggs, director of the Guild. Tryouts for chorus members will be conducted during the week of October 5 at a time to be announced later. Miss Betty Jane Grimm will act as chorus and stage director of the production.

THIS MODERN VERSION of the operetta by Johann Strauss, famed for his beautiful waltz music, will be presented in English with new lyrics and libretto by Garson Kanin and Howard Dietz. It is the most exciting and difficult work thus far attempted by the Light Opera Guild, Dr. Briggs said. It is a hilarious comedy and contains some of the finest music from the pen of Strauss.

Principal roles include: Gabriel von Eisenstein (tenor), a well-to-do gentleman who, though supposedly resting in a jail cell on the charges of having kicked the tax collector in the stomach, attends a fancy dress ball in disguise where he makes love to Rosalinda (soprano), who is really his own wife incognito.

ADELE (soprano), their maid, has also found a reason to attend the ball dressed as another. In the meanwhile, Alfred (tenor), a wild oat, is paying the penalty of being caught alone with Rosalinda by Frank (baritone), the warden; and being mistaken for her husband, is languishing in a jail cell guarded by Frosch (non-singing comedian), the jailer.

Dr. Blind (tenor) is Eisenstein's lawyer whose incompetent defense managed to increase the sentence from one week to two, and Dr. Falke (baritone), the noted ballmaster, is really at the heart of all this intrigue, which is designed to amuse Prince Orlafsky (mezzo-soprano), youthful host at the ball. The part of Ida, Adele's sister is played by an actor and is a non-singing role.

ANYONE WHO is interested in helping with the production in any way — as members of a stage crew, properties, wardrobe, makeup, lighting, or acting as a rehearsal accompanist should attend of the tryout periods in order to fill out an assignment card.

The Light Opera Guild presents one such musical each fall. In the past its members have been responsible for such successful productions as The Mikado, The Pirates of Penzance, Roberta, and Sweethearts.

A LARGE CHORUS will be used in this production which was revised for the Metropolitan Opera Association in 1950. The presentation will also feature a fine accompanying orchestra and will be staged in the Opperman Music Hall.

Graduate Students Hold Meet Friday

This coming Friday evening at 7:30 P. M. in the upper lounge and auditorium of the Alumni Building, the students of the Graduate Class will hold their Fall election meeting. The meeing will begin with a general mixer with refreshments being served at 7:30.

The officers for the coming year will be elected, beginning at about 8:00 P. M. The nominating committee has prepared a slate of candidates but nominations from the floor will be accepted if the nominee is present. After the installation of officers, there will be a general discussion period during which the graduate students may advise their new officers concerning the program desired for the coming year.

THIS IS the second meeting of the Graduate Class this semester. An informal mixer was held in Landis Recreation Room last Monday evening, the 21st of September. The group of about 80 students was led in several party games by Dr. Bill Tait. Afterwards refreshments were served.

Last year the Graduate Class sponsored a regular Thursday Graduate Luncheon at which men and women, distinguished in many different fields, spoke on topics ranging from Dr Doak Campbell's "Southern Regional Education" to "Contract Research in the Spectroscopy Laboratory" by Dr. Kasha, Ross and Reesley:

IN ADDITION, there were several social events sponsored, the last one being a dinner-dance sponsored jointly with the Dames, the married women student's university organization. At the meeting this coming Friday evening, a program for this year's Graduate Students is expected to be worked out.

Grady Named Dade County Demonstrator

Miss Eunice Grady, former Dade County home demonstration agent, has been appointed assistant to Miss Anna Mae Sikes, State Home Demonstration Agent, who announced the appointment today.

In this capacity Miss Grady will also be an associate professor of home demonstration education in the Florida State University School of Home Economics. She will train girls majoring in home economics who are planning careers in home demonstration work.

Miss Grady said the training program will include one semester of introductory work concerning the basic ways of carrying on home demonstration work. She said this is to be followed by six weeks of field work in Florida counties under the direction of the county home demonstration agent.

"After the field work comes advanced courses in which the girls will study the whole extension program, how to develop general policies, organization, administration and other factors," Miss Grady said.

Miss Grady received her BS and MS degrees from the Florida State College for Women. She served as home demonstration agent in Suwannee County for three years and in Dade County for the past 16 years.

She was a home economics teacher in Bradenton High School, Bradenton; dietitian and instructor in home economics in the Ringling Art School and Junior College; home economics teacher in Pompano High School, Pompano, and home economics teacher, Pensacola High School, Pensacola.

FSU Graduate School Ranked 8th In South In Student Enrollment

More than 2,000 graduate students took work on the FSU campus during the academic year 1952-53 or the summer session of 1953.

The FSU Graduate School now ranks as the eighth largest in the South in the number of students enrolled during the regular academic year.

DURING THE calendar year 1952, for example, 211 master's degrees were conferred and during the calendar year 1953, 238 master's degree have been conferred.

Doctoral degrees were first conferred by FSU in 1952. Three degrees were conferred in that year. During 1953, 15 degrees in speech, Spanish, psychology and the inter-divisional program in marriage and family life counseling were conferred. Also during the year, the board of control approved the addition of another department, sociology, in which a doctor of philosophy degree may be earned.

THE RAPID growth of the Graduate School has necessitated the appointment of an assistant dean. Dr. Dwight Goodner has been appointed to that position. He will still give one-half his time to his duties as an associate professor of mathematics.

FSU has a very active research program. A major part of the expense of these research projects is paid by government agencies. These research projects provide valuable educational opportunities to graduate students as

United Nations Did Not Lose In Korea --- Neel

The United Nations did not lose the Korean War.

This is the firm conviction of Dr. Samuel Neel, chaplain of Florida State University in Tallahassee, and formerly chaplain with the 31st Regiment of the 7th Infantry Division in Korea.

"I CAN UNDERSTAND," he said, "why people are pessimistic about the post-truce peace conference, because in the past the Communists have used peace negotiations to gain objectives which they failed to gain by force."

"But to say that we lost the Korean War makes a mockery of what may prove to be one of the most important conflicts in the history of the world."

DR. NEEL SAID that those who say we lost the war seem to think that if we had conquered North Korea we would have been victorious. He said these persons think in terms of territorial gain.

"The truth is," the combat chaplain said, "if we had launched a successful drive to the Yalu we would have been far from victory. As long as the Communists kept troops massed in Manchuria, United Nations troops would have been pinned down on the Yalu."

THE CHAPLAIN pointed out that the line the United Nations troops would have had to defend would have been four times as long as the present battle line. He said on the Yalu the United Nations supply lines would have been over-extended and Communist airplanes based in Manchuria would have had a field day bombing and strafing the United Nation's Yalu positions.

"A drive to the Yalu would not have won the war," Dr. Neel said. "It would have simply transferred the stalemate further north."

DR. NEEL said that the United Nations did win important territory in Korea because the line that divides North and South Korea is now mostly north of the 38th parallel, is in a much more defensible position than the one South Korea occupied before the war.

The Army chaplain re-emphasized that the major gains in Korea are not territorial. He said the real gains are:

1. The manner in which 53 nations of the world rallied to the defense of helpless South Korea represents a revolutionary step forward in the building of a world in which all nations may live together in accordance with the principles of freedom and justice. Not only did these nations declare the Communists aggressors, but most of them sent personnel and material to help this tiny nation in its time of need.

2. Even the smallest nations now have the assurance that they will be protected if they desire to resist Communist invasion, or the invasion of any other aggressive regime. Immediately after July, 1950 Communism began to lose ground in the free nations.

3. The Kremlin has been thwarted in its scheme to gain speedy control of the Orient, and consequently a Soviet attack upon the west and the launching of World War II have been postponed for the time being and possibly indefinitely.

4. The Communist leaders have been forced to admit that there are thousands of former Communists who prefer life under democratic governments to life under the totalitarian rule of Communism.

THE UNITED STATES suffered 140,000 casualties in the Korean War, not to mention casualties among other members of the United Nations, the chaplain said. "Only time will tell whether or not the United Nations' gains in the war were worth the price," Dr. Neel said. "But I wish to assure the families of those soldiers who suffered and died in Korea that there is abundant evidence that the Korean War was not lost."

Arts Education Offers Course In Watching Children Playing

Every Saturday morning from now on, FSU students will find youngsters having the time of their lives working with clay, paint and paper.

A series of Saturday Children's Art Classes beginning September 26 is being offered by the arts education department. Children in these classes will have the opportunity to paint, to model with clay and to construct articles in various crafts.

Classes will be available to both younger and older children in four-week blocks. There will be one group for students six to 10 years of age and another for students 11 to 17 years of age.

These will be limited to 15 to a group. The first group will meet September 26. New classes will be started on October 31 and December 12 for those who cannot be enrolled for the first class.

Classes for six through 10 years old will meet from 9 to 10 a.m. and for 11 through 17 years old from 10:30 to 12.

Registration for the first three groups in the series of classes will take place on Wednesday, September 23, from 4 to 7 p.m. in 112 Education Building. There is no tuition charge for the Saturday morning classes.

Children will be taken for classes in the order in which they appear for registration. No advanced applications can be accepted. Registration for the four groups planned for the remainder of the year will take place at a date to be announced later.

Campus Fraternities Pledge 260 During Rush Week

Carothers Calls For Withdrawal From FISGA

Senate Hears Talk; Closes Sons Action On Flambeau Past

Milton Carothers, President of the Student Body, suggested in a speech to the Senate yesterday afternoon that our Student Government Association withdraw from the Florida Inter-collegiate Student Government Association He suggests that FSU unite with several of the larger schools in the southeastern area to form a similar organization comprised of universities equal in size and problems.

Although Carothers mentioned the pending vacancy of the Editorship of the Flambeau, the Senate adjourned without taking action to approve Bruce Galphin, editor-designate, to fill the vacancy.

THE PRESIDENT of the Student Body suggests that the difference "in the student government field in the small privately endowed schools are very different from those experienced by a large state university." Carothers feels that as we are the only state university at present in the FISGA, it would be best [illegible] Duke and Washington [illegible] this organization and seek greater benefit from an organization in which the universities share similar problems and similar conditions. A planning meeting will be held in Atlanta on October 10 to consider the advisability of a southeastern organization of this type. Carothers states that he has corresponded and met with the President of the Student Body of Emory University and has found [illegible] enthusiastic. A joint [illegible] has been sent out to the Universities of Florida Tennessee Kentucky, Mississippi, Alabama and Duke and Washington and Lee to attend the meeting in Atlanta

HIS SPEECH to the Senate was very optimistic and he expressed his hopes that the year ahead would be one of closer cooperation among all phases of the administration and the students. Said Carothers, "I am pleased to announce to the sen-

Warpath Club Sets Card Section Aside For Football Game

A card-section has been planned for tomorrow night's football game at Campbell Stadium it was announced by the Warpath Club, sponsors.

THE CARD-SECTION, traditional at most college football games, involves a system of multi-colored cards placed in various sections of a marked-out part of the stands in the stadium The card-section will be placed directly behind the band in the center section on the student side of the stadium.

White markers will show where students will sit in the card-section Each row within the section holds thirty people and every fifth seat in the row will be numbered. All the rows in the section will be numbered from A through T.

WARPATH CLUB will pass out to those in the card section mimeographed instructions about the card "tricks" to be done through the game. "Tricks" involve holding the cards above the head in different positions and at different times. Tricks will be designed to spell out combinations of words and letters.

In former years, the card section has lent much to the excitement and panorama of FSU football games, said Paul Wragg, of the Warpath Club. "An effective showing," he added, "can only depend on the performers' cooperation." Wragg said he hopes for a big showing to make this year's card-section a big success, and urges everyone to show up at the game to fill up the Section.

Flambeau Meeting Scheduled Today

The Flambeau meeting that had previously been postponed because of the death of the governor will be this afternoon at 5 in the Flambeau office, Alumni Building. This meeting is for those students interested in working in any department of the student newspaper.

Both freshmen and upperclassmen are invited to come —and especially those students who left their names in the office of the newspaper during orientation week.

Fulbright Scholarships Enable Students To Study Abroad

Applications for Fulbright Scholarships, the federal grant-in-aid which send American students abroad for study, must be filed by October 31, Dr. Albert Leduc of the FSU faculty said today.

ANY DESERVING student, graduate or senior in an accredited American college or university can qualify for the grant which finances a year's study in such countries as the United Kingdom, France, Italy and Australia, to mention a few Dr. Leduc said the United States government allots 1 million dollars to each country that was an ally in the second World War, sending as many American students to that country for study as the grant permits. Many students receive $2 thousand for their year's study, he added.

Two things are necessary to qualify for the competition, Dr. Leduc said. The student must have a good reason for going and be must be able to show how such study will benefit him and society at large.

THE APPLICANT can choose his field of study; there are no restrictions on this. However, the choice of field will determine the practicability of the trip in the eyes of the judges. If, for instance, a man wants to study floral arrangement in Paris, the judges would question it's usefulness. However, if a student showed a genuine interest and ability to study engineering in Paris, and had the marks to prove he could do it, be would have a good chance of being sent, Dr. Leduc said.

One other requirement stipulates that the student must know the language of the country to which he wants to go. Everything else in order, if a man or woman doesn't know French. be or she cant' go there

DR. LEDUC SAID Florida State University receives an average of from 12 to 20 applications per year. However, he said, last year the only qualifying candidate from Florida was a girl from University of Miami who went abroad. He said it would be gratifying if a student from FSU should make it this year, adding that it would be well worth the try.

Those wishing further information on the scholarship and applications can see Dr. Leduc, Education Building.

Announcement also came from Colin English, senior class president, that Senior Investiture, the ceremony at which seniors are recognized as this year's graduates, has been changed to October 29.

English said all seniors should have their caps and gowns at that time if they want to participate in the traditional ceremony.

Sigma Xi Hears Nobelist Block Monday Night

Dr. Felix Bloch, professor of physics at Stanford University and Nobelist in physics, will discuss "Nuclear Magnetism," at a meeting of Sigma Xi, national science honorary, at Florida State University, in 124 Science Building, October 5, at 8 p. m.

The meeting is open to the public without charge.

Dr Bloch will discuss how scientists can measure nuclear magnetism and learn more about the fundamentals of matter.

The speaker was awarded the 1952 Nobel Prize in physics jointly with Dr. Edward M. Purcell of Harvard. His fields of science as listed in American Men of Science include electron theory of metals, quantum theory of ferromagnetism, stopping power of matter, X-ray phenomena and magnetic moments of nuclei.

Born in 1905 at Zurich, Switzerland, Dr. Bloch was educated in Switzerland and Germany and did advanced study in Holland, Denmark and Italy. He joined the Stanford University faculty in 1932, and has spent a number of years in war research work.

Dr. Bloch is a fellow in the American Physical Society and a member of the National Academy of Sciences. He has contributed about 50 articles on atomic physics to science publications since 1927. He is now on a national Sigma Xi lecture tour which includes more than 30 colleges and universities.

Traffic Prohibited On Two Streets For Initial Game

Florida State University Business Manager Rod Shaw announced today that several streets will be barred from auto traffic and set aside for pedestrian use only for the Saturday night football game.

Mr. Shaw said West Jefferson St. From the Alpha Omicron Pi house to the Delta Tau Delta House and from there onto West Pensacola to Doak Campbell Stadium will be blocked off for use by those walking to the game. He said this has been done successfully before in an effort to relieve the congested parking and traffic conditions around the stadium.

"We urge that as many as possible walk to the game," Mr. Shaw added. "This will make possible speedier seating and less crowding all the way around."

Club To Show Classic Films Of 8 Nations

Seventeen films of wide cultural value and international flavor will be shown at the university under the auspices of the Florida State University Film Club, formerly the Newcomer's Film Club of F.S.U. Faculty Wives.

THE SHOWINGS are open to all students, faculty and towns people, and season membership is $2.50. This entitles a member to see each film for only 15c, and three free guest admissions are in the same package.

Membership hit only 450 last season, and Mr. George Hellman local chairman, is hoping the 600 seats offered this year will sell out. The club is a non-profit organization. Last year they sponsored a scholarship at the university for a blind student.

FOUR OF THE films are American, four are British, three are Russian, two are French, and one Italian, Mexican, Swedish and German. Two of the films to be shown have won awards at the Cannes Film Festival. Most notable in the series is The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, produced in 1919. It is considered the most famous of experimental films, and one of the greatest classics ever put on celluloid.

The British have two outstanding productions in Quartet, four splendid stories from the works of W. Somerset Maugham, and Kind Hearts and Coronets, where Alec Guinness, one of the outstanding actors living today, plays eight different roles.

OTHER FILMS are: My Man Godfrey starring Carole Lombard and William Powell; Mussorgsky; Devil and Daniel Webster starring Walter Huston; American Folk Music and Man of Aran, a double feature. Il Trovatore; Ballet Russe and Time in the Sun, a double feature; Song of Ceylon; Nais; Torment; Casque D'or; Lost Horizon starring Ronald Coleman; and The Grand Concert.

Eleven of these showings will be held in Opperman Music Hall, while three will require double showing in Longmire Auditorium, with performances at 6:30 and 8:30

APPROXIMATELY a week before each film is shown, program notes are sent to each subscriber, which gives a review of the film, as well as reminding the subscriber of the time and place.

Membership in the film club may be obtained by sending $2.50 in money order or check to the FSU Film Club, Florida Hall.

Service Fraternity Plans Convention On FSU Campus

Three officers of Alpha Phi Omega, national service fraternity, combined business with pleasure this past week-end as they prepared plans for a state convention of the group. The University of Miami's chapter is to be invited.

President Bert McIntosh, vice president David Dreis and corresponding secretary Tom Simmons were the officers attending the meeting on Miami's campus.

"IT WAS WELL worth while," commented McIntosh. "The Miami chapter will send us a list of dates which they will be able to meet. We hope the Circus weekend will be the one they choose."

Secretary Simmons will be the person with whom the Miami chapter will communicate. Plans to visit Florida's campus are also on tap and Simmons is communicating with them in order to find out what dates they will be free.

Kellogg Finds Porpoises Creak, Click, Grind

By BRUCE M. GALPHIN

"Silent as the seas" is a phrase which should be removed from our speech, according to Dr. Winthrop Kellogg. Instead, he finds the sea full of fish which make sounds like "creaking doors, "Bronx cheers," thumpings, clickings, grindings, croaks or honks.

Dr. Kellogg is a man who would know. Known world wide for his studies in the theory of learning, including an experiment in raising his child with a chimpanzee, Kellogg has recently undertaken a project of studying underwater noises.

FISH SOUNDS are of more than academic interest. It was the United States Navy which sponsored his work, in fact. It seems that the natural noises of inhabitants of the ocean confuse operators of underwater listening devices, such as sonar, and the Navy would like to know how to distinguish the tin fish from the real ones.

Dr Kellogg actually spent most of his time studying sea-dwellers which are mammals rather than fish: namely porpoises. He studies these animals all around the Florida area, including at Alligator point, Marineland, Daytona Beach's Sea Zoo and the Bahama Islands.

THE BOTTLE-Nosed Porpoise, for instance, has two distinct types of calls: a canary-like whistle, usually uttered in pairs, and a series of rapid, clicking noises which resemble the "raspberry" or "Bronx cheer."

At the first meeting of Sigma Xi, science honorary, last Wednesday in Science Lecture Hall, Dr. Kellogg said that there are several explanations of why porpoises make these sounds. Some people have suggested that the mammals are communicating with each other; some feel that there is no "reason" at all. The hypothesis Kellogg holds most creditable is that the porpoises are orienting themselves in space, much as a bat does by hearing the reflections of his high-pitched screech. Porpoises often swim in dark depths, at night, or at high speed, and presumably they need some method of telling where they are under these circumstances.

THE HYPOTHESIS has quite good substantiation. First of all it was established that porpoises hear. They were seen to jump noticeably at sounds ranging from 100 to 80 thousands cycles per second. Next, underwater tape recordings taken by Dr. Kellogg and his group indicate that the sounds are of such a nature that they are capable of echoing. Finally it was noticed that when a sound-producing agent was introduced into the water, porpoises seemed to approach and "hear things over."

It is still a mystery just how these creatures produce the sounds that have been recorded, for they have no vocal chords. It is possible that they utilize the blowholes on the tops of their skulls.

ALTHOUGH Dr. Kellogg has contributed a great deal to the study of underwater noises, he says it is still a "wide open field."

Elke Frank, wh elikes to joke that sheis a "hamburger, all the way from Hamburg, Germany," is shown above with three girls from AOPi, the sorority which is sponsoring her. Seated in the Alumni Building's Soda Shop are Sue Allen, sorority chapter philanthropic chairman; Ardreen Miller, president of the local AOPi; Miss Frank and Anne Blitch, past chapter philanthropic chairman.

Elke Frank, Oxford-Accented German Girl, Enrolls After Combined Effort by Many

Safely arrived at Florida State University and enrolled as a freshman, 19-year old, blonde, blue-eyed Elke Frank of Hamburg, Germany has attained a goal she has been working toward for a year and a half.

She was welcomed to the campus by Sam Baptista, a graduate assistant in student welfare who is serving as co-ordinator of the university's more than 70 foreign students. Several Alpha Omicron Pi girls immediately took her under their wing, and helped her through various registration steps.

"IT IS the most puzzling place, but a beautiful puzzle," she said after registering. "I have never seen so many happy children running around in one place, all so friendly and helpful."

She speaks excellent English with an Oxford-like accent, but says she is going to work for a southern drawl.

"I'M A hamburger, all the-way, from Hamburg, Germany," is the best introduction to fellow students she has hit upon for herself.

It was Easter time in 1952 that Miss Frank first visited Tallahassee and saw the FSU campus. She has been trying to get back to it ever since, finally made it, although a full year for her back in Hamburg with her family intervened.

THE YOUNG German girl could not have realized her ambition of returning to America on a student visa, bound for FSU, by herself. It took many people, pulling all sorts of strings for more than a year.

Dr. Doak S. Campbell, president of FSU, United States Senator Spessard L. Holland, former U. S. Senator Claude Pepper, and William Powers, chairman of the State Board of Control, are among the influential people who were instrumental in Elke's return.

MR. AND MRS. Clarence Mayo of Tallahassee and the FSU chapter of Alpha Omicron Pi, national social sorority, have played a big part in getting the slender German girl established for her freshman year.

The Mayos have taken her into their home as a foster daughter, and the sorority girls are befriending her on campus, paying all her registration and textbook expenses.

THE UNIVERSITY granted her a special scholarship. And a score or more friends and well wishers in Birmingham and Tallahassee made up a fund for her passage to America.

Elke first came to America as an exchange high school student for the school year 1951-52. Sponsored by the American Field Service, she was one of five chosen from 2,000 teen-agers applying in Hamburg for the American-European exchange.

THE FIVE were rated highest on scholarship, leadership and all around adaptability requirements.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Pyfe of Birmingham gave Elke a home during her first year in America. They became interested in the exchange program when their daughter, Patricia, was a UNESCO junior delegate. Elke won the affection of her adopted family, and that was how she got to Tallahassee and a look at FSU in the first place. Mrs. Pyfe of Birmingham and Mrs. Mayo of Tallahassee are sisters.

HAVING already had a little experience in working on the largest women's magazine in Western Germany, Constanze, Elke has decided to major in journalism. By next semester, she hopes to take some art courses because she is also interested in painting.

Right now, Elke's main concern is to find a job. She wants to be independent, and to get as much practical experience as possible while attending the university. She hopes to earn a degree at FSU in three years by taking summer as well as regular school year work.

SHE SAID she feels a little homesick at present, more than that first time in Birmingham.

"Everything was new and more exciting then than now," she said. "Also, I knew than I would be away from my family only a year, now I would like to stay at least three years."

BACK IN Germany last year, she was homesick for America—lost 26 pounds worrying about ways and means of returning. She is determined not to repeat the performance in America because "there would be nothing left of me." She is 5'5" tall and weighs 110 pounds.

The AOPi's at FSU are delighted with Elke. They are making her their protege. She has a standing invitation for as many meals as she can work into her schedule at their chapter house.

AND OF course she thinks they are all wonderful.

West Hall to Get Half-Hour Service For Shuttle Buses

Special bus service to and from West Hall and Mabry Heights has been set up, Florida State University Business Manager Rod K. Shaw announced yesterday.

STARTING MONDAY morning at 7 a bus marked West Hall will leave from behind Westcott on the hour and half hour. The bus will arrive at West Hall at 7:15 a.m. and every 15 and 45 minutes after the hour. Other stops, Mr. Shaw said, will include the beginning of the parking lot at the Student Center, and the Maintenance Building for passengers to and from English and ROTC classes.

Arriving at West Hall, most distant residence hall from main campus, the bus will enter the large parking lot off West Call St., and stop at the junction of the lot and the main driveway, then proceed down the driveway to W. Call again, making a stop at the corner for passengers from Mabry, neighboring subdivision.

MR. SHAW WARNED that students going to West Campus should not get on the bus marked West Hall, as the two routes through East Campus are identical as far as the Student Center. He added that the bus will run daily until 5 p.m.

McCarty Leaves Record Of Competence, Integrity

The State of Florida and the students of this university have suffered a severe loss with the untimely death of Governor Dan McCarty. We mourn his passing and pay tribute to his achievements—and they were many, despite his short tenure of office.

He was a man imbued with all the qualities necessary to exemplary leadership. Ability, integrity, firmness of purpose, and courage in the face of adversity were McCarty's main fortes in his quest for "a better state." For such was his goal.

And he was a man of sincerity and faith, staunch in his convictions of right and wrong. In his inaugural address he promised "a good government housecleaning" in which "the dirt—and rust—and corrosion . . . must go."

He acted forcefully upon his words. Some 700 persons were chopped from the state payrolls. Effective enforcements against vice and corruption throughout the state were instigated. Non-competitive business practices by the state were curtailed. Purchasing was coordinated to eliminate waste.

McCarty gave notice that he would not tolerate incompetency and corruption.

It was apparent that he was making good his promise that his was not to be an administration of "sounding brass or tinkling cymbal."

An insight into the character of the 31st governor of Florida, who received the largest vote in the history of the state, may be gained from his action in turning over his $3,000 annual raise to state university scholarship funds. He commented that he did not feel that he should accept it since he was elected to a $12,000 a year job.

McCarty was opposed to an additional taxation burden on the people. He did not feel that it was necessary to the promotion of economic stability, sound growth, and continued prosperity. He advocated a state government that is "morally clean, rock-ribbed efficient, and at the same time dynamically progressive . . ."

To lose such a man at the zenith of his career is, indeed, tragedy.

But we will remember his actions and his words; we will especially remember these words which he spoke near the conclusion of his inaugural address:

"Under our democratic process in the final analysis, the future is determined by the expressed desire of the peoples governed. I am determined to perform my duties as your chief executive in a manner that will clearly reflect credit not only on this administration but on all our state and its people. I believe that the words of Daniel Webster express my hope as completely as anything I know. I quote:

" 'Let us develop the resources of our land, call forth its powers, build up its institutions, promote all its great interests, and see whether we also, in our day and generation, may not perform something worthy to be remembered.' "

We believe that Dan McCarty has succeeded in performing something worthy to remember.

● FILM CLUB

One of the commonest complaints made about motion pictures by those competent to judge is the poor literary and dramatic quality of average productions. Locally, the regret is often expressed that there are almost no showings of top-flight foreign films.

This year, however, the Florida State University Film Club has scheduled a total of 17 excellent motion picture productions from all over the world. Included are such notables as Kind Hearts and Coronets, Il Trovatore, Ballet Russe, Lost Horizon, Quartet, and The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, credited with being the earliest psychological thriller.

The FSU Film Club grew out of the Newcomers Film Club of faculty wives, which last year had a membership of 450. This year, in order to cover costs, the non-profit organization needs to enlist 600 members. The cost of a season ticket, which includes three free guest admissions is $2.50, or about 15 cents per showing.

Since the club is not run by students, it may not actively seek subscribers among them, but students are welcome and a large number attend regularly.

We feel that the club is a worthy endeavor, so we are passing the information along to our readers. A news story on page one includes more details.

Last Word on 'The Most': Real Clyde

By BOB FOLSOM

Anyone who listens to and enjoys good music—whether it be popular tunes that make the hit parade, progressive jazz, bebop, folk and hillbilly, or classical, light and opera—practically always look to the radio stations and its disk jockeys to keep them well informed.

The aficionados go further, by not only listening to what the disk jockeys have to say and play, but also, by reading what there is on the subject, and buying their particular type of wax. In the other category—usually classed as popular or hillbilly—the good majority of music lovers are content just to remain hep. And when the first few bars of a tune are played, they usually recognize the artist and tune immediately. These are the people who play their own favorite selections on the jukeboxes, and by doing so are actually the people who select the hit parade tunes.

The Capital City, while admittedly, does not have enough radio stations and enough time to devote to all the different kinds of music the aficionados and hepcats prefer, do have programs that play what you want, either by request or by the disk jockey's particular taste which you can rely on a good bit because of his constant exposure to music.

Disk jockeys are of all kinds. There are good ones and mediocre ones. The good you will hear eventually. One that has made the big time in a comparatively short period is Al "Jazzbo" Collins, a disk jockey with a program out of WNEW, New York City. Jazzbo is a character who wears horn-rim glasses, a string tie, a Van Dyke beard, and plays strictly jazz records. He is jazzdom's vocal contribution to the world of music. What puts the show over is Jazzbo's smooth and easy delivery, and he's ORIGINAL. His program originates from "The Purple Grotto (a figment of the imagination). The only electrical outlet is the microphone, records are played on a gramaphone: and assorted animals roam the deep, dark corridors of the Grotto—the only Tasmanian owl in existence with a pink eye, a cigar-smoking scorpion, and so on.

It's likely, only a few have heard him over his home station, but many know him as the narrator on a record titled "Little Red Riding Hood." The flip is titled "Three Little Pigs." Jazzbo puts life into these old fables by relating them in bop tones. "Grandma, what frantic eyes you have," said Red Riding Hood. "The better to dig you with my dear," said the wolf. "And Grandma," said Red, "your ears are the most, to say the least. Jazzbo recorded the fable on Brunswick label. It made a big hit, and he has since gone over to Capitol, where more of the same are coming out.

Following the lines of originality, another disk jockey came up with something different. This time on the west coast. Bop talkin Richard "Red" Blanchard is heard five nights a week over KCBS, San Francisco. For a long time, Red jockeyed a half hour program over KCBS, playing music and talking (it wasn't popular music, as the word popular goes), until he hit on an idea that exploded into a press agents dream. The "Zorch" craze. Zorch could be interpreted to mean "the most," or as one term simply puts it "colossal!" To be Zorch, teenagers wear purple lipstick, dye their hair green, pencil their eyebrows in red, or do anything to better the next person. Twenty-five bottle caps will earn you an "I Dread Red" card.

In a few months Red has zoomed the show up to the point where he is called the "uncrowned king of juvenile Northern California. Unfortunately the show will probably remain on the coast. Anyhow it's an enjoyable and crazy half-hour.

Actually it only takes a voice to make a radio announcer, but to be a good disk jockey, the voice must have ingredients. A different and clear quality that is easy to listen to, where talk comes naturally and rymthically and which people could fall asleep to, but, would much rather listen to. For that matter, there are disk jockeys who people would rather hear talk, and only occasionally throw a record on the turnstile.

All of which goes to show there's really only a pinpoint that puts these guys where they are. It may be knack, the delivery, or above all, a little more originality than before.

Newman Club To Explain Functions

Sunday's meeting of the Florida State University Newman Club will feature a brief explanation of the club's functions on local, province and national levels President John Pistone said today. A social mixer and refreshments will follow the meeting.

Pistone also reported that Father Raymond Amiro, chaplain, will offer daily Mass at the Newman House on College Ave. at 7 a.m. Monday through Friday. He urged Newmanites to receive Communion in a body at this Sunday's Mass which is held at 10 30 a.m. at the House.

Newman Treasurer Annette Straub said club dues of $2.75 for the semester or $5 for the year are payable at these rates before Christmas.

Stadium Policy Is Announcd

Several new stadium policies will be in effect for the coming season, Ralph Matherly athletic business manager, has announced.

This year, dates and guests of students (of school age) may pay the general admission price of .95 cents and be allowed to sit in the booster section. The booster section is in the center section of the east side just as last year.

Coach Matherly urged that all students enter from the east side, to avoid the confusion of crossing the field.

Fraternity pledges may not come early and hold sections of setas for their brothers. In the past, this has caused quite a bit of confusion and bad feeling toward fraternities.

Students who wish to purchase reserved or box seats may do so at the regular prices of $2.50 and $4.00. There will be no cut-rates on these seats for students.

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS by Dick Bibler

"Reminds me of freshman stunt night."

An Open Letter To Faculty, Staff

We should like to enlist your cooperation in making the Flambeau a newsy publication, carrying news of your school and department.

As you may know, we are seeking to strengthen the news coverage of the Flambeau and linking up two of our reporting classes to this semi-weekly. More than 50 reporters will be scurrying around the campus soon. Many of them will be green, some of them will be experienced.

They are learning methods of gathering and writing timely, interesting news. Many are learning their way around the campus for the first time.

We hope that you will receive them cordially and give them the news of your school or department as quickly and as completely as you can. They may not be acquainted with the courses and the work of your segment of the university. You will have to brief them at the begininng. They will cover your "beat" for several weeks or longer, and so in time they will have more adequate background.

They will ask questions but do not hesitate to volunteer information about phases of your work about which they do not inquire.

Some of your news may be technical, or complicated, or may require careful handling. We understand these problems, and we suggest you might (1) write out some of the facts ahead of time; (2) request a call-back, during which time you can write out the most important facts; (3) ask the reporter to write up the news and r-read it over the telephone to you or, if time permits, let you see it before publication. If you have an immediate story for publication, call the Flambeau, telephone 4821.

The reporters are working against deadlines. Please make arrangements to see the reporters covering your beat sufficiently ahead of time for him to get the news and write it up in time for the next Flambeau edition. He is graded on promptness, as well as on accurate and complete news stories.

With your help, we believe the editors of the Flambeau this year can publish a newspaper which will be truly a university-wide publication, serving students, faculty and staff members.

Reginald,

Just got back in town in time to get your letter . . . Bentley and I were in Bombay last week to attend Little Jelly's cocktail party (You remember Little Jelly, of course . . . the Maharajah of Jellapore . . . dreadfully fine little man . . but altogether too much money . . .) Somerset Maugham, of all people, was there . . . he's finally gotten a haircut . . . Gourelli and Helena Rubenstein were there too . . . their newest idea is to give up the Paris apartment and settle down on a farm in Iowa and raise five children . . . they all said to say hello to you . . . was really quite in keeping with Jelly's previous parties . . . several of the guests had too much champagne and ended up dancing off the terrace into the bay . . . as usual . . . I just hope that Jelly's having a party at the same time as the Marquis doesn't cause an international incident . . . you know they've never gotten along, and I'll swear Jelly did it just for spite . . . Bentley and I had a dreadful trip back . . . got involved in some local coup d'etat in one of the western provinces and were picked up as international spies or something . . . they let us go as soon as they found out Bentley owned the country lock, stock, and barrel . . . I'll never forget the time Louella got picked up as a suspicious character in Tangier . . . she does look funny behind bars . . . Saw that new American baritone, Etrana, last night in Il Trovatore at La Scala . . . really an inspiring performance . . . perhaps his best yet . . . I understand Rudolph is trying to sign him with the Met for next season . . .

Cheerio,
JEFFREY

P. S. Flying to Paris Sunday . . . will meet you at the Crillon for lunch.

Letters to the Editor . . .

Dear Editor:

Your editorial page for the issue of Sept. 29 does this school proud. Six (6) excellent pieces for adult reading plus your well-written editorials on the left show real promise for the future and a heart-warming ray of hope for pessimists.

I only wish we could get more students in this school of music to show the critical acumen of Robert Strane regarding records and concerts. And I am calling the piece by Richard Stevens to the attention of the Tallahassee Democrat. Underscoring the finest and most well-deserved crack of the season:

"The avgrage student can find more than enough to do during his spare moments in Tallahassee than to improve himself culturally" . . . How true!

More power to you!

Sales Tax Hits Low Income Groups

By BRUCE GALPHIN

A few years ago it would have been political suicide for a prominent Congressman to propose a national sales tax, for the New Deal was in its ascendency and people's attitude toward government, if not matured, at least was different.

During the '30's the egalitarian movement was strong, but nowadays people tend to forget the activities of those days, because the stimulus of the movement, i. e., the misery of the depression, is gone.

It is the contention of many that humans do not reason but react, do not think but feel. Though a rather doleful point of view to accept, it none-the-less does form a hypothesis capable of explaining the facts. It is difficult to see otherwise how people could again be persuaded to believe in the things which not so long ago caused them so much trouble.

The quaint and probably naive phrases the 1929 politician knew by heart seem to be creeping again into public acceptance.

The national sales tax is a case in point. There is no doubt that a sales tax is an effective one in two respects. It raises plenty of revenue, and it cuts down on excessive spending during times of inflation. But such a tax is based on a philosophy that it is the poorer classes which should bear the burden rather than the richer. If this is what the people want, then I would have no strong objections, but they ought to be aware of what is involved.

Since a sales tax is levied on purchases, then it is obvious that lower income groups will pay proportionately more than the higher income groups. Although those with more money may have more to spend, a man with a 300 thousand dollar a year income is not going to spend 10 times as much on purchases of goods as a man with a three thousand dollar income. This is just another way of saying that the sales tax is not a progressive or disproportionate tax.

In the modern theory of taxation, taxes are used for more to regulate the amount of money in circulation than to raise revenue, so this question of progressive versus flat rate is extremely pertinent. Under the Keynesian theory, the public should be taxed lightly in bad business times, in order that spending be encouraged. In times of inflation, people are taxed heavily in order to reduce spending. It is clear, then, that if taxes are to reduce spending, they must be levied in such a way as to be most effective.

Keynes showed that any one tax will affect different income groups in different ways. Taxing the lower income groups fairly will reduce spending much more effectively than taxing the higher income groups at the same rate, because the bulk of people lie in the lower and middle income brackets.

Thus to reduce spending the government may follow one of two courses. It may tax the poor moderately heavily or it must tax the rich very heavily. In the New Deal the latter course was followed and highly progressive income taxes levied. There were cries of socialism from some and in truth it was an egalitarian step, but for the most part the voters approved the procedure.

The temper of our times has definitely changed, as proved by the fact that this national sales tax is being widely proposed, and by the fact that an income tax ceiling amendment to the constitution has been ratified by a large number of state legislatures. I do not believe, however, that the public would allow a sales tax to be enacted if they knew what its implications were.

On Warding Off the Studying Grind

By BEVERLY LACAYO

We have seen all our old friends, the schedules have been straightened out, the newness is beginning to wear off . . and life settles once more to the prosaic level. Everything is either over or hasn't yet started. The Miami game has fallen from the "Do you think we might . . .?" to the "Well what did you expect, anyway" class; rushing is over and the idiotic grins have disappeared from people's faces. As one coed put it, "There's no Hell Week for the pledges, just for the Actives.

In short, just about now, the unimaginative student has to sit down and study for entertainment.

Chin up, though, the weekend is arriving. A quick look at "This Week," a weekly sheet published by the Public Relations office, shows that John Boda, professor of piano from the School of Music is giving a recital tonight. If he is up to his usual standards, it ought to be very good. This afternoon Dr. Hudson Rogers of the English department will read "They Grind Exceeding Small" by Ben Ames Williams over at the Westminster House on Copeland and Park. Saturday, of course, is our first home game, which no culturally minded student could afford to miss. Here we use the term culture in its broader sense as in "Behold the strange and varied products of our Western Culture!" Be sure to go Saturday night to Campbell Stadium and behold.

We recently overheard two sophomore boys debating the merits of going out for football. On the credit side were the glory, the trips, the scholarships. "But," said one, "That still doesn't make up for the hardships of keeping in training." "Oh that's not so bad, it just means . . ." "Listen, kid, it means you couldn't be doing any of the things yer dying to do right now." "Yeah guess you're right . . . That's pretty rough."

From the complaint department: We've heard more students grumbling about the bus schedules for West Campus. They now run every twenty-five minutes, which makes it rather weird when you try to divide twenty-five into sixty to find out when the buses leave. Last year they also had just two buses running during the day, however, by scheduling them twenty minutes apart students could count on a bus leaving every hour on the hour, and on buses at twenty after and twenty till. This way we never know if a bus will leave at five after, quarter after, ten till or twenty till the hour. Perhaps if enough students registered their complaints, something could be done about it. Call the labor shop, campus phone phone 4561.

For the purposes of ACADEMIC RESEARCH I'm conducting a survey to discover the campus opinion on brains versus beauty. Just answer the question, "Which, in your opinion, is more valuable brains or beauty?", put down any comments you may have and send it through the Campus Mail to Beverly Lacayo, Flambeau office. No names need be signed—but put down your sex as it will help to know in evaluating the answers. If you can, please do this before Tuesday as any answer which has too much thought behind it will be of no value for the purposes of this survey. Thank you kindly.

Movie Stars Good on Stage, Too

By DAVID DREIS

Those columnists who shouted that film stars couldn't flick a Zippo to a footlight performer may have to turn in their typewriters if any more camera characters make their reputations on the boards of New York.

In the past years, the members of the fourth estate had little resistance to their cause, for the flock of movie performers who were cast in leading roles were those so wrapped up in themselves that they didn't have time to give an adequate portrayal. But with time and keen competition, these have practically made like Autumn leaves and withered away.

It probably started with Henry Fonda returning to footlights he had scarcely known and scoring in Mister Roberts. Fonda was a good student and he turned his movie tutelage to an advantage instead of a drawback. Producer Leland Hayward brought him back in "Point of No Return." Again Fonda was a hit. Hollywood took notice.

Jean Arthur was given the old heave-ho by Paramount when the studio decided to cut costs. Here at last the star had a chance to return to the greasepaint and the 'live audience.' She did in Peter Pan. The play may have been an oldie by James Barrie; it may have been performed first in the 1900's, but it returned to a greater success than when it was played by Maude Adams. Again, the scribblers were screwy.

Vivian Blaine and Phil Silvers returned to the stage. Blaine in Guys and Dolls and Silvers in Top Banana. The trek toward the towers was on.

Richard Widmark is bowing out of his Fox contract and a steady stream of war pictures for the express purpose of being in plays. Joe Cotten, Vincent Price and James Stewart are constantly looking for good plays. The stuttering Stewart enjoyed doing Harvey so much that he will drop all film offers to be in another play.

Actress Joan Crawford, who seems a natural for heavy drama on the Great White Way, has been deliberating for many moons. Although she snatched the Oscar in 1946 for Mildred Pearce, previous to that role she was a dancer and appeared in light drama. However, that isn't the big deal that's keeping her away. Miss Crawford told reporters that she's got 'stage-fright.' She prefers the intimacy of six camera men perching in all directions, the director, producer, makeup man, costumer and naturally, the guided tour which visits the studio every fifteen minutes. Ah, intimacy.

Stanwyck, Gable and Ritter refuse to return. Debby Kerr and Sharl Boyay (Charles Boyer) have signed for coming Broadway roles. Jackie Cooper and Janis Paige made Remains To Be Seen and have fallen in love with the boards. They won't return to the screen.

At any rate, it will be interesting to see who hits o nthe stage. Some will feel like Lassie while others will get a new thrill never before realized. Even Sheba may come back.

MOVIETIME:

Romance in Old World and New Featured in Current Movies

By AL PIERCE

All the wonderfully romantic tales concerning princesses have long excited the imagination. They have been the subject of fairy tales, poems and plays and have been enjoyed and cherished by children and adults alike over the years. In William Wyler's new Paramount comedy "Roman Holiday," playing now until Tuesday at the State Theater, a captivating tale of just such a princess is skillfull and beautifully unravelled.

STARRING Gregory Peck, one of Movieland's most sought after leading men, and newcomer, audrey Hepburn, who was drafted from the legitimate stage after scoring hits in "Gigi" on the stage, "Roman Holiday" uses the time-proven premise of storytelling—that of a hopeless love between Royalty and a commoner. What Hollywood has done with the theme, is, reportedly, sheer delight.

Filmed entirely in Rome, Italy, "Roman Holiday" is a completely charming and frolicsome tale of a modern-day princess who, rebelling against her royal obligations, goes out on the city on her own. Here she meets Gregory Peck, American newspaperman who pretends not to know who she is. Together with his photog friend, Eddie Albert, they literally go "out on the town." Many of the situations throughout are rich in humor; others are deeply moving, warm and tender.

MANY WORLD famous landmarks make a colorful and fabulous background for the film. Street scenes, sidewalk shops and other historical monuments are recorded. Although in no sense a travelogue, "Roman Holiday" will give fans a complete picture of the famous "Eternal City."

Featured alongside "Roman Holiday" at the State is the premiere of a delightfully entertaining Grantland Rice Sportlight that pictures our own Florida State University Circus in the most recent film made of the famous group.

THE STAR students who perform on the high trapeze and the thrilling aerial acts are photographed from all angles and the familiar performances with the equally familiar faces to many here make this a must on the list of loyal Circus fans.

Currently showing at the Florida Theater is a double-header Walt Disney production. "The Sword and The Rose," Disney's colorful interpretation of Charles Major's perennially popular classic, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," in his first adult love story.

RICHARD TODD and Glynis Johns bring to life the headstrong love affair between Princess Mary Tudor, reigning beauty of the court of King Henry VIII, and Charles Brandon, commoner, and captain of the palace guards. Disney has recreated the pomp, the pageantry and the passions of one of the world's greatest romances in the age of golden knighthood. The constantly exciting romance of the Princess and the commoner lead the film through swashbuckling sword duels, undersea combat and high adventure, still retaining its tender moments. The care and exhaustive research used in translating "Sword and the Rose" to the screen has been hailed as one of modern day's best attempts at rolling back some of the purple pages of the past to give us a glimpse of the life and loves of yesteryear.

Featured with "Sword and the Rose" is another of Disney's popular nature fantasies, "Prowlers of the Everglades." The vivid camera report on the strange life of beast and bird in the great jungle marsh that time forgot, the film discloses the mysterious life in an area seldom invaded by humans since it first appalled the Spanish explorers.

THE TRUE-LIFE adventure "Prowlers of the Everglades" creates pulsating action as the screen shows one fight-to-the-death after another in the great struggle for existence in the dark interiors of the sometimes inaccessible Everglades.

FSU In Home Debut Against Louisville

Sands' Slants

by Tommy Sands
Flambeau Sports Editor

When Louisville rolls its vaunted Cardinals onto the ampbell green tomorrow night, pick out a slightly built ung man with a big No. 20 on his back and keep your es on him. For if past performances mean anything, d they usually do, young Mr. John Unitas is apt to put n quite a show.

Unitas

A junior, Unitas is already be- boomed for all-American hon- and his record apparently nds for itself. In 12 games as starter for the Cards, "Mr. arkplug", as he is labeled up uisville way, has completed 152 sses in 297 attempts for over 00 yards including 21 touch- wns—a phenomenal record in ybody's league.

Look what he did to the Semi- es the last time Louisville pped off here. Passed 21 times. ew 16 strikes for 198 yards and ee touchdowns, completing 12 in the first half. His efforts t season found him among the ion's top ten passers according NCAA statistics. Here's a sampling of some of his other 52 workdays as outlined in the Louisville sports publicity ochure:

Against Memphis State which turned back the Cards 29-25. "Rolling up 321 yards by completing 17 of 38 passes. John single-handedly kept Louisville in the running in this wild offensive game."

Against Xavier which topped Louisville 27-13. "18 completions in 32 tries good for 265 yards and both Card touchdowns, kept Louisville in the game."

We'll go along with that. And this year he's doing the punting, runs and holds down the safety slot. Dots all brudder.

Foes Had It Rough

Last week was a lean one for upcoming FSU opponents at ast on the score sheet. Excluding Louisiana Tech, of which ve had no report, exactly six of the Seminoles eight remaining foes fell by the wayside. In the plus department Mississippi Southern continued on its merry way, rolling over strong Parris Island Marine team, 40-0.

Parris Island, you remember was the well-stocked service outfit which thrashed Ft. Benning in the Christmas Bowl outing here last year. Tampa had little trouble with South Georgia College winning 33-0. Here's how the rest of the scoring went:

Stetson 0, Auburn 40.
VMI 13, George Washington 14.
Furman 0, Army 41.
Abilene Christian 7, Arkansas State 18.
N C State 7, North Carolina 29.

But as the man would say, "them boys ain't exactly slim pickins". Meaning of course Army, Auburn, North Carolina and Arkansas State. All are on the upswing after a couple of years in the wilderness. Army, incidentally was only a two-three touchdown pick over the Purples 'Canes.

Mississippi Southern at Tampa (two for the price of one).
Abilene Christian at Midwestern.
Louisiana Tech at Memphis State.
VMI at Richmond.
This is how the Tribe's worthy opponents line up this week:
Furman at Citadel.
Stetson vs. Western Kentucky.
N. C. State at George Washington.

Danford In Philly

Watch for an announcement soon on a proposed game between FSU and Villanova. Athletic Director, Howard G. Danford is in Philadelphia for a recreation association meeting and is expected to meet with Villanova officials in regard to ne proposed two-game series . . . Ed Sessions who use dto row some mighty fine baseball games for the Indians has aded his civvies for Uncle Sam's khaki. Tom Sebring, former Seminole gridder and track star was reportably in the same draft call with Sessions. Both are Tallahassee boys . . . Seems the draft also cut short on three others who were ticketed for duty with Tom Nugent's gridders this season. Hal Powell, Troy Barnes and Nat Polak. Polak is a member of the strong Ft. Jackson team . Three Seminoles have apparently left for happier hunting grounds. John Cuesta, Manuel Yglesias and Manuel Fernandez, the trio of Tampans who figured so prominently in Coach Ralph Matherly's diamond plans for '54 have reportedly entered the University of Tampa. Custa a catcher built along the lines of the Yanks Yogi Berra was the Indians leading sticker last Spring . . . Pound, one size 18 basketball shoe protruding from the office of cage Coach Bud Kennedy. Come on, Coach, whatcha' hidin'

Bobby Deserved It

It was a fitting honor that Bobby Fiveash, the Nuge's fine all-an dhalfback was named Back-of-the-Week by state sportswriters. Fiveash, the Bainbridge, Ga., product who is in the midst of climaxing a brilliant three-year career here, was all over the Orange Bowl last Friday night. He was the Seminoles leading ground-gainer with 49 yards, personally accounted for eight tackles and assisted with six more. It wasn't until the game was over and the reports came down from the pressbox that Bobby's rugged defensive play was recognised for what it was worth. Fiveash you remember was Don Veller's leading passer last year, completely 26 or 76 aerials for 278 yards and two TD's

Fiveash

After the game, Miami's Andy Gustafson was quoted to the effect that Bob could make anybody's ball club.

To Jimmy Lee Taylor the veteran end goes another nod for his standout performance against the Hurricanes. Taylor's name was among the nominations for the Lineman-of-the-Week which, of course, was won by Florida's Dan Hunter for his efforts in the Gators' scoreless tie with Georgia Tech.

Unitas Is Spark Of Card Attack

Kentuckians Are Slightly Favored; 11,000 Fans Expected to Watch Tilt

By TOMMY SANDS
Flambeau Sports Editor

Louisville and its high-geared passing attack moves into Campbell Stadium tomorrow night as the Seminoles lift the curtain on a rough six-game home schedule. Kickoff time is 8:00.

Florida State athletic officials are pointing for a turnout of around 11,000 which would equal last year's attendance when the Cards topped the Seminoles, 41-14

However, any FSU hopes for a win depend on how well Coach Tom Nugent's lads are able to bottle up Louisville's ace-in-the-hole Johnny Unitas who almost single-handedly was responsible for the Tribe's loss last year.

The junior sensation completed 18 tosses for 198 yards in that one, including three scoring passes. Another lad the Seminoles will have to watch is fullback Bob Kriever who has filled the shoes, and very ably, of the Cards bulldozing Jim Williams.

So, the Indians who dropped a well-played 27-0 verdict to Miami in the Orange Bowl last Friday spent most of the week on pass defense. But the heavy work wasn't neglected.

Wednesday the Seminoles went through one of their roughest days of the practice grind with a long hour-and-a-half scrimmage session topped off with a long passing drill.

Physically the FSU will be in near top shape save for tackles Don Powell and Jim Olsen. Powell, a starter in the Miami affair, is hampered by a leg injury but should see action.

Olsen, injured in a practice session before Miami still is favoring an ailing shoulder but may see duty. End Jimmy Lee Taylor came out of the Miami Scrap with a back injury but has recovered and will start.

With three exceptions the Tribe will send the same unit that took the field in last week's opener into tomorrow night's fray. However, new faces will be at both tackles. Al Makowiecki will fill in for Powell and George Boyer will start in place of Dwight Osha.

The other change may see Ronnie King at the fullback slot in place of Eddie Johnson.

Scale-wise, the Seminoles will weigh in at 201 in the line and 178 in the backfield while the Louisville forwards will average an even 200 and 186 in the backfield.

The probable starting lineups:

FSU			Louisville
(185)	Taylor	LE	Becker	(175)
(225)	Mako'ck	LT	Lively	(220)
(195)	Jacobs	LG	Lichvar	(200)

Coach Lauds Southerners

By the United Press

NEW YORK (P. — Everybody called it an amazing upset but the man who engineered it.

He acted as if he knew it would happen all the time.

"We're the most underrated football team in the country," says Thaddeus (Pie) Vann of "little" Mississippi Southern College, United Press Coach of the Week, two weeks ago.

"I'm not trying to take anything away from Alabama," he added. "Just wait and see. They still will finish near the top in the Southeastern Conference. And their coach, Red Drew, didn't sell us short either. It just seems that the press and radio boys overlooked us."

Vann, using a 27-man squad when he would liked to have poured in close to 50 men in a two-platoon lineup, wore down Alabama's boys and Southern scored two touchdowns in the final period for a 25-18 shaker of an upset.

Mississippi Southern rolled over Parris Island 40-0 last week.

"But I still think we would be better off if we could use two platoons," Vann insisted.

Last week, we hit on 20 wins, while missing eight, but five ties (including the Ga. Tech-Florida upset) knocked the percentage down to a lowly .606. But with a week's games under the old belt, there's confidence in this week's selections.

Friday's games include: Baylor over Miami, revenge at last . . . Southern Cal over Indiana, a romp . . . Citadel over Furman, in anybody's game . . Leon over Live Oak, the Lions have a coach now . . .

Saturday night Louisville invades Tallahassee for the second straight year. They don't have Williams at full, but Unitas is still quarterbacking, and that could spell the difference. Last year it was a massacre, this year it will be close. We give it to the Cards by one TD.

In the other local clash, it's A&M over Benedict, the Rattlers are loaded again.

Elsewhere, the East: Rice over Cornell . . . Navy over Dartmouth . . . Oklahoma over Pittsburgh, different brand of football . . . Yale over Brown . . . Princeton over Columbia, by a shade . . . Syracuse over Boston U . . . Holy Cross on top of Colgate . . . Penn over Penn St. . . . VPI over Rutgers . . . and West Virginia over Waynesburg

In the mid-West, it's: Notre Dame over Purdue, in an Irish breather . . Kansas over Iowa St. . . . Wisconsin over Marquette, watch "The Horse" Ameche in this one . . . Michigan over Tulane, but Bear Wolf could give them trouble . . .

Northwestern over Army . . . Iowa over Washington St. . . . Nebraska over Kansas St. . . . Michigan St. over Minnesota, but the Spartans will get knocked off this season . . . William and Mary over Cincinnati . . . and Illinois over Stanford, no rest for the Indians.

Intramural Play To Start Oct. 12

Touch football will be the first activity in the men's intramural sports program this year, Ed Williamson announced today. The opening games will be played Monday, October 12th.

Williamson said that it would be possible to play this year during the regular football season because of the added space afforded by the new athletic fields across from the stadium.

All sports managers of the independent and dormitory teams will have an organizational meeting Tuesday at 4:45 p.m., in the Trophy Room of the Student Union.

Day students are encouraged to organize and enter teams in this league. Freshman Hall "B" Team was last year's winner with fourteen teams entered.

The fraternity managers will meet the following day, Wednesday, October 7th at the same time and place. All teams will be pointing for the Phi Delts, last year's victor.

Seminole Bees Go Against SGC

The FSU "B" team will open its season tonight in Douglas, Ga. when they go against South Georgia College. South Georgia lost to the University of Tampa varsity 33-0 last week.

Coach Mike Long and a 32-man squad is scheduled to leave here by bus this afternoon.

Speeding on U. S. streets and highways last year killed 13,430 men, women and children.

Speeding on U. S. streets and highways injured nearly 600,000 men, women and children.

A GYM DANDY

Koslow Should Help Gym Team

By BOB GUTTING

Last week I introduced you to Joe Taylor. The subject for this week is a person who is equally as interesting. The individual I am referring to is Bill Koslow, who, like his team mates Holder and Signorelli, hails from Union City, N. J.

Bill is an alumni of Dickenson High, where he lettered one year on the varsity gym tema

In 1945 at the Metropolitan AAU meet held in New York City, Bill won the Novice Parallel Bar championship.

The following year he entered competition for the famed Swiss Gymnastics Society and remained active in this organization until he entered the Air Force in 1947.

IN SERVICE

While in service Bill led an interesting and varied life and traveled to such places as England, France, Germany, Labrador, Bermuda, the Azores and Arabia, exotic kingdom of shieks and oil wells

In between his travels Bill managed to get married and is now the proud father of a 21-months-old baby girl, who is cute as a bugs ear, and goes by the name of Diana

During 1948 a fateful event occurred that was destined to change his entire future. It was then that he met Dr. Hartley Price at one of his famous gymnastic shows known throughout the United States as "Gymkana."

PICKED FSU

A fast friendship followed and after his discharge in 1951 Bill decided to attend FSU where he could have the opportunity of studying gymnastics under Dr. Price.

Although relatively inactive in competition last semester, Bill intends to go all out this year to help the Seminole team bring additional fame to Florida State.

In addition to regular competition Bill will also participate in the yearly "Gymkana" show scheduled for six days starting November 30.

TRACK CANDIDATES

The above "Ascent in Depth," by George L. K. Morris, is one of the works being featured in the Florida State University Arty Gallery exhibition.

Gallery Opens Exhibit Of Semi Abstractions

The University Gallery of the Florida State University inaugurated the 1953-54 exhibition calendar with an important showing of contemporary American painting, "Three Semi-Abstractionists—Dove, Crawford, Morris," which opened to FSU students and the general public yesterday.

SPEAKING OF Arthur G. Dove, Alfred Barr, Jr., Director of the Museum Collections at the Museum of Modern Art in New York, has said, "Arthur Dove especially, anticipates by 35 years the current interest in a kind of abstraction which depends for its effect upon free, fluent form and color informed by a deep, poetic feeling for nature."

Ralston Crawford has been praised for his "visual understatement." James Johnson Sweeney, nationally known critic, finds that in Crawford's work "Nothing is overstressed. The eye never sated. The onlooker is always left with an appetite for just a slightly warmer tone, for a stronger, a slightly more emphatic line."

MORRIS, perhaps slightly less known, is nevertheless represented in the permanent collections of most important American Museums of Art and has received serious and favorable consideration in such books as Samuel Kootz' "New Frontiers in American Painting."

Ten paintings of each of the three men comprise the exhibition which is circulated by the American Federation of Arts, of which there is a sub-chapter, the Tallahassee Art League, in Tallahassee.

Gallery hours are: Weekdays—12.30-5 p.m., closed Mondays; Saturdays—9-12 a.m.; Sundays—2-5 p.m. No admission charge at any time.

ate that President Campbell has agreed to place students on several faculty committees that heretofore have not had student members. Students have been placed by Dr. Campbell on the Athletics Committee, Camp Committee, and Student Budget Committee. Students were formerly on the Artist Series and Longmire Building Committees and are again being placed on them. This is an indication, I think, of closer cooperation between administration and students; and I believe this is an important step toward a stronger spirit of unity and understanding."

After making further suggestions as to committees to be set up to study the court system, to revise the constitution and change the name of "Chairman of the Honor Committee" to "Secretary of Honor" a title which should be used to conform with the other cabinet titles, he closed his speech with the following thought: "I am quite optimistic about prospects for a successful year for student government. The opportunity is here. There will be disagreements and differences of opinion. Something would be wrong if we all thought just alike. But let us do our work with diligence and confidence and with a respect for each other; and with each other and with the administration may a spirit of unity of purpose enable us all to accomplish great things for Florida State University."

Dental School Aptitude Test Must be Taken

Students expecting to enter dental school in the fall must take a dental aptitude test and make application before the end of October, Dr. Earl Frieden said yesterday.

Applications can be picked up in Room 418, Science Building, Dr. Frieden said, and must be completed and mailed by October 16 to the Council of Dental Education, American Dental Association, 222 E. Superior, Chicago 11, Illinois. He noted that the application must be accompanied by 3 photographs and a ten-dollar application fee.

The dental aptitude test will be given only once at Florida State University, Dr. Frieden added. It will be given October 31 at FSU and everyone making application must take the exam.

Anyone wishing additional information can see Dr. Earl Frieden, 418 Science Building.

Six Selected As FSU Men Cheerleaders

Six men have been chosen as this year's Male Cheerleaders, chairman of the selection committee Milton Carothers, Student Body president said today.

CAROTHERS SAID out of many tryouts, E. L. Allen, Tommy Waits, Bobby Jones, George Carver, "Sticks" Steinberg and Rod Smith were chosen male counterparts of the pep squad that is destined to put FSU school spirit back on its feet.

The selection committee wishes to thank all the men who tried out at the recent competition for their interest and time. "It's just such a turnout of spirit we need," Carothers said, "to get our overall enthusiasm where it should be."

Carothers urges, further, that the entire student body turn out at the game and give these new promoters of school good will all the support they can muster. "Yell your loudest," he said, "So that they can hear what's going on on the other side of town."

THE MEN cheerleaders will also circulate through the stands during the game to arouse participation in the cheering, while the girls hold down the "front" during parts of the game.

Vogel Lauds Enthusiasm Shown This Year

"I feel that we're going to have a really big year all the way around! We've started out with plenty of pep and enthusiasm over our improved football team and Marching Chiefs and that enthusiasm seems to have carried over to all of the activities on campus." These words of optimism came from Mr. Fred Vogel, head of one of the newest, but already one of the most popular offices at FSU. He has the title of Counselor for Student Activities and through this office takes an active part in every campus organization, whether large or small; and, from all reports, he displays an equal amount of optimism and enthusiasm toward each of them.

MR. VOGEL CREDITS his feeling of optimism to just one new attitude which he feels has really taken hold this year. "Everywhere I turn," he said, "and everything I see points to co-operation." He says that there is a new feeling of co-operation not only between the various student groups, but also between the student body and the administration. "In past years," he said, "everyone kept promising their co-operation, but when it came right down to the actual work no one came through. Things are different this year."

As he ran down the list of the activities which he helps to counsel, Mr. Vogel had nothing but praise for the marked improvement in each of them this year. "The Smoke Signals is really smoking and the Tally Ho is going full guns!" he declared when asked his opinion of campus publications. He's especially pleased with the way the Sandspur committee is progressing. He announced that the committee to choose the script for the production already has three scripts that are completed and copyrighted. "Also," he said, "we're working on a really big name band for the Sandspur dance and I feel confident that we're going to get it."

SPEAKING of the plans of the War Path Club to have a card section at the football games, Mr. Vogel showed a great deal of enthusiasm about the way that the club is progressing with the idea. "I really think its going to go over in a big way," he said.

If all of these big plans that Mr. Vogel has to develop this year, it will be due not only to the co-operation of which he speaks but also to the backing that he himself is giving to all of the organizations on campus.

Block Likens Nobel Ceremony To 'A Ballet' As He Gives Inside View of Proceedings

By BRUCE M. GALPAIN

The ceremony of receiving a Nobel Prize is much "like a ballet," quipped Dr. Felix Block to an informal gathering of students Sunday night.

Dr. Block, here for a Sigma Xi lecture on Nuclear Magnetic Moments, was relating his experiences in receiving the much coveted Nobel Prize in physics.

YOU HAVE to learn how to walk, how to bow, how to dress . . . there is even music, be noted.

Actually, the Nobel Prize is nothing to be made light of, and Dr. Block is considered one of the dozen or so men in the world most informed on nuclear physics. The recognition, needless to say, comes to few.

HE FIRST began to get an inkling of the fact that he was to be selected for the award when the press services began asking him for his biography. About a week later he received a simple telegram stating briefly that he had been chosen by the Swedish Academy of Sciences.

Dr. Felix Block

"It could easily have been a hoax of some friend," he noted. He received no further official communication until the day before he left for Sweden, when a letter arrived by regular mail. In the interim he relied heavily on the advice of a friend who had himself received the Nobel Prize.

THE AWARDS ceremony lasts five days, and Sweden makes quite a big thing of them. There is the official presentation, when, according to Dr. Block, people tell you how good you are. Then there are official banquets with something like a thousand in attendance, an "informal" dinner with the royal family and official lectures to colleagues.

The five-day sojourn was quite hectic, says the physicist, but he sees one important advantage to it. It is the only time, he joked, that your wife begins to doubt herself and think you are something more than a dumbhead.

DR. BLOCK, regularly at Stanford University, is at present on a speaking tour of the country.

Tomorrow, Funds Committee members will consider applications for the three concessions open on November's Homecoming Dance, announced today by Dance Committee Chairman Paul Sorsparu.

The Funds Committee, according to Teal, has the authority to approve or reject all projects by student organizations wishing to raise funds on campus. He said the committee must approve also any solicitation of Tallahassee merchants by FSU student organizations, academic, athletic and social departments.

TEAL ADDED that a special meeting of the Funds Committee can be called whenever such is necessary. He further urged all students to consult their Pow Wow, student handbook, for rules and regulations concerning fund raising.

Miss Miriam Mizuno of Tokyo, Japan, is a graduate of Winthrop College, at Winthrop, South Carolina. Miss Mizuno will return to Tokyo when she completes her work in the states.

Mohamed Shams Eldin Ahmed entered school this past week after leaving his native country only a few days ago. Mr. Ahmed was educated in Egypt. His present plans are to return to Egypt when his masters is completed.

Pierce Calls Meeting Time For Fraternity

Alpha Delta Sigma, National Men's Advertising Fraternity, will meet tonight at 5 p.m. in Room 403, Longmire, Al Pierce, president, announced today.

AT THE MEETING members will discuss this year's plans for tapping of new members. Also talked over will be plans made earlier for sponsoring speakers, prominent in the field of advertising, to come here on a series of lecture tours throughout the year.

Pierce said ADS, newly organized last year, is cooperating with the new Women's Advertising honorary, Gamma Alpha Chi, in a joint fund-raising scheme to secure advertising for the Florida Flambeau. Members of both organizations solicit, draw up and insert all the local advertising for the student newspaper. He said it is a well-known fact that the number of inches of advertising determines, largely, the number of pages the Flambeau can print per issue, adding that the more subscriptions ADS and GAX members can secure, the bigger the student newspaper.

MEMBERS OF Gamma Alpha Chi will hold a similar meeting tomorrow evening at 8 in Longmire Building. Adviser to both groups is Dr. Royal Ray, Head of the Florida State University Advertising Department.

Leduc Announces Language Exams

Qualified candidates may take the foreign language reading knowledge tests for graduate degrees on November 7, 1953, Dr. Albert Leduc, chairman of the examining committee said today.

The examination will also be given in January as was originally scheduled. -Candidates who take the test in November will not be eligible to try again in the same language until May.

Dr. Leduc said graduate students who plan to take the test in November must submit applications to the examining committee at least two weeks before November 7. They must have the applications approved by their major professor before they submit them.

IFC Conducts 'Help Week'; Stop Hazings

On October 3 "Help Week," a modern version of "Hell Week," began under the direction of the Inter-Fraternity Council. "Help Week" has done away with the old fashioned hazing and has replaced it with constructive effort designed to help some person or persons in need.

Last year the fraternities completely repainted a city church and supplied the manpower to renovate a widow's home.

"Rush Week" for all fraternities, with the Inter-Fraternity Council as the coordinating unit, ended on September 27, and at its close the results were deemed highly satisfactory.

Officers Rotate

This semester the officers of the Inter-Fraternity Council will be represented by the presidnts of the various fraternity houses. These officers will rotate the positions alphabetically each semester.

Before the rule was changed the officers were elected by the fraternities. This was not effective, as the men lacked the power to speak for the fraternities they represented.

Current officers of the IFC, which meets once a month, are Charlie Booth, president; Haywood Taylor, vice-president: Jim Ball, secretary and Finley McMullen, treasurer.

Thus far the new program has been a success and tremendous progress is expected in the future.

Kilenyi Leaves For Germany For Recording

Mr. Edward Kilenyi, professor of piano at FSU and internationally known concert and recording artist, flew to Berlin last Wednesday to play three concertos and solo works with the RIAS (American Radio in West Berlin) Orchestra, which he will record for Remington records. This was at the request of Laszlo Halasz, Remington's Managing Director and former director of the New York Center Opera.

This is Kilenyi's first visit to Germany since 1945, when as a captain in the U. S. Army he was Information Control Officer for Bavaria in charge of music. Before the war Kilenyi had concert tours throughout Germany as well as in most other foreign European countries.

In 1838 Kilenyi won the Grand Prix de Disque for his recording of the Liszt "Todentans."

McDaniels Wins Decisive Margin In Election Runoff

The special final runoff election to determine the vice-president of this year's senior class decided a long-fought race between Charlie McDaniels and Betty Whitmire. McDaniels won Thursday after counting showed 86 votes for him, and 64 for Whitmire.

The close margin decided an office with a past. None of the candidates for the office had a majority at last year's primary elections. In the runoff election that followed, both candidates received the same number of votes, tying up the choice for the semester and postponing the final run-off until this semester.

Secretary of Student Body elections Bill Stancik said he is happy the senior class has finally made their choice, adding that the race was one of the most controversial and interesting he has seen as Secretary of Elections.

Women's F Club Pledges Members

The goats, Bettye Ann Ray, Sadie Presnell, Rose Riles, Anna Jeannine Winter, Anne Yeoman, Sandra Shuman, Margaret Sheppard, Betty Evans, Martha Sue Bleckley and Isabelle Sullivan were honored at tea during the week of their tapping.

Homecoming Concessions Are Planned

Any organization eligible and interested in handling one of three open concessions for the Homecoming Dance in November should obtain information and a special blank in the Student Body Offices, second floor Longmire Building by tomorrow, Dance Committee Chairman Paul Soraparu said today.

SORAPARU SAID three concessions will be open to organizations seeking their yearly fund-raising project. Sale of Coca Cola, hat and coat check booth,, and sale of confetti were named at the Dance Committee's initial meeting last week. The Chairman added that these requests, however, should be made by tomorrow with the Student Funds Committee in order to be approved.

According to Soraparu, the Student Funds Committee meets once a month to consider requests by clubs and groups to raise money. As each organization on campus is allowed one fund-raising project during the school year, he said, any request for one of the three open concessions will have to be reviewed at the Funds Committee's meeting tomorrow afternoon. Therefore, he urges all groups to get their applications for this year's Homecoming concessions in today or tomorrow at the latest.

FSU Bookstore Policies Outlined

The University Book Store, under the direction of Manager Gordon Wheeler, is a state-owned and operated enterprise at Florida State University.

It is not operated for the purpose of making a profit.

ACCORDING to Wheeler, the Book Store staff does not operate on a commission basis, therefore there is no selfish incentive on their part to "pressure" students to obtain their books from the Book-e-teria in the Student Center.

Wheeler has announced that any student who finds he has gotten the wrong book by mistake, or who for any reason would like to return a book he has recently purchased, may do so within a week or ten days after the purchase, provided the book has not been damaged Thus, a student who has purchased a new book from the University Book Store and then finds a cheaper second-hand copy may return the book and get his money refunded.

THIS IS ONE aspect of the cooperative policy of the Book Store.

Wheeler has also stated that the Book Store will offer at least one-half the purchase price for all second-hand books presently in use by the university if they do not have the binding broken or pages missing.

Advertising Needs Code Of Honesty And Decency

We have no ax to grind on the subject, nor are we burning with reformers' zeal, but we do believe a large dose of soul-searching is in order on the part of people in the advertising business.

When advertising becomes misleading or gross in its use of adjectives, it is just plain lying. There are many types of lying in advertising, of course, and some of them are so familiar to the American scene that no one pays much attention to them.

Take those cleaning ads, for instance. It's amazing how the English language is accommodating enough to allow a dozen brands to "give you the whitest brightest wash you've ever had." These products will either dazzle your eyes, fill your nostrils with the smell of sunshine or make veritable Methuelas of your clothes.

Such ads belong in the little White Lie category, however, and cannot hold a candle to the Hollywood Adjective System. There everything is magnified by a factor of at least ten, so that a movie which isn't magnificent, collosal or stupendous just isn't anything. The obvious defect of this system is that when something really good comes along on rare occasions, all the descriptives are used up and advertising is ineffective. Again, though, the Hollywood Adjective System is something we all have become accustomed to, and it has little ability to mislead us.

Much more untruthful, and at times disgusting, are the "sexy" displays of the motion pictures and the paper-bound books. Far be it for us to belittle sex in modern society but also we feel that advertising which alludes unnecessarily to the subject can only have a bad effect.

Perhaps seductive bedroom scenes on the covers of some paper-bounds are appropriate to the trash contained therein, but we hardly see the reasonableness of a trend which has almost all books, from A Child's Garden of Verses to Pilgrim's Progress and even Roget's Thesaurus, adorned with scantily-clad women. And how many theaters are plastered with pictures of compromising situations when the production advertised has nothing at all to do with such a happening?

The purpose of advertising, after all, is to sell merchandise, and to sell, you must attract attention. We can see nothing wrong with that. There really should be some standard of decency and truthfulness, though.

There are many examples of good advertising, furthermore.

One has only to glance through some publication such as Time magazine to see notable art work and education information in advertisements. Such ads are a credit both to the magazine that runs them and to the advertising company.

As far as we can see, when an advertiser finds it necessary to lie or just mislead, he is admitting his product is inferior. If these practices become too unreasonable, the time may come when the government will take regulatory steps, just as it did in the case of the Pure Food and Drug Act. The prospects seem small, but it is nice to think the industry will take steps to improve itself.

• CAMP WHATSIT

A few issues ago the Flambeau slipped up on names when it called the Government of the Student Body by its old name, the University Government Association, but now the shoe is on the other foot.

The Government of the Student Body, according to the Pow Wow, considers the name of the camp we oldsters know as Flastacowo to be Camp Seminole.

Doubtless the name needs to be changed, for it stands for Florida State College for Women, now dead these six years, but there should be some sort of authority going into the rechristening.

Perhaps when Senate has a long enough meeting to consider some business, they will get around to this matter of a name.

In the meantime the Flambeau will stick to the official, though outmoded, Flastacowo.

THE BOOKLIST

New Book Collects Top Hemingway

By BOBBY FOLSOM

The Hemingway Reader, published in September by Scribner's was a most appropriate thing to do, for as the front flap tells us: "In what was said and written about Ernest Hemingway, in many languages, one conclusion was clearly stated: Hemingway is the foremost writer in the world today." Admittedly, a statement such as this is only put down after considerable forethought.

Taking advantage of the success won by Hemingway for his 1953 Pulitzer Prize novel, THE OLD MAN AND THE SEA, Charles Poore, a book editor of the New York Times, has put together a neat collection of the "Old Master's." It has come out almost a year to the day since THE OLD MAN AND THE SEA.

The selections have been chosen with "variety and balance" and gives to the new reader of Hemingway an overall glance at his works, and to the old reader some new reminiscences of an ageless quality. The works contained in the 652 page volume are two books, The Sun Also Rises, which shot him to fame back in the middle twenties, and The Torrents of Spring, a satirical novel fashioned after Sherwood Anderson's Winesburg, Ohio stories and probably less read than any of his novels; complete episodes from A Farewell to Arms, To Have and Have Not, For Whom the Bells Toll, Across the River and Into the Trees, and The Old Man and the Sea, chapters from Death in the Afternoon and Green Hills of Africa; and eleven short stories, among them, Big-Two Hearted River from his first book, In Our Time, also Fifty Grand, The Snows of Kilimanjaro and The Short Happy Life of Francis Macomber.

There is no rediscovery or revival about any of Hemingway's works. They are here, have remained here, and will stay for a long, long time. Every so often someone comes out with a collection of his, and the quality that is there always seems to make the stories new all over again.

Hemingway says, "The way to hunt is for as long as you live against, as long as there is such and such an animal, just as the way to paint is as long as there is you and colors and canvas and to write as long as you can live and there is pencil and paper or ink or any machine to do it with, or anything you care to write about, and you feel a fool, and you are a fool, to do it any other way." Taken from the Green Hills of Africa, written after he returned from a four-months trip to Africa in 1935, it is fresh and wise advice offered by an artist who has exemplified the same code in his over thirty years of writing.

The first and final thing to do in this world, he once told Maxwell Perkins, is to last in it and not be smashed by it, and it is the same way with your work.

Mr. Poore has some comments to make in his preface before each of the selections. They are spiced with little known items about Hemingway, and are very interesting in their own right, particularly the one before a story called A WAY YOU'LL NEVER BE. Another interesting note is that Mr. Poore does not regard Hemingway as purely an American writer, and prefers to place him closer to the "habitat groups" of Stendhal, Tolstoy and Flaubert.

Hemingway has been a colorful figure for many years. A wounded ex-soldier in WW I, reporter, foreign correspondent, big-game hunter, world-traveler, then in WW II he hunted German submarines in the Caribbean with his yacht, the "Pilar," and later became a war correspondent, flying combat missions with the RAF and seeing front line duty with American outfits in France and Germany.

Much too conservative to make a statement such as is in the first paragraph above, Mr. Poore does realize fully the writer's artistic achievements and says, "This book is planned for the pleasures and rewards of reading." Mr. Poore hit the nail right on the head.

THE SPECTATOR

Gubernatorial Succession Explained

By WARREN COBB

In the confusion left in the wake of Governor McCarty's death, one question seems to be particularly significant: Who will be the next bona fide governor of Florida?

It is to be noted that Charley Johns, though to all intents and purposes the governor of the state, does not in actuality hold that title. He is "acting governor," according to the Florida Supreme Court. He will serve in this capacity until a governor can be elected during the regular legislative elections in November, 1954, to serve for a two-year period.

The question of next year's candidates has several ramifications. Can Johns run for the two-year term? Since he is only "acting governor" and not governor, he is not disqualified by the state law prohibiting succession.

It would seem, however, that he is definitely ineligible to run in 1954 because of the following provision in the state constitution:

"No senator or member of the House of Representatives shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed, or elected to any civil office under the Constitution of this state that has been created or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time."

Johns of course was a member of the 1953 Legislature that raised the governor's salary from $12,000 to $15,000 per year.

The courts have generally held that a lawmaker cannot assume such a position even if he chooses to refuse the increase in salary or resigns from the Legislature.

This holding would prohibit Johns, who was elected to a six-year Senate term in 1952, from running for the governorship until the 1960 campaign.

Thus there is the question of who will run next year for the two-year term. Among the many names that have been previously bandied about as possible 1956 candidates are: Richard Ervin, attorney general; Clarence Gay, comptroller; Francis Whitehair, who was defeated in the 1940 gubernatorial race by Spessard Holland and recently served as Under-secretary of the Navy; Bob Sikes, one of Florida's eight representatives in Congress; General James Van Fleet, former Korean commander, and of course, Sanford's Brailey Odham, who waged a surprising campaign against McCarty with his "talkathons."

But it is problematical if any earnest gubernatorial aspirant would sacrifice his 1956 chances for a two-year tenure of office. Perhaps one or more of those listed above will toss his hat in the ring next year. And then again, it is quite possible that a man with the ardent political ambitions of — let us say — a Brailey Odham will prefer to sit back and play for higher stakes later in the game.

It is always interesting to speculate on such political maneuverings.

Another interesting question which the death of McCarty sharply defines is this: Should Florida have, as do many other states, a duly elected lieutenant-governor to replace our chief executive in case of necessity?

This has often been suggested and the possibilities of adopting such a plan may very well depend to a large extent on John's performance during the next 15 months.

If he should turn in a creditable record, then the advocates of changing the succession order will probably be ignored.

During the last Legislature, if you remember, McCarty backed a proposed amendment to make the secretary of state rather than the president of the Senate the next in line for the governorship. McCarty's principal argument was that the former is chosen by the entire electorate of the state, whereas the latter is chosen by only a small segment of it—i.e., the county which he represents. This, it would seem, is a valid argument.

This proposal was defeated in the Senate, where Johns, of course, led the opposition against it. If it had become an amendment, R. A. Gray rather than Johns would now be "acting governor."

But Johns is now carrying the ball, and the state of Florida is waiting to see just where he is going with it.

Monuments To - 'Hero'

By GENE LAWLER

The editorials of the Tallahassee Democrat, the Flambeau's press-mate, bear occasional watching. For instance, between seemingly Republican pieces favoring a national sales tax and the Bricker amendment, it recently ran a curious item on Joe McCarthy.

Consider this concluding paragraph of the Democrat lead editorial of September 21: "It is irritating that McCarthy will not either get so bad that we can settle down to disapprove of him or get so good that we can stop deploring him and start supporting him."

Apparently not everyone has such difficulty in making up their mind about McCarthy. A "patriotic" group of citizens in a northern state recently gave Joe an award for, I believe, "his fight for the Bill of Rights." To paraphrase Elmer Davis, that was a bigger joke than even Mark Twain or the Tallahassee Democrat could think up.

A similar, equally absurd stunt was perpetrated in Baltimore this summer. Tim Bright is a used car dealer with Maryland gubernatorial asperations. Bright retained a professional public relations man who apparently told him that erecting a monument to McCarthy would make him at least as well known as a U of Maryland All-American.

So Tim bought a monument, and a pretty thing it was—about eight feet tall, of glistening white marble. On the front was a picture of a McCarthy-like Hercules wrestling with a couple subversive-looking vipers. Below was inscribed:

SENATOR
JOSEPH R. McCARTHY
STATESMAN
U. S. MARINE

Bright made plans for the unveiling on Independence Day. He announced that 40 speakers, including Winston Churchill and Chiang Kai-shek had been invited. Both Mr. Churchill and Chiang sent their regrets.

Then the contrary Democrats entered the picture. The Baltimore city administration forbade the unveiling in the middle of North Avenue, a main thoroughfare. Tim went to court and lost. He was forced to hold the ceremony on the sidewalk in front of his store. From there on, things went from bad to worse.

1. Somebody smeared a large lipstick swastica on the stone the first night.
2. The monument was reported stolen—all umpteen hundred pounds of it.
3. The public-relations man sued for a few thousand dollars in back wages, but settled out of court for a token payment.
4. Reporters discovered the monument was loaded on one of Bright's trucks behind his store.

Somehow, we can't help feeling that Mr. Bright might be willing to dispose of that stone. If the Tallahassee Democrat can make up its mind, it can join in a public-spirited campaign to buy the monument for McCarthy's grave, provided the Wisconsin Senator will agree to drop dead soon enough.

Not Just Pie - Throwers

By DAVID DREfS

Seems the old adage that comics are slobs as thespians and likewise is getting the old run-a-round these moons if casting lists of entertainment agencies are any clue. Comics are being fitted into heavy drama and dramatists are getting their kicks when they give with the laughs. Boy, some change.

Steve Allen, comedian-emcee of vaudeo was the latest of the chucklers to face the cameras and give with sweat and tears. In a murder story on teevee, he also gave some blood. Shades of Winnie!

Jack Benny and Bob Hope varied themselves from their standard vehicles to guest on radio's "Suspense." Videyockers Red Buttons and Jackie Gleason have been the thick stuff on the television. At any rate, it gives some broader dimensions on the capabilities of performers.

Frank Sinatra set himself up for an Academy Award with his portrayal in "From Here to Eternity." This was the role he knew he could play and he and Ava got on all fours to beg for the role. Seeing Ava on all fours is quite an experience so Frankie got the part.

If you grabbed a look at the Skelton with the red hair in "The Clown," you saw the versatile comic in a combination of pathos and puns. A combination which none thought he could play. None but Red. With a story about a washout comedian, Dodo Welwin, Skelton performed a piece of magnificent acting which brought M-G-M execs to their feet.

Not too many people have thought Charlie Chaplin funny for quite a while, but nevertheless he is classified as that on his income tax form, though when he was paving it he was still making silents. At any rate, "Monsieur Verdoux" and "Limelight" did show him as a truly great thespian.

Comic Jackie Gleason, mentioned before, is quite a successful ork boss whether you know it or not. He's recording his string group on Capitol with Bobby Hacket tooting. William Bendix has had quite a time lapse since he's been hit with a pie. Straight character roles have been his meat for RKO for a few calendars.

Of course, when we said likewise, we meant in reverse. Bette Davis was a smash hit in Broadway's "Two's Company." Bela Lugosi, the chap who puts the scream into Dracula films, originally started out as a comic. You can see how his jokes came out. Jane Wyman has been in comedy roles recently. Check "Let's Do It Again" and "Just For You."

Brushing the dust off the adage as we did before we must keep in our memory that the play "Laugh, Clown Laugh" was about a clown who fell in love with a trapeze artist, but was never given a tumble; "Pagliacci" was an opera based on a clown's grief about his flirtatious spouse, but nevertheless kept his audience happy; and I am certain that the opera has been acted out somwhat in real life. Sorta makes you wonder if comedians aren't the best actors. Put that in orange letters for Marian.

Art Subjects Offered In Modern Circumstances

The history and criticism of art, subjects which engaged the attention of Romans who lived at the time of Christ, is now presented in a fully up-to-date setting.

Room 310 Westcott Building has been totally redecorated and adapted to the special needs of the two subjects which are always taught simultaneously.

THE REDECORATION was planned by a committee of the faculty of the department of art, and carried out under the supervision of Edmund Lewandowski, head, and Dr. James V. McDonough, professor of art.

"Because the courses in the history and criticism of art are taught largely as lecture courses by our staff of two art historians," Lewandowski said, in explaining the new features of the lecture hall, "larger classes are possible than in laboratory or group discussions coures. The new room will comfortably seat 150 people. The acoustics were a matter of primary concern, so acoustic tile was applied to the ceiling and back wall."

OTHER NECESSITIES, Lewandowski and Dr. McDonough explained, were air-conditioning, since art history is taught in a darkened room to facilitate the constant use of lantern slides and this made other means of ventilation unsuitable.

'Here To Eternity' Surpasses Novel

By RICHARD STEVENS

This is primarily a theatre column; however, I feel that it is entirely within my province to discuss a motion picture occasionally when I find one which uncovers a particularly interesting facet of dramatic presentation.

Banal farce comedies and tepid melodramas have stood as Hollywood models for years. It is an appalling truth that motion picture producers continually shun the inventiveness and dramatic techniques inherently available to the motion picture medium. With the exception of an exceedingly small number of products, these producers have chosen to present stereotyped, unprovoking fare rather than to utilize the tremendous capabilities of the versatile motion picture camera on screenplays of any real merit.

An exception to the Hollywood "rule" is Columbia Studio's magnificent production, From Here to Eternity. It contains all the elements of great drama, and it is certainly an offering of which the motion picture industry can be proud.

Adapted from the James Jones novel of the same name, the movie often outshines the book that gave it birth. It is concise and contains a unity of purpose where the novel was rambling and somewhat disjointed.

The book was a masterpiece of sorts; still, the motion picture somehow comes up with its own, slightly different brand of masterpiece.

Jones' story takes place in and around the Schofield Barracks Post shortly prior to the bombing of Pearl Harbor. Each of his characters is a complete entity and, therefore, has his own story.

There is Sgt. Warden, the strong, attractive man who falls in love with the company commander's wife. This woman, Karen, is a bitter and misused woman finding for the first time in her short-lived affair with Warden a true fulfillment.

Then there is Prewitt, the misplaced man. He is a boxer who won't box because he once blinded a friend. His refusal to fight on the company boxing team nets him the "treatment;" the company commander and the members rub his nose into the dirt as often as possible in an effort to coerce him. Yet he does not give in. Prewitt's philosophy: "A man's got to go his own way, or he ain't nothin'."

As an outlet for his warped, pent-up emotions, he falls into an impossible love. Lorene, the girl with whom he falls in love, is a beautiful tart whose only ambition is to become "proper."

And then there is Maggio, the brash little city-dweller who didn't belong in the army and who is finally beaten to death by a sadistic guard in the post Stockade. The lives of each of these five characters are fully drawn in the course of the picture.

Director Fred Zinneman extracts first-rate performances from all five principals.

As Prewitt, Montgomery Clift is properly tense and introverted, he underplays beautifully to make Prewitt one of the most memorable screen characters of recent years.

Burt Lancaster does a very creditable job as Warden, perhaps even surpassing his "Doc" in Come Back, Little Sheba.

Deborah Kerr breaks away from her customary lily-of-the-valley role to play the embittered but sexy Karen. She plays the role so well that we can be assured sweaters will become her usual attire.

However, the two big surprises of the show are the performances of Frank Sinatra and Donna Reed as Maggio and Lorene, respectively. Miss Reed proves herself to be an actress of the first rank as the girl who must be respectable above all else. The sordid-sweet love of Lorene and Prewitt is a poignant high point of the picture.

As Maggio, Frank Sinatra turns in a performance that may well win him the highest laurels to be bestowed upon anyone involved. His touching death scene is sheer artistry. I am only sorry that this fellow was not "discovered" sooner.

So, let us bow reverently to director Zinneman; actors Clift, Lancaster, Kerr, Reed and Sinatra and scenarist Daniel Taradash for their contributions to a fine motion picture, and thank God it was not filmed in three dimensions.

Education Adds To Happiness

By BRUCE GALPHIN

My friend was particularly bitter that day, and I like to think that what he said was out of bitterness, not good sense.

"Oh, what's the use?" he asked. "I think I'll just drop out of school."

"But you're in your senior year," I objected. "You'll soon have your diploma."

"So what? What good is a diploma?"

"Well, the diploma may not be so much in itself," I had to admit, "but it shows you have been through a certain amount of education."

"Education, bah!" he sneered. "What good it is?"

I was caught off base. One just doesn't go around making explanations of why education is important, at least not without thinking about it first. I was rusty on the subject. I had a vague feeling, though, that this was a grave heresy on a college campus. How could I answer him?

"Why, education prepares you to be a leader in your society," I tried.

"How many 'leaders' are college graduates? Any more than are non-college?" He had me there. I had no idea. "Pure propaganda," he grunted.

"Well look, man, a college degree is money in the bank. You are in line for better jobs if you have a degree."

"Do you mean you actually believe that line?" he asked incredulously. "Look, Horace Mann, that may be true with a few professions which require highly technical training, but for the most part colleges and universities are loaded with so-called professional or practical courses which try to teach people things they could much better learn on the job. Some college graduates find they are just four years behind people who went directly from high school into the profession, and furthermore that they have to learn all the college lessons over when they get on the job. No, there's nothing magic about a college training for most jobs. Sometimes it helps, sometimes it doesn't."

Foundering about for some reason, I suggested that college provided one with valuable friendships. At this, he almost mellowed, but then he reminded me that one can find friends in other places.

Then I came up with the reason. Remembering something that I had been told in my freshman year, I threw him my Sunday punch: "Education makes you a happier man by helping you understand the society you live in." That was my greatest mistake of the day, he erupted.

"Happier! We're talking about education, not going to classes. And you say education makes you happier. Boy, you really are naive.

"Education implies that you learn what makes your society run, why people react as they do. If you're really educated, you not only understand others but also yourself. The pleasant illusions vanish. And you say that makes you happy?

"Does it make you happy to lose faith in the thing you held dearest, the things that gave you the strength and courage to keep plugging along? No, my friend, I'm afraid not. Friedrich Nietzsche once wrote 'It is not doubt, but certainty that drives men to madness.'"

I saw I was getting nowhere, that if anyone were being convinced it was I. I certainly wasn't competent to discuss Nietzsche.

I'm glad I'm not educated.

Artists Have Surpassed New 'Faust'

By ROBERT STRANE

With Gallic gourmets panting in anticipation of the coming Met season's luscious piece de resistance, first-night Faust, I wish to advertise well in advance a satisfactory domestic recording of Gounod's masterpiece and some views thereupon. The alluringly illustrated set, Columbia with three LPs and libretto, can only serve as an appetizer, for the definitive performance will in all likelihood prove the Met broadcast—especially if the radio cast is that of opening night: incomparable Jussi Bjoerling in the title role, Vittoria de Los Angeles as ill-protected Marguerite, cocoa-voiced Robert Merrill, nostalgic brother Valentine, and as cavalier-Satan, the all-hailed reincarnation of the best in Chaliapin (with far better French diction) basso Nicolo Rossi-Lemeni, finally contracted after performing elsewhere for years. There are two good popular issues extant on LP, the Victor with Paris Opera cast and chorus under the austere baton of Sir Thomas Beecham and the aforementioned . . but since the Columbia represents the illustrious Metropolitan, is more complete, and a trifle more available, it perhaps to be slightly preferred.

The bill of artists is assuredly tempting, all renowned, but each of the principals has been and can be heard in roles more suited to his voice and temperament. The wreath most justly adorns conductor Fausto Cleva . . . his tempi are precise . . . and deliciously langorous in the Garden scene (Act III). Recalling for a moment this year's tour season in Atlanta, Ga., I waxed plaguing uneasy during the snail-pace first act of TOSCA, directed by Maestro Cleva . . . tenor Del Monaco was thereby permitted to sustain his lifting, ringing B's much longer, however, to the joy of many who thrive on such pleasurable exhibitionism.

In moments when Eugene Conley kindly condescends to the lyric from heroic bombast, his Irish tenor wafts the liquor of this intoxicating music . . . there are such moments, as in the garden scene duet with Marguerite, and the subdued lamentation within the prison cell . . . his "Salut Demeure" is almost of a silver, murmuring contemplation, but interspersed with occasional amorphous, sandy blasts that pepper one's ears—certainly not a treatment to evoke memories of Bjoerling's nectar on the moon. It is rather disconcerting that so dolce a voice, as on earlier London FFRR recordings, should within so short duration acquire an unpleasant "whisky" stridency. His serenades to Rosina in Atlanta's '51 Barber of Seville were the jewels of the tour in that city — an ease of control amounting to vocal genius. I cannot wrangle pedantically over Conley's historionics — adequate to say the least . . . the aging Faust's despondency and desperate defiance are delivered convincingly, as is the subdued remorse at Marguerite's cell-couch. Mr Conley's French lacks polish —is indistinct, apparently ill-studied . . . he's in good company in this set.

Eleanor Steber's matronly soprano impresses upon me the thought that she could hold her own with the devil, man and garrulous old governess. Her "Jewel Song" hardly sparkles, there being little trace of girlish rapture or coquettish lilt . . . her thrills within the aria had best go unheard. Madame Steber's soprano is lush (recall her Desdemona in Otello) and her interpretation, emphases here I cannot defame, but that buxom timbre simply does not fit to a demure but passionate young thing. I am unimpressed by her efforts at vibrant ecstasy in the plea to the stars and night-birds in finale to Act III . . . music of that deep "devine wickedness" without which there were no expectation of the exalted. (The scene is unforgettably sung by Madame Georgi-Bioue in the Victor RCA set).

Cesare Siepi's lava basso characterization evinces a bit too much congeniality of comradeship-Mephisto's humor should be of the sardonic colour, and his affected obsequiousness barbed. Even in the invocation to black night (Garden scene) Siepi fails to convey the awe-inspiring, serpentine relish of quickening power. In short, he is too "cool" a fiend. A voice of such honey mellifluity can't do justice to the French "bite." . . . nor can it thrust fang-like through the soaring finale to the love duet, as proper to concreting the imminence of satanic conquest. His Mephisto doesn't bend down to the frail flesh, but climbs down . . . thus losing sting. Siepi sings French with the Italian flaw . . . confounded pleasant sound, but scarcely authentic.

Excessive volume mars Frank Guarrera's otherwise commendable Valentine. The baritone's entire tableau at the Kermesse fair would be far more effective if toned down . . . the nostalgic salutation to Marguerite's medallion and the following Gounod inspiration "Avant de quitter ces lieux" (Ere I quit this spot) do not call for petulant force, expressing scant tender anxiety and cruelty of departure. To my taste, pathos is seldom affecting if noisy, forte . . . a mortally wounded brother cannot sing out in clear, full voice curses against his sister . . since the musical line may not well be distorted by blurted gasps, a fast-failing, subdued death scene would wince of bitter pathos of a realistically penetrative sort. Mr. Guarrera's death of Valentine has been condemned often by Met critics for "ham" . . . that fibrous substance is not entirely lacking here.

The voices of the principals in certain ensembles blend raucously to my ear. The finale trio, lacking the splended harp yet, is virtually rendered insignificant by fuzzy top tones, and suggestions of shrieking tribal issues. The two finest moments of the performance are: The "Cross-chorus" at the fair, and the Valentine-Mephisto-Faust trio in Act IV. The "chorus numbers" are generally acceptable—the "Soldiers' Chorus," however, fails to incite high blood-pressure, lacking sufficient "hairy" spirit and boisterous enthusiasm.

Words concerning desirable sets of late . . .

For those of you who care to whistle the theme from Story of Three Loves, Victor has released that eighteenth variation (Rachmaninoff on a theme by Paganini) on 45 rpm with Robin Dell orchestra and pianist Kapell under conductor F. Reiner.

RCA has upon the stands the transcription of the '51 Theater Guild broadcast of HAMLET, with finest contemporary Dane, John Gielgud, Pamela Brown, and Dorothy McGuire.

Maestro A. Toscanini has consented after much refusal to RCA's release of the '48 NBC broadcast of Verdi's Otello—to be released retail very soon. Cast includes Ramon Vinay (in his tenor days) as the Moor, Herva Nelli, Desdemona, and Giuseppe Valdengo, as honest Iago.

Sports Chatter

By CLYDE WARD
Flambeau Sports Editor

A crowd of people gathered in Campbell Stadium Sat- ay night to watch a football game. Most of them were peful, but nearly all of them were shy about speaking the chance of a upset — especially when they used their ads for their personal predictions.

This was the Louisville Cardinals. Last year, a little called Unitas made the Seminoles look silly with his sses. Unitas was back this year, deadlier than ever. Or everybody thought. Since last year, the Seminoles had the cream of their football crop. Italiano was gone, mpbell was gone, Thompson and Szczepanik were gone so Nugent started with a real gone team.

SATURDAY NIGHT, the hometown fans got their st look at this team at work. The game started with the be in perfect control of things and ended the same way. ter the first score, the pessimism of the crowd started melt a little. After the third one, everybody agreed that a major catastrophe could lose the game for us. By f time, things would have been boring had it not been novel.

One short year before, we could probably have had e title of being the best losers in the nation. At least had enough practice. This year started the same way, losing to Miami didn't make our stock sink too low. ems as if everybody expected us to lose that one.

LOOKS LIKE we've found those 11 men labeled "in e of emergency." In the first half, Coach Nugent tched teams as a freshening process. The only differ- ce in the two teams was the numbers on the jerseys. ither could be called the B squad. That garnet-clad line d just as it did when the starting line-up was in. The rds' passer was still being rushed, and the offense kept cking after FSU got the ball.

The overall picture was that of a football machine. erybody was surprised. While the local sportswriters ncluding this one) looked on with sagging jaws, the minoles did their war dance up and down the gridiron.

WHEN IT was all over, they hoisted Coach Nugent their shoulders and milled around the field while a large oup of the fans looked on. There was no wholesale break the gates when the game ended this time. This was first victory in Campbell stadium in almost two years d a large crowd stayed, basking in the glory of it. This s quite a switch from the two TD loss predicted for the be

The crowd was happy and they had eyes for nothing cept Nugent and the group of red jerseys prancing und the field. Off to the right, unnoticed, a stunned oup of gray-clad Cards trudged wearily toward the essing rooms.

ELTA GAMMA—The girls of Delta Gamma, national social sorority at orida State University, assisted the Tallahassee Lion Club with their broom ale which was held yesterday. Seminoles Wallop Louisville

Tribe Clouts Foe, Punts Only Twice

Coach Nugent's rookie-studded Seminoles romped across the turf in Campbell Stadium Saturday night to soundly trounce a surprised squad of Louisville Cardinals.

The game, which finally ended at 59-0, started with the Seminoles in perfect command of the game They kept their air of command during the entire game

IT WAS HARD to tell just who the stars were in the conflict. Everybody was in on the act. Fiveash kept rolling up the yardage with his sweeps around right end, accounting for three of the nine touchdowns. Corso continued his exhibition of broken-field running and rolled up another one. Stan Dobosz showed some of his last year's form and scored two more.

Billy Graham, Junior Metts and Carl Grenn scored one each. The entire line was outstanding with their blocks and tackles.

down the fielo were almost commonplace for all the backs. They totaled 397 rushing yards to set a new school record. Corso racked up 73 of these yards, but his high spot came when he returned a punt 58 yards for his lone touchdown.

FSU was pushed back 100 yards by penalties, but still came up with the net yardage marker at 544 Nugent's charges were over-zealous at times and drew several 15-yard penalties for clipping and unnecesccary roughness. Louisville was penalized only 14 yards and their total net yardage was only 104

THE SEMINOLES unveiled the best passing defense in the business — a hard-charging line. When Louisville tried to pass, the FSU line gave the passer no time to look for a receiver. Unitas was injured in the first half, which might partially account for the fact that the Cards clicked on only two of their 10 passing attempts.

The Cards won the toss and elected to receive. On the third play, Unitas fumbles and Kalenich pounced on it at the 24 Four plays later, FSU had scored.

AFTER LOUISVILLE received the kick, the Seminoles bogged down their offense and a weak 20-yard punt to the Seminole 43 started the Tribe whooping down the field again. It took six plays this time Fiveash trundled it across from the nine in two tries after a 51-yard pass from Massey to Taylor had set it up. The first quarter ended at 14-0.

The Indians went wild in the second period. They scored four times, missing two conversions, to push the score to 40-0 by half time. A brief downpour at the beginning of the quarter had left the field soggy and the ball wet, but this didn't seem to bother the Seminoles. They completed three passes out of three tries, one of these being a combination pitchout-pass from Massey to Fiveash to Taylor for a 44-yard gain

THE TRIBE cooled somewhat during the second half The Louisville line tightened and FSU was forced to kick twice during the next two quarters. They scored three more times, missing two more conversions, to put the night's score up to 58-0.

Series Brings Nostalgia

The big man with the gingerbread face and the grotesque little legs was restless all morning, stirred by the feeling that he was missing something, that he ought to be somewhere else.

Then suddenly, it came to him and he wondered how he could have forgotten. He went direct to Peter who was, after all, the man you asked for a pass, and put it to him.

"Why sure you can go George," said Peter. "I understand how you feel . . . the old school spirit and so forth. But try and get back for supper. And he wrote out a pass good for reveille.

George found the big city hot and crowded and filled with the excitement that always accompanies the World Series. He moved through the crowds slowly, an incongruous figure in a camel's hair coat and cap, enjoying the old sights and sounds and smells.

He took off his coat and draped it over his arm. Then he got in a cab and had the driver take him to 72 Street and Broadway. There he looked around an old familiar neighborhood and finally walked into the Hotel Ansonia, the home of his bachelor days and the scene of many wonderful times with the old gang.

Nobody noticed him in his dark glasses as he walked slowly around the lobby, noting the changes. The bell hops, clerks and guests were all talking excitedly about the Series. But the newsstand man showed life when he asked for a late edition of the Evening Graphic.

"The Graphic?" said the fellow "Where have you been pop?" That ain't been published for years."

"Oh yes. I forgot," said George. He picked up a paper and sat down to read the sports pages.

"Hmmmmm," he mused, same old stuff . . . Yankees Favored." . . . "Capacity Crowd Expected At Stadium" . . . "Six Scalpers Arrested" . .

His reading was interrupted by a sharp citizen who had two seats to sell. "Right behind home plate an' dirt cheap because it's near game time. Thirty bucks—to you."

George looked at the tickets, recognized the location and laughed, then he pulled out his roll. "Two in the right field grandstand you mena," he said. "Oh well," and he handed over the money.

George came out happily smiling. "Common kid," he said to the cabbie. You're seein' the game with me."

Sympethetic neighbors filled George and the driver in when they finally got seated. They had just missed home runs by Shuba and Hodges of the Dodgers, they were told. Brooklyn tied the score before the Yanks could get the side out in the sevnth. When they did and McDougald started toward the plate in the Yankee half, George found his great voice.

"Common' gang!" he roared. "Let's make some runs!"

McDougald was out but Joe Collins must have heard. He swung and the ball rose high and fell into the seats behind George and his companion for a homer to put the Yankees ahead.

"You goin' already?" asked the cabbie when he saw George rise and start for an exit. "Well, okey," and started to follow.

"I've seen all I wanted to see kid," he said. "You stay here. I got me a ride home." And he left the puzzled man.

Hug and Lou and Tony and the rest all crowded around him after he got through the pass gate. The questions poured over him.

"Well there's plenty of life in the old gang yet," began George Herman (Babe) Ruth, and went on from there.

Public To Review Latest Productions In Education Field

Tallahasseeans, students and teachers at Florida State University will have the opportunity to review some of the latest educational film productions without charge.

Beginning Tuesday, Sept. 29, and continuing for succeeding Tuesdays from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m., these films will be shown in room 303, Westcott Building, on the FSU campus.

Approximately four films will be shown each evening, with brief intervals between each. These intervals will be used for discussions intended for determining the general reaction to the films.

Through arrangements with some of the outstanding educational film producers, the films will be sent here as released to be previewed and returned. Discussion leaders will be chosen with emphasis on picking someone whose field qualifies him to best lead the discussion on a particular film.

Coupon Books a Must For Game Admittance

Students will not be admitted at football games unless they bring both the coupon book and the ID card that was given them registration day, coach Matherly has announced.

At the last game, a number of students brought only the ID card. Students will not be admitted this week without the coupon book.

Personnel Needed

By BOB GUTTING

Attention all interested personnel: A call to the colors has been issued by Mr. Hartley Price who is in dire need of students, either freshmen or upperclassmen, who would like to participate in gymnastics or the famed "Gymkana" show.

Due to circumstances beyond our control the gym team has come up somewhat short and there are now openings for students in all phases of gymnastics, particularly tumbling, trampoline and parallel bars. No previous training in gymnastics is necessary thereby creating a golden opportunity for you to impress your girl friend.

If you are accepted for the varsity Gym Team you will be among the ranks of the great athletes who, during the past three years, have won four National and six sectional championships while travling to such places as Hattisburg, Miss., Atlanta, Ga., Syracuse, N. Y., Chicago, Ill., and Boulder, Colo., while the "Gymkana" troupe visited such places as St. Petersburg, Fanning Springs and Leesburg, Florida and Valdosta, Bainbridge and Albany, Georgia.

So if "sudden like you sees it plain" (to quote some Pogonese) and would like to join either the Seminole gym team or equally famous "Gymkana" troupe get in touch with Dr. Hartley Price at the East campus Women's Gym any day between the hours of four and five P.M. or call Miss Cindy Faneuf at Landis Hall.

Polgar Claims Bomb Burst Left Him A Telepathic Mind

By LIZ VANG

Hypnotism, mind reading, and memorizing will share the spotlight with Dr. Franz Polgar when he presents his show here October 13

Dr. Polgar, who will present his "Miracles of the Mind" at Leon High, acquired his extraordinary powers after a bomb explosion buried him in a Hungarian army trench for three days during World War I. Months in a hospital corrected his loss of speech and memory, but the strong telepathic quality remained.

Dr. Polgar presents the same show he will present here in New York's Carnegie Hall yearly. He sends out vibrations at all times, graduate of the Budapest University and holds doctorate degrees in both Psychology and Economics.

In the first part of the show memory demonstrations serve as the eye-opener. Dr. Polear can meet a hundred people in rapid succession, note their names, and then will gladly pay $5.00 to each and every one of them whose name he forgets.

The second portion is devoted to mind reading The Doctor asks for mental flashes from his audience and hidden objects (often his check from the sponsor for his appearance) are quickly uncovered.

The finale and really the featured portion of the show is devoted to hypnotism People will lose a lot of inhibitions and perform unexpected stunts at the biddina of the master mentalist.

According to an advertising release, the doctor hypnotized the Georgia Tech football team the day before they were slated to play Alabama last fall. Georgia Tech won the game The next Saturday, Polgar was hundreds of miles away, filling an engagement and the Georgia Tech team lost. It may have been a coincidence, but for the remainder of the season the Atlanta papers were crying: "The team needs Polgar!"

Polgar has a primary theory on the subject of mind reading: "I believe that the human mind sends out vibrations at all times, these are really thought-waves: another human mind may receive these thought waves under certain circumstances. This faculty is probably our most primitive instinct. Before the advent of civilization mankind depended on such intercommunication alone. Perhaps this thought-conveyance system might have been accompanied by a few inarticulate sounds and gestures Mankind, however, began its inevitable road to progress and telepathy communications became inadequate."

Students wishing to obtain tickets to Dr. Polgar's show may do so by presenting the No. 3 coupon from his coupon book The coupons are to be presented at the University Book Store in exchange for a ticket. These tickets may be obtained from now until the 8th, at which time they will go on public sale. The show begins at 8:15 p.m. on October 13.

Veteran's Right To Restoration Granted by US

University Intern Program Gives Practical Know-How

The old complaint that "college kids don't have the practical know-how" has been acknowledged here at Florida State University, and there is now an answer for it.

The answer is the FSU intern program.

SENIORS AND graduate students today have the opportunity to get out of the classroom and put their acquired knowledge to practical application.

At FSU, the School of Education was the first to launch an intern program. It was in 1940, and FSU Florida to send prospecive teachers out into schools throughout the state for actual teaching experience—Florida Southern at Lakeland and University of Tampa were the others.

THE PROGRAM was set up for seniors in education, giving them eight weeks off-campus experience in accredited public schools under teachers with bachelor degrees, especially recommended by principals and supervisors. The American Council on Education suggested the name "interns" and it took hold at FSU.

Now beginning its 13th interning year, the FSU School Education averages sending from 400 to 450 seniors as student-teachers out to intern annually, mostly in Florida, but sometimes in Southern Georgia and Alabama.

THE EDUCATION intern program is by far the largest, because majors in many other schools and departments take part in it to qualify for teaching

The School of Home Economics works cooperatively with the State Department of Education in off-campus training of teachers for vocational homemaking. The interns are supervised by members of the home economics education faculty, and teaching centers are carefully selected to provide all-round programs. Selection is done in cooperation with the State Supervisor of Home Economics Education

RETAILING interns, either seniors in the School of Home Economics department of clothing and textiles, or in the School of Business department of marketing, are something entirely different The program is required for clothing and textile majors but is optional for marketing majors.

Twelve or more retailing interns are sent out the first semester for 30 days of training in outstanding department stores. Tallahassee, Jacksonville, Tampa, St Petersburg and Orlando were chosen as intern cities as they were within visiting range of FSU instructors Varied retail experiences have been highly successful, and without exception the students have been offered jobs in the stores where they interned.

THE SCHOOL of Social Welfare offers job experience at both undergraduate and graduate levels Work of the former is optional and is called interning while that of the latter is required and designated as field practice The school believes "professional training in social work can come only at the graduate level." The interning serves as an orientation to the field, it is all done in Jacksonville under supervision of an FSU professor The eight weeks program, beginning its eighth year gives five from five to 25 students a picture of the community as a whole Their role is mainly to observe in contacting some 25 welfare agencies

FSU's graduate school in social welfare was established five years ago and has been accredited by the National Council on Social Work Education. Obtaining a master's degree in social work is a concentrated experience, and requires two years. About 45 graduates take part in the program annually. They work at agencies in Atlanta, Jacksonville, Thomasville, Tampa, St. Petersburg, Miami, West Palm Beach and Tallahassee. Two agencies cooperating here are Human Relations Institute in the Leon County Health Unit and the Florida Children's Commission in the Caldwell Building

DIETETIC INTERNS are unique at Florida State University in being all graduate students working a full year on the campus under the supervision of Miss Anna Mae Tracy, head dietitian and professor of restaurant and hotel management. There are usually six of them on the campus The program was established in 1929, and in 1935 gained the approval of the American Dietetic Association.

The dietetic internships are called administrative and only six other places in the country besides FSU are approved by ADA for this program of work: Mills College in California, Aetna Life Affiliated Companies in Connecticut, Indiana University, Eastman Kodak Company in New York, Oklahoma A and M College and University of Washington

FSU'S LIBRARY School has a required internship program for students wishing to qualify for school librarianships From four to 12 seniors are sent out each year for eight weeks of work in carefully chosen Florida school libraries Mrs Sara Krentzman Srygley is in charge of the library interns this year. Students wishing to be public or college librarians or perhaps to major in audio-visual work are given an orientation course in the school's curriculum library in lieu of interning

"Intern experiences are vital to the basic student in nursing," according to the dean of the FSU school of nursing, Miss Vivian Duxbury. Realizing the importance of clinical work in hospitals for student nurses, she has set up a varied program which calls for 15 months at the Jackson Memorial Hospital in Miami and about three months each at the W T Edwards Hospital, Tallahassee, and the State Hospital in Chattahoochee. Interning is planned for junior and senior years of students working for a GS in nursing or in nursing education Three FSU faculty member, Miss Karleen Gillies, Miss Mary Jane Dews and Miss Lillian Smiley, are now supervising the work of 16 student nurses at the Miami hospital

THE SCHOOL of Public Administration has developed an excellent interning program, given momentum by location of FSU within walking distance of the state capital, supreme court and various state offices. Students can get practical experience with part time or full time interships at state, couny nr city levels under academic supervision. The school also places interns out in the state to study specific governmental administration set-ups.

Dr. Sidney Kobre, faculty adviser for the student newspaper, and advocate of practical newspaper experience for journalism students, said "Progress has been made this past year in the School of Journalism intern program with full cooperation of Dean Laurence Campbell" He said students worked a week as auxiliary staff at The Democrat, put out an issue of the weekly Capital Labor News, and were assigned to special capital correspondents during the legislative session.

IN ADVERTISING, the department head, Dr Royal H. Ray, is working on an interning program to give majors in both Schools of Business and Journalism practical experience in working with Florida business men.

A number of university departments, notably restaurant and hotel management and baking science and management in the School of Business, are doing a good job of encouraging and helping their students get summer employment to supplement academic and professional work. An example of headway being made in the program is placing of three FSU students, two boys and a girl, in Howard Johnson restaurants on the Florida east coast this past summer — scholarships for the three resulted and assurance of future placement in the national chain Students are urged to work in different places and try out a wide variety of jobs during vacations

THE DEPARTMENT of Art is comparatively new in getting the intern fever, but this past summer placed two exceptionally good students in one of Atlanta's main department stores As on-the-job trainees, they were given experience in production art work for newspapers Rudolph Jegart, associate professor of art, said the summer between junior and senior years is the best time for students to enter the field of advertising design—that gives them another year on campus with added practical meanings to their academic work, and with opportunities for their future better assured.

This, in brief, is The FSU intern program at the present time.

Social Welfare School Is Distinctive In This Area

Two-Fold Program Teaches Social Work, Marriage and Family Living

The school of social welfare at Florida State University is the only school of its kind in the Southeast.

Its program of education and training, community and regional service, and research is more comprehensive than that of most schools of social welfare, and falls under two divisions, social work and marriage and family living.

IN THE DIVISION of social work the school offers a program of education and training on the undergraduate level that prepares students for entering positions in social work.

The undergraduate student may combine his program of education and training in social work with preparation for teaching in the elementary grades, for teaching social studies in the high school, for the ministry, for public administration, for the law and other professions.

A MAJOR FOCUS of the undergraduate program is preparing young people for effective citizenship.

For two decades or more the school of social welfare has been responsible for providing trained social workers for the various social agencies in Florida and adjoining states.

AT THE GRADUATE level the school offers the professional degree of Master of Social Work. The program leading to this degree covers two academic years and consists of a combination of class work and field practice which qualifies the student for some of the better paying positions in social work. This program is accredited by the Council of Social Work Education, the national accrediting body.

In the area of social work the school offers many services to the state and to the region. Members of the faculty conduct institutes and workshops for various groups such as the State Conference of Social Work, the Florida Federation of Social Workers, and similar professional groups

AT THE PRESENT time there are a number of workshops and institutes on "Community Leadership and Community Service" scheduled for the year of 1953-54, in various communities throughout the state.

In addition, the staff is in constant demand to appear before civic clubs, conferences, and associations to discuss some side of social work and social welfare.

BOTH THE FACULTY and the graduate students have been carrying on important researches in social work policy and practice during the last two years. Important studies have been made of Florida's retired, senior citizens at St. Cloud and Winter Park These studies are being enlarged to take in other communities in the state Significant findings have resulted and some of them have been put into effect by the social work agencies of the state.

In the division of marriage and family living, the school of social welfare offers a functional program to serve the needs of all students. Introductory courses are offered on the freshman level entitled "Preparation for Marriage."

SUCH COURSES are offered as early as possible so that young people may get a realistic picture of what marriage is and what is needed in a marital partner in order to promote a successful marriage. The purpose of such courses is to give young people the information whereby they can choose their mates wisely.

In addition to the introductory courses, the division of marriage and family living offers a wide variety of courses on the junior and senior level as well as on the graduate level which are part of the training program of teachers, nurses, ministers, lawyers and official workers.

IN 1950 THE marriage counseling service was established by the school of social welfare. It has regularly served some 200 persons yearly since its inception. The services of this clinic are available not only to students, but also to the people of the Tallahassee community

Physicians, attorneys, ministers and social agencies regularly refer to the counseling service persons who are experiencing difficulties in marriage or who have some pre-marital problem, need for help in arriving at a quate solutions to the prob they face.

STAFF COUNSELORS are p fessionally tranied and exp enced in the field of marr and family counseling and in field of marriage and family ing. All interviews are confi tial and the service is avail without charge to those who sire it.

Community services on broader basis are rend through consultation by the s with individuals who seek to itiate programs of family life ucation in their own commu

THE STAFF ALSO prov leadership in communit throughout the state in cond ing family life institutes, tra ing programs, and single spe ing engagements on topics re ed to marriage and family

The school of social welf diviston of marriage and fam living, provides training for gr uate students who wish to p pare themselves to do teach research, or counseling in field of marriage and family r ationships.

THIS DIVISION participa in the inter-divisional prog lending to the master's or d tor's degree in marriage and fa ily living. Since the number high schools and colleges de ine teachers for such courses preparation for marriage, fam relationships, or marriage a family living are rapidly incre ing, many positions are availa for persons who are well-train to teach in these areas.

FSU is one of the few train centers in the United States persons who wish to enter profession of marriage coun ing. The standards for couns training are high and embo the requirements established the American Association of Ma riage Counselors, Inc. which the national organization of p fessional marriage counselors.

MARRIAGE counselors a trained not only in methods counseling, but they also acqu adequate knowledge in the fie of marriage and family livi medical and legal aspects counseling, elements of psych try, psychology, biology and sociology. Following the class seminar training they are ca fully supervised for at least o year in their counseling practi

Co-Ed Visitation Begins Monday For Inquiry

Chief Physicion Sets New Visiting Hours Evenings Included

Effective Monday, October 12, coed visitation will be permitted in the university hospital, Dr. H G Hathaway, chief physician, announced today.

The present schedule of visiting hours is being abolished entirely and new hours affected. They are: Monday through Friday 7 to 8 p.m. Saturday and Sunday, 2 to 2 p.m.

All visitors are requested to enter the south door of the hospital. As soon as a patient may receive visitors, two visiting cards will be sent down to the front desk. The first two visitors will each get a card to see the patient. When the two cards have been issued, other visitors will have to wait for the cards to come back down.

Said Dr. Hathaway, "Therefore I'm requesting everyone to make their visit short so everyone can see the patient during those hours."

In order to prevent the spread of infectious or contagious disease, it is not considered advisable to permit visiting until after the first 24 to 48 hours following admission.

"We're requesting everyone to respect the visiting hours in this sense: not to come in the clinic during those hours to get cold pills, and such, so as to give the nurse ample time to take care of visitors," said Dr. Hathaway.

This is the first time coed visitation has been allowed on a regulation basis. Before this, special permission could be obtained from the medical director.

School books may also be taken to the hospital now. "If the students will bear with us, we'll give them every opportunity possible to visit their friends," he concluded.

Sophomores Plan Mask-Ball Theme For Annual Hop

A "black and white masquerade" ball, this year's version of the annual traditional Sophomore Hop, will open this year's formal social activities with a charge, according to Barber Yost, sophomore class social chairman. The formal dance, to be held on October 30, is open to the entire student body, without distinction of class.

The ball, with decorations leaning towards the Halloween theme, will boast a "bar effect," with apple cider and donuts on the menu for the evening.

SINCE IT was impossible to have a general masquerade ball, said Yost, the couples will be furnished with black and white masks as they enter, hence the name of the ball.

The dance, to be held at the Student Center, is to last from 9 to 12, music being furnished by Johnnie Baxley's 12-piece orchestra. Dancing will be provided on the main dance floor, the pation, the pink room, and part of the tables and chairs from the main dining room will be removed for dancing, explains Yost.

AN EXTENSIVE campaign has been planned for the dance, which is climaxed by the crowning of the King and Queen of the Sophomore Hop. The Royalty will also have five attending couples. Secret voting for the King and Queen will be handled by regular FSU voting procedures.

Along with all this, entertainment from the sophomore class will be on hand to give a special show for the spectators.

Barbara Yost announced these committee chairmen for the dance: Joan Pritchard, invitations; Nancy Vaughn and Mary Catherine Freeman, voting; Arlene Peterson, Dick Bittner and Mary Louise Dee, court.

CHARLES MIXON, Bobbie Lou Lester and Cynthia Sweat, decorations; Joan Halford and Orchid Alonso, publicity; Inia Jean Pruitt, Bill Doxie and Carol Neal, entertainment; and Randy Church and Porky Alford, hosts and hostesses.

More information on the dance and how tickets may be obtained will be released at a future date.

Joan Halford and and Orchid Alonso, co-chairmen of the publicity committee, announce that the student body had better be on its toes, because a ghouly group of sophomore stunters will be around to scare them into buying tickets for the event. "Heaven help those people who meet up with our ghostly friends," states Joan.

Bryan Holds Mixer

Tally-Ho Requests Students To Leave Pictures in Boxes

The Tally-Ho needs snapshots. This is an urgent request Flambeau has been asked to pass on to the student body. Boxes have been placed in the Amber House, Westcott and the Student Center, and everyone is asked to leave any snaphots depicting their lives on campus; or they can bring them to the Tally-Ho office, 4th floor Longmire Building.

Yearbook Editor Becky Brown said the snapshot pages are important factors in the production of a good Tally-Ho. She said pictures can be any size, but they must be prints and not negatives, as the printing process for the yearbook requires finished snapshots. Miss Brown added the Tally-Ho office will be open every afternoon, Monday through Friday, from two until five o'clock.

Gold Key Men Elect Officers Plan Tapping

The men of Gold Key, Men's Honorary Fraternity elected two of its members to office for the coming year yesterday at their second meeting of the year.

Klyne Nowlin was chosen secretary by unanimous vote of the members and Bob Poley, Treasurer also by acclimation.

TAPPING WAS discussed for the Fall semester. Paul Soraparu, Gold Key president, appointed a three-man committee to arrange for the selection and initiation of men high on the list of extra-curricular activities on campus and scholarship. Klyne Nowlin and John Howard were named co-chairmen of the committee and Milton Carothers, member.

Soraparu explained to the men that it would be their job to select taps on a point basis, as each activity and scholastic average is assigned a certain number of points according to Gold Key standards

MEMBERS ALSO decided to continue three of the tap projects begun last year. Placing of "welcome to Florida State University" signs at various locales around campus, erection of a bulletin board in the Westcott area and naming of campus streets were named as major projects this semester.

FCC Approves FM Application For FSU Station

Florida State University today received formal notice from the Federal Communications Commission approving an application for a low-power, non-commercial, educational FM radio station, according to an announcement by President Doak S. Campbell.

"The new station," Dr. Campbell said, "will replace the wired-wireless student station which was operated on the campus for four years, and which ceased operation last spring because the transmission system could not be adapted to comply with Federal Communications Commission regulations."

OPERATING UNDER the call letters, WFSU-FM, the new station will serve the community of Tallahassee as well as the student body of FSU. Programs will be heard in an area within a 15-mile radius of the FSU campus. Listeners must have FM radios or FM tuners used in connection with standard AM radios. FM tuners may be purchased at nominal cost.

President Campbell explained that for listeners in the area WFSU-FM will represent cultural entertainment with particular emphasis on good music. For students majoring in communications areas of the University the station will serve as a laboratory.

THE SEMINOLE Broadcasting Association, the student organization responsible for the operation of the old wired-wireless station will continue to be the organization for students interested in extra-curricular participation in radio.

The new FM station will operate seven days a week. Present plans call for a daily schedule with sign-on at 2 p.m., sign-off at 10 p.m. Afternoon hours will be devoted almost exclusively to uninterrupted good music. Evening hours will feature talks, discussions, news and news interpretation, drama, sports and special events.

THE STUDENT STAFF operating the station is drawn from those persons elected to positions of responsibility in the Seminole Broadcasting Association. They will work under the direct supervision of Roy Flynn, director of public relations, with assistance from the schools of music and journalism and the department of speech.

"There is a two-fold reason behind the establishing of a low-power non-commercial educational station on the campus," the FSU president said. "We hope to serve a small but significant public whose listening needs are not always adequately met by existing commercial stations. In performing this service we will provide a realistic laboratory situation for students in our expanding program of training for careers in radio and the communication field."

FSU Dames Club Holds First Meet

The first general meeting of the FSU Dames Club will be held Wednesday, October 14, at 8:00 p.m in the main lounge of the Longmire Building.

The guest speaker will be Mrs. Harold Richards, from the Faculty Wives Organization, who will give a talk on the early days of the university

Following the introduction of new officers, the group will enjoy a social hour. All student wives are cordially invited.

ONCE UPON A TIME . . . . Adding to the ornamentation of the FSU's museum exhibit on the Kon-Tiki theme are Mary Dressler and Margaret Richter. The display of ancient Paruvian relics, tied together with the story of the legendary Kon-Tiki, is now open to the FSU Museum six days a week.

Kon-Tiki Theme Unites Museum Exhibition Of Artifacts From Ancient Peruvian Culture

ONCE UPON A TIME, so goes the legend of KON TIKI. A white and bearded race of men built a civilization in the Andes. Then, in a great battle with the Incas on an island in Lake Titicaca the bearded ones were massacred. — Except for KON-TIKI (Sun-Tiki or Sun God) himself and a few companions who fled to the Pacific coast. There they set sail in their Balsa Sailing rafts for the isles of the Pacific. Thus originated the Polynesians. It is a naive and charming tale—as naive and charming as the recent book of adventure which bears the name of the legendary God, KON-TIKI.

There words cover the archway leading to one of the most interesting and educational displays ever presented by the Florida State University Museum. From the High Andes in Peru comes a realistic portrayal of life long ago. These are presented in the form of artifacts. The culture of these Peruvians like the cultures of Egypt or Babylonia or Greece was developed through millinia of time and now today we may see actual proof of their labor and accomplishments

The entrance to the collection is a remarkable representation of the Carbelled Arch which stands among temple ruins in the High Andes. It is something similar to the walls and temples built by the Roman and Greek Empires and also closely parallels ancient Egyptian construction.

THESE RUINS were found high in the mountains of Peru but just why this is so is not entirely known. It may have been for the same reason we in the United States moved westward.

As the legend explains the people battled with the Incas and all of the white race were massacred except Kon-Tiki who is said to have fled to the isles of the Pacific. Here the legend tells that they inhabited these isles and the Polynesians were known

THIS LEGEND could be a valid explanation and account of the origin of the Polynesian race. A South Equatorial current moves constantly and it is possible to have floated on this stream and reached the South Pacific. Other varifications include the close relationship of the customs, constructions and language associations of the Peruvians and Polynesians. Nevertheless, the legend is a highly colorful and dramatic episode and these remains which are in the museum and the few facts stated here should aid any person to better understand and enjoy this story.

Inside the model archway there are many arrangements and displays of metal work, pottery and woven materials. The fabrics are of a highly interesting nature due to the fact that they are woven from the hair of the Llama, Vicuna, Alpaca and from the cotton plant. They represent a wide range of color and print and some of the pieces are approximately 2,000 years old.

THE METAL work and pottery show a skill in art and adaptation to their needs.

The collection was donated by an alumna, Mary Carter, and all of the pieces were found in Peru. Responsible for the fine layout of the display is T. Miake. The hours that the students may visit the museum are as follows: Tuesday through Friday, 12:30-5; Saturday, 9-12, Sunday and holidays, 2-5.

Senior Class Supper Date Announced

There will be a Senior Class supper Wednesday, October 14, in the South Seminole Room at 3.45 p.m. All seniors should attend this dinner.

Dr Sam Neel will be the guest speaker. There will also be class announcements and directions for coming senior events this year.

This is a new experiment for the Senior Class: if this supper proves a success there will be similar programs for the seniors throughout the year.

The officers of the Senior Class are striving to make this year's senior program more interesting and enjoyable for the class.

Senior Class President Colin English has stated that he believes senior function should change correspondingly with the rapid expansion of the school.

English advises, "Help your school by supporting your Senior Class. Maybe if the seniors can show some interest in their class, other groups will follow their example. It's your last year. Why not make it your best one?"

Stoff Sets Deodline For Annual Pictures

Friday, October 16 is the last day students may have their Tally-Ho picture made. Those who have not as yet had their's made are urged to comply with the deadline or be left out of the 1953-54 Tally-Ho.

Appointments for pictures can be made from 2 to 3 p.m in the Tally-Ho office, fourth floor Longmire.

Compulsory Test Set For Transfers Monday at 5:00

Transfer students at Florida State University will take the compulsory "Knowledge for College" test Monday at 3 p.m. in Longmire Auditorium, it was announced today. The original date for the exam was changed from Thursday to Monday due to crowding.

All students unable to take the test at this new time should get in touch with Yvonne McCarthy at 2-2626 immediately

The test, covering social rules Pow Wow regulations and House regulations is necessary to grant students permission to make day or weekend trips. Make-up tests will be given to those failing to pass the first exam. Day students are not required to take the "Knowledge for College" test, Miss McCarthy said.

Revell Disqualified From Frosh Vote For Illegal Letter

The elections committee last night disqualified presidential aspirant Walter Revell from all Freshman class offices, following his distributing campaign literature prior to the legal time

The case was brought to the attention of the elections committee after mimeographed letters distributed in Freshman dormitories were discovered

According to Chapter 703.1.C of the Constitution of the Student Body, "Seven days before primary day (a Tuesday): Campaign literature and posters may be distributed; active campaigning may begin at 5 p.m."

Revell's case was heard in an open meeting of the elections committee yesterday afternoon. At that time, evidence was studied and Revell questioned. The committee had copies of campaign letter dated October 5, 1953.

Revell admitted having read the rule that campaign literature could not be posted before the prescribed time in the October 2 issue of the Florida Flambeau.

The committee barred him from running for any office in the coming elections, since the rule he had broken applied to all offices.

Revell has the right of appeal to the University Court.

Paramount Needs Movie Volunteers

Many student volunteers are needed for "Sportlights" movies for Paramount Studios this Sunday afternoon at 2 at Camp Seminole.

The volunteers are requested to have a good knowledge and skill of sailing and canoeing because they will be pictured on the lake doing these various water sports. Student volunteers should wear light or bright colored bathing suits that would stand out in a black and white film.

All students are invited to be present because an audince will be used. The volunteer audience and watchers may wear any type of camp clothing or street wear

Those who will be canoeing or sailing should have their equipment checked out and ready to go by 3 p.m.

Solons Vote 9-6 Against Galphin; Ask For Re-Vote

Hint Re-Submission Of Galphin's Name By Senior Stoffers

Senate members Tuesday voted nine to six against Flambeau Senior Staff's recommendation of Bruce Galphin as this year's editor to replace last year's election favorite, Marcia Morris, unable to return to school this semester.

This action throws into consideration the name of Warren Cobb, named as News Editor by Morris last year and a member of the senior staff. Cobb has indicated he would be willing to have his name brought up for a vote in the Senate should the Flambeau Staff nominate him

RECOMMENDED by Flambeau staff at their first meeting, Galphin' name has been twice brought up before the solons. At their first meeting of the year, senate members voted to shelve the matter until Tuesday. Tuesday's session started with routine business at hand, with discussion centering early in the meeting on Galphin's nomination and continuing until six o'clock when the body voted nine to six against the nomination.

Men's Senate Representative Wayne Terry brought in an accusation against Galphin that he was anti-fraternity and alleged that Galphin had told him this in confidence last year.

GALPHIN, called into Senate from a Flambeau Senior Staff meeting be was holding at the same time, flatly denied the charges stating, "I don't remember ever having said such a thing." He added, "As everyone knows, I am non-Greek. I am neither anti- or pro-Greek." Galphin, taken aback by the charges, went on to say thet at the first Flambeau Senior Staff meeting of the year, members attending discussed and voted favorably on an editorial policy of strict, effective news coverage, no favoritism to any organization or individual and an overall objective newspaper.

Senator Frank Shaw then called for a five-minute period of questioning Galphin on three issues. Asked what his feelings are on Greek organizations, Galphin said he was neither anti-Greek or pro-Greek. His answer to a query on his feelings toward political parties was, in essence, that he was for them, and had been run on the Student Party ticket last year for Senator. Galphin took a negative stand when asked about the National Student Association, stating be is against N.S.A. for the FSU campus

SIMILAR QUESTIONS were asked of Warren Cobb.

Cobb's answers to the three issues were about the same as Galphin's. He said that although he is a fraternity member, he has not let this influence his presentation of news. Cobb said although he has not made a complete study of N. S. A., he feels that he would take a stand against it. He added that he is in favor of political parties here, and echoed Galphin's statement saying he would like to see a

Traffic Court Begins With First Session Next Tuesday Eve

The first session of the Student Traffic Court will be Tuesday, October 13 at 7:30 p.m. in the Senate Room of the Longmire Building.

Notices to appear before the court were sent to violators earlier this week. Those failing to appear before this session of the court will constitute a further violation.

Each misdemeanor will be placed in the student's personal files and will become part of the University records. This new regulation, it is hoped, will decrease the number of violations.

Pinky Nowlin, chief justice of the traffic court, requests that students who drive cars on campus use the parking lots near Florida Hall and North Cawthon Hall. He reports that there is now a bus service to and from West Hall that students should take advantage of.

This year's traffic hazard is worse than last year's because of the increased number of cars on campus. It is requested that students who live within walking distance of classes refrain from driving their cars to classes and leave the space for those who need it.

Larger Number of Foreign Students in U.S. Than Ever Before, New Census Reveals

There were 33,671 foreign students from 128 different independent nations, dependent areas, and trust territories studying in the United States last year. It is the largest total of foreign students ever in the U. S. at one time. This fact is reported in Education for One World, the census of foreign students published today by the Institute of International Education, 1 East 67th Street, New York City.

The 28-page booklet presents a brief survey of America's student population, who they are, where they come from, what they study, where they study, and who supports them. Tables and charts point up this basic data and individual examples highlight the statistics.

EDUCATION FOR ONE WORLD is the story of a fascinating venture in education and international affairs, writes Kenneth Holland, Institute President, in his foreword to the pamphlet. "The story is about people who are not in the headlines — the 33,671 young men and women . . . who learned both from us and about us in the classrooms of American colleges during the past academic year."

For the census, students completed questionnaires giving their country, field of study, academic institution, and source of financial support. Of the 2,720 colleges, universities, and professional schools polled, 1,148 reported at least one foreign student enrolled. A "foreign student" was defined as a citizen of a country other than the United States who is studying or training in a higher educational institution in the United States, and who plans to return to his home country when his studies are completed.

WHERE DO FOREIGN students come from? One-third of those in the U. S. call Asia or the Near East home, while one-quarter come from Europe, one-quarter from Latin America, and one-seventh from Canada. The remainder are citizens of Africa and Oceania. Nearly half of the students come from eleven countries: Canada, China, Colombia, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, India, Iran, Japan, Mexico, and the Philippines. This diversity in origin draws attention to the fact that there can be no "typical" foreign student.

What do they study? Humanities are the most popular subjects of study for foreign students. Over twenty per cent are studying liberal arts, languages, literature, religion, philosophy, and art. Almost as many are in the field of engineering. Other fields in order of importance are the physical and natural sciences, the social sciences, medicine, business administration, education, and agriculture.

ENGINEERING HAS the greatest attraction for students from Asia, being chosen by about twenty-two per cent of them. Another fifteen per cent study humanities. The reverse is true of students from Europe and Canada, who can get their technical studies at home; twenty-five per cent of these students register for courses in the humanities. Latin American enrollment is about equally divided between humanities and engineering. The distribution by field is more even in Africa, indicating the many and varied needs of that continent. The physical and social sciences are most popular with these students.

Students from Alachua, Levy, Union, Gilchrist, Clay and Bradford Counties are urged to contact her with any news that might be of interest to the readers in the Gainesville area. Barbara lives in 107 Gilchrist Hall and her post office box number is 1626.

Flambeau Issues Report On Progress, Organization

By BRUCE GALPHIN, Acting Editor

It is always dificult for those on the outside of a newspaper, those who do not participate in the daily routines and struggles, to understand the paper's problems. They do not realize the experience and labor necessary to the smooth operation of a publication.

When such misunderstanding is aggravated by what can only be described as wilful misrepresentation, however, it becomes necessary to bring the facts into sharp focus. This editorial, then, comes as a sort of progress report on the Flambeau to the student body.

We feel that the organization and functioning of the Florida Flambeau has been improved considerably along several lines, and we want to point these out now.

1) First of all, a system of comprehensive news coverage is under way. Some 50 journalism students and other interested writers are covering departments, clubs, religious organizations, student government and special functions. They should provide the student newspaper with the most complete coverage it has been able to give in years.

This child was not born without pains, and the staff members who helped work out the details, as well as Messrs. Kobre and Wozniak of the School of Journalism, deserve considerable praize for the excellent system they have worked out.

2) We have made a similar effort on the editorial page to broaden our reading-audience among the student body. We are presenting the student body a FULL editorial page with columns on a variety of subjects: Robert Strane's superb, penetrating analysis of opera and recordings; Richard Stevens' intelligent, sympathetic views on drama; Warren Cobb's lucid explanations of modern political movements; Bob Folsom's interesting book reviews; Bev Lacayo's witty little sketches; plus articles by Gene Lawler, David Dreis and the acting editor. We feel that there is reading material for all.

3) With the help of Alpha Delta Sigma and Gamma Alpha Chi, men's and women's advertising fraternities, we have been able to increase and enliven our advertising. The increased funds make possible six page editions, such as today's.

4) In senior staff we have outlined the duties and time-schedules of staff members in order to complete our work more promptly and more efficiently.

5) We have concluded a new contract with our printer, The Tallahassee Democrat, which enables us to save the student body money, provided we are more conscientious in meeting deadlines. Already we have been able to roll back the deadline time by about two hours under last year's.

Moreover, we are ever on the alert for new ideas to add zest to the student newspaper. Projected at present are new feature story ideas and new columns.

Somehow or another, we feel that our record of accomplishment is not minor one. There hardly seems justification for the charge that we have not organized. And after all, we have only been at work three weeks. Give us time.

● SENIORS POSTED

The members of this year's Senior Class should notice the news story on page 1 announcing plans for a progressive experiment.

This program would be in keeping with the dynamic structure of our university. Frequent gatherings serve as a cohesive factor for any organization.

Senior Class President Colin English is to be commended for his interest and enterprise in supporting this program, designed to make the senior year "more interesting and enjoyable."

We repeat English's question. This is your last year, seniors. Why not make it your best one?

Folsom Takes Trip Through Camera

By BOB FOLSOM

You're sitting in a theater watching an interesting movie, and then all of a sudden the screen goes blank. Something has happened to the projector up in the projection room. You get irritated, maybe, glance around meaningly or mumble a few choice words, but, have you ever wondered what goes on up there? A few questions have probably come into your mind from time to time, and perhaps the answer would be interesting to you.

The size of a projection room in a theater will depend on the size of the house, but every theater will have at least two projection machines, usually 35mm, along with two or three projectionists.

TO GAIN the image of a large projector, picture the key with which a child tightens his roller skates with, magnify it, put a stand on it, and you have it. The long slot of the key used to tighten a roller skate we will call a lamp and is hollow and circular in shape. The part with which you grasp the key is where we will place the reels. This part will be facing the screen.

The hollow lamp, which has a door on it, is the method by which light is projected upon the screen. The door of the lamp is opened and two objects, thinner than a pencil and approximately a foot in length are fastened onto horizontally, what we will call stilts. The stilts are controlled by an outside connection. The objects are a negative and positive carbon, and when the tip end of each is touched together, you have somewhat the same reaction end glare on acetylene torch throws off, only more so. A small window as big as your hand enables the projectionist to view this process. A lid on the front of the lamp prevents the light from reaching the film before the projector is started. It is raised when the machine is switched on in order to have light on the screen. If you have ever wondered what happened when a movie almost blacks out in parts, or gets very brown in spots, it is because the carbons are not adjusted correctly.

THERE ARE usually six reels to a full-length movie. The reels are about 20 inches in diameter, with a running length depending on how much film is actually on the reel. Maximum time is about 17 minutes for each reel. A reel of film is placed at the top (keeping in mind an eight-shaped key with a little space in between) while an empty reel is placed at the bottom. A few frames of the film at the top are then threaded through the intricate parts of the machine, i.e., sound track, light outlet, etc., and attached to the empty reel at the bottom.

This process is accomplished on the other machine. Both machines have now been threaded up.

THE PROJECTIONIST lights up the lamp, switches on the machine, turns on the sound switch, and presses down on the foot pedal controlling the changeover of the picture from one projector to the other. The movie has begun.

When the reel runs down to a two-minute warning marke, shown on the reel, this is the cue for the projectionist to light the lamp in the other machine. With 30 seconds left to go, a small circle called a cue mark will appear in the upper right corner of the screen. This is the cue to switch on the other projector and lift the lid on the lamp. Immediately after this, a second cue mark appears on the screen in the same place, and the projectionist then switches on the sound and presses down on the foot pedal thereby cutting both sound and picture off the other machine. This process of changeover is repeated over and over. If you notice sometime, the scene will always change when accomplishing a changeover. Watch for the cue mark sometime.

The matter of rewinding the reels so you won't see the movie upside down is done on a separate machine made for that purpose.

THE MUSIC you may hear during intermission is controlled by the projectionist on a phonograph system hooked into the projector system. Don't know whether to hold him responsible for that graveyard music we hear all the time, though the money for the recordings doesn't come out of his pocket. He's not listening to the music anyway.

We could have interviewed a real life projectionist to give this story color (dig him). Anyway, maybe now you can go up there and fix it if anything goes wrong. If not, for further instructions, send me $5 and an empty reel.

Six Male Cheerleaders Strut Stuff at First Home Game

The six male cheerleaders along with the 13 female cheerleaders showed their stuff at Saturday night's home game with Louisville.

The combination of girls and boys made for that extra little bit needed to put the cheers over at FSU's first victory of the football season. The six boys were selected out of about 50 who turned out last Wednesday night. They are El L. Allen, George Carver, Bobby Jones, Rod Smith, "Sticks" Steinberg and Tommy Waits.

IN 1951 AND 1952, male cheerleaders were discontinued because of lack of enthusiasm on their part.

The last time FSU saw men in front of the stands was in 1950, when they were led by Mac Mangham.

THE GIRL cheerleaders are led by Ruthie Griffin and Shirley Revel, are Margaret Ann Balinger, Carol Coston, Sally Hamner, Sarah Hambley, Barbara Henderson, Dot Johnson, Betty Ann Monroe, Pat Scheibling, Nancy Warner, Ann and June Yates. The latter give the squad a sister combination.

"I want to thank the Student Body for supporting them," said Milton Carothers, Student Body president. "I think the school spirit shown Saturday night was the best in several years, and with the addition of the male cheerleaders, and the fine band, we ought to have one of our best years."

Notice To Interns

All students who plan to interne second semester and do not turn in their papers by noon today, must go to room 204 Education and talk to Dr. Goulding.

FSU Student Art Shown This Week

Paintings and silk screen prints by five present and former students of the department of art, Florida State University, have been on exhibit during the week of October 5 in connection with the County Home Demonstration Agents' meeting at Gainesville.

Mrs. Gladys Kendall, home industries and marketing specialist, arranged the exhibition, which includes work by Taizo Miake, Jack M. Wise graduate students in the FSU department of art, and Margaret Rigg, Carolyn Henry and John Keester, graduates of FSU.

The pictures selected range from quite representational work to "College No. 5," an abstract painting with applique on buckram by Wise.

Miss Rigg was employed as staff artist of the FSU publications department after her graduation, and Miss Henry is working as an artist-draftsman for the TVA at Chattanooga, Tenn.

'36 Radio: Mars Invasion

By DAVID DREIS

Although Marilyn Monroe and the 'Doggie in the Window' may rock this nation these days, most of the things that go on these calendars, we take for granted. Even the most dangerous things like radio news.

The year was 1936 and copy editors were getting gray at the temples. Newspaper extras were getting smaller in number and the main reason was that radio stations were on the spot with news bureaus and playing it up more colorfully than even the boldest tabloid. That year, the newspaper hated the radio.

"Hauptman is in the electric chair at present," announced the commentator. Something went wrong with the chair's electricity and the death of the Lindberg baby's kidnapper was held up for 35 minutes. It was here that Gabriel Heatter made his name. His constant ad-libbing and dramatic speeches brought ears closer to sets. It was radio news in action.

Newspapers curtailed any mention of radio and its stars and in 1938 refused to publish the schedules. It waited for a chance to strike back and it did.

In 1938 a man by the name of Orson Wells produced a program of drama and suspense. An adaptation of H. O. Wells' 'War of the Worlds.' It started off with an announcement, then dance music from the roof of a New York hotel. The music played half-way and then: "We interrupt this program for a news bulletin from the NBC newsroom." The music stopped and all those who thought they were listening to a musical show were now deep in interest in the 'news bulletin.' The announcer continued, "Mount Wilson Observatory has sent word that a rocket-type ship is headed for the city of New York. NBC will be on hand with the news as soon as it is received."

Telephones rang from house to house. Calls came in to network outlets and rival stations about the 'rocket-type ship.' "Here's further news on that rocket from the NBC newsroom. It has landed just outside of New Jersey and according to telescopic lenses shows war-like people from—yes, ladies and gentlemen . . . Mount Wilson verifies it . . . they're war-like from Mars."

There were suicides and many reached for their guns, but the newspapers, now in on the fraud, issued extras of 'HOAX.' Radio news was out of hand. The newspapers pounced on radio with all its editorial space and led one to believe that the whole nation was in turmoil. Many people were, but if they had tuned in at the beginning they would have heard Wells announce: "The program you are about to hear is an adaptation of H. G. Wells' book," etc. Then it went into the music.

Yes, it's been a long time and now we take the radio news for granted, but there are many who will never forget 'The War of the Worlds.'

Letters to the Editor . . .

Kudos

Editor of the Flambeau:

I have struck these past two weeks by the high quality of the Flambeau. This is most gratifying to me, as I know it must be to other members of the faculty. It is cheering to have a student paper for which we do not have to apologize. Keep up the good work.

M. F. NIMKOFF.

Advice

Dear Flambeau Staff:

We want to congratulate Bruce Galphin, the acting editor of the Flambeau, and the rest of the staff for the excellent issues that have been published so far this year. We realize that the Flambeau staff regrets that Marcia Morris was not able to return this year, but we certainly want to compliment you highly on your quick and wise decision to nominate Bruce Galphin as your acting editor. Keep up the fine work!

Now for a little word to those legislative representatives of our campus—the Senators. Let's forget about our petty biases concerning anti-Greek prejudices, etc. There are 15 Greeks in the University Senate to four Independents and nine Greeks to one (one) Independent on Women's Judiciary as just two examples. The Student Body association has a fine group of leaders, who represent the entire campus; however, if we want to be facetious, we could say that our Student Government is pro-Greek. We don't think this is the case and never will. Let's consider such things as a desire for the job as exemplified by the last elections, seniority right and journalistic ability in choosing our next editor. Be sensible folks and think objectively!

Sincerely yours,
JO ANNE SETZER

Scholarship Awaits Orange Bowl Queen

In addition to winning Dixie's most glamorous tiara, a Florida State University coed will receive a scholarship to F.S.U. if she's selected as Miami's 1954 Orange Bowl Queen. She'll also receive a chic wardrobe, other awards and world-wide fame.

The 20th annual Orange Bowl Queen will succeed Marion Ettie, a University of Miami coed, who was preceded by Ruthie Garst of F.S.U.

FOUR RUNNERSUP will be named Orange Bowl princesses.

The deadline to enter the 1954 charm race has not yet been set, but Orange Bowl officials say it will be much earlier than in past years as a special assist to the costumer and dress designers.

THE CONTEST is open to unmarried Florida residents and girls from other states attending Florida schools, which makes F.S.U. lovelies eligible by the wholesale. The age bracket is 16 to 24. Professional actresses and entertainers are barred but models for pay can take part.

Entrants are required to submit three, unretouched, eight by 10, black and white glossy photographs to Duke Jordan, Orange Bowl News Bureau Director, 615 S. W. 2nd Ave., Miami 36, Florida. Pictures should include a portrait, one in a play suit or bathing attire and a third in street or evening wear. Every effort will be made to return photographs.

TO ASSIST JUDGES in screening photos preliminary to interviews with semi-finalists in Miami, Orange Bowl Queen hopefuls should furnish: name, address, phone, school, age, weight, height (without shoes), along with bust, waist and hip measurements.

Minor girls must have parents' written permission for them to enter the contest and for the Orange Bowl Committee to use their pictures in Orange Bowl Festival publicity.

Casting Club Meets Tuesday Afternoon

The Coed Bait Casting Club will meet every Tuesday at 5:00 on the lawn in front of Women's Gymnasium.

Several registered tournaments have been scheduled to give club members an opportunity to win merit, expert and master awards.

Any student, beginner or expert, is invited to join. The equipment will be furnished by the Physical Education Department.

Ideas, Not Words, Disturb Tryants

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Every petty tyrant has one thing in common with others of his ilk: He thinks that while a thing may be acceptable for himself, the next person is not good enough for it. He thinks that although he is emotionally stable enough to read a particular book or see a certain movie, others cannot control themselves. Thus he becomes the banner and the censor.

One variation on this theme of tyranny is particularly prevalent on the college campus. It sings the tune of "Oh, he writes over people's heads. I understand it, of course, but others probably don't."

Often it is less tyranny than ignorance, of course. They don't understand, and quite understandably, they are ashamed to admit it.

Admittedly, there is such a thing as abscure writing, but this is not what these people object to. It is not long words, but the connection of common words into ideas that disturbs them. Hardly in training to cope with ideas, they are caught off base.

What the wounded ones want to read, when they bother to read at all, is that with which they are thoroughly familiar: nothing to ruffle their composures.

Since such feeling is so widespread, a college newspaper or a college writer might well adopt a policy of speaking trivialities if popularity were all that was desired. A few of us "dangerous thinkers," though, feel that there is a little more to education than

One of the basic tenets of education is that people are capable of grasping new ideas, and that one of the principal ways they may learn things in which direct experience is impossible is by reading. To many, however, this acquiring of knowledge is hateful. It necessitates giving up preconceptions and misconceptions. It means a critical examination of the self, a re-examination of goals and more honesty than they are willing to allow themselves.

Personally, I must reaffirm my pledge to present ideas in columns. Naturally, I want an audience, so I am not likely to pore through a Thesaurus looking for multisyllable words. There is no need to use a long word where a shorter one is sufficient or perhaps even more concise. The best of ideas become blurry in a cloud of verbosity.

Thus in this one sense, I must also decry writing over people's heads, but this is just another way of saying I prefer the concise to the wordy. I believe that content should not be buried in style.

But never will I promise not to present the readers with ideas. In fact, there is real question why one should bother to write material without ideas, for if people merely want optical exercise they can read the telephone directory.

I feel it is insulting to students for others to set themselves up as judges of what should not be read. I have faith that the educational processes CAN work whether they always do or not. As long as I write, I will let neither tyranny nor ignorance convince me that writing TO the students is writing over their heads.

THE SPECTATOR

World More Than Two Armed Giants

By WARREN COBB

In his most recent column, appearing Wednesday, Walter Lippmann, dean of living American journalists, expressed his concern over a prevailing notion that the present atomic race will soon be like "two scorpions in a bottle, each capable of killing the other, but only at the risk of his own life."

Lippman believes that this is fundamentally a misleading picture of the atomic situation, and that it is also a symptom of a dagerous American neurosis.

Russia and the United States do not stand alone like two giants, facing each other in preparation for mortal combat. There are many other powers, both large and small, that have vital interests in the outcome of the present world situation.

Lippmann feels that it is necessary that we realize this if we are to have policy rather than panic.

With knowledge that Russia has at her disposal the most devastating weapon ever known to mankind, the hydrogen bomb, many look toward the future desparingly. They fear attack, a war of annihilation, an Armageddon in our time in which mutilation will be the victor's only spoil.

The impulse of a frightened mind is often to seek to destroy the enemy without reservations. This, I suppose, is a natural instinct of the species. But it is as we rise above our unreasoned impulses and instincts that we are men and not animals.

The answer to the present world crisis may lie in diplomacy rather than armed conflict. This possibility has received some severe setbacks as a result of the disharmony within the United Nations.

So long as one faction (Russia) continues to maintain a belligerent attitude, a sound and workable solution and dissolving the tensions of John Q. Public is impossible. It is naive and hypocritical to assert that any positive results can be obtained while this is true.

And it will remain true so long as Russia retains her veto power—and it is certain that she will not willingly relinquish it. Not only that but it is also rather certain that the people of the United States would not consent to rescinding the veto power of our own country. This seems to present a definite impasse.

But the failures of the U. N. should not be mistaken for the ultimate failure of man in the modern world. A war of group survival is not the logical consequence.

The failures of the group should never imply the hopelessness of the individual.

From John Steinbeck's recent novel, East of Eden, there is a paragraph which eloquently expresses the proposition of man today—and tomorrow . . .

"There are monstrous changes taking place in the world, forces shaping a futre whose face we do not know. In our time mass or collective production has entered our economies, our politics, and even our religion, so that some nations have substituted the idea collective for the idea God. This in my time is the danger. At such a time it seems good to me to ask myself these questions: What do I believe in? What must I fight for and what must I fight against?"

When we have answered these questions to our own satisfaction, we will have no scorpions nor neuroses to overcome.

CAMPUS CARAVAN

Senate Weighs Politic vs Maturity

By BEVERLY LACAYO

Student Senate, wake up! We're off to a mediocre start this year by the law of averages.

President Carothers is doing an excellent job of organizing his work and his Cabinet. His manner of accomplishing and assigning the various tasks which are under his authority is deliberative, orderly, and fair.

The Senate, on the other hand, is far from putting its best foot forward. Too slow to get rolling and too quick to quit at their first meeting, they showed even less alertness at their second meeting when they failed to ratify Carothers' appointment to fill the Flambeau-editor vacancy.

In the Senate debate over acting-Editor Galphin the following facts were either not mentioned or ignored: 1) Bruce Galphin was a very close runner-up to Marcia Morris, who was elected editor last spring. 2) Marcia chose him as her managing Editor in the spring and then suggested him as the logical man to fill her position when she wrote the President that she could not return this year. 3) Bruce was also the choice of the Senior staff to be their Editor and he may be renominated by that body in spite of the senate action. 4) he has retained last year's staff with a few additions and has worked for and obtained the cooperation and loyalty of the best workers on that staff.

The effectiveness of his work so far has been remarkable when we consider the hurried circumstances of his appointment. For five straight issues we have had excellent news coverage. The printers' deadlines have been met each time (something no editor has done since I was a freshman). Many letters have come in already from grateful students and faculty members alike commending Bruce and the staff for the high quality of the paper this year. Editorial policy has remained consistent with the statement of it in the first issue—"Even worse than poor style is poor taste . . . and we hope to avoid sophomoric attacks on individuals and conditions."

Nevertheless, Men's vice-president, Wayne Terry, lead the debate over Galphin's nomination by accusing him of being anti-Greek and giving the Senate the impression that Galphin would initiate a campaign to abolish social Fraternities from this campus the minute he got half a chance. What his words meant (outside of the realm of power politics) is unfathomable, since two of the three full page headlines in the paper so far have carried Fraternity and Sorority news — at the end of their respective rush weeks.

Acting-editor Galphin's own words were, "I may be non-Greek, but that does not imply anti-Greek." My feeling on the matter as a non-Greek, is that Greek - non-Greek relationships, which have never been in very good shape on this campus, will really hit a low if the Senate is frightened into accepting the suspicions of a certain Senator over and above the facts which they themselves may verify.

Why, then do the members of the Senate see red when someone irresponsibly throws the word "anti-Greek" into the discussion? Why are they willing to act decisively on a question when they have heard only one side of the story presented to them?

This type of situation usually arises because people are not thinking for themselves. It is only too easy to be led by one person who, knowing his personal preference, plans carefully ahead of time how best to have others fall in with him, but neglects to consider if his preference is for the common good. This is commonly known as "politicking."

Student government in a University can be used as a practicing field for this kind of petty politics which we find all too often in our "adult" legislative bodies; or, it can be used as a proving ground for the idealism that youth alone has to offer. The idealism that gives us faith that men can discuss rationally and peaceably and strive together for the common good, without each trying to grind his own axe first.

The ability to cooperate, like many other abilities, is developed and does not simply spring from nowhere at a time of crisis. So, senate members, use your experience in legislation wisely and it can serve you always as a remainder that success needn't mean exercising personal power, that the word altruism needn't be relegated to the world of print, that self interest has many more advantages when it refers to the group rather than one or two members.

Nursing Instructors Fly Over State For Classes

Although we've never seen the "angels in white" with their wings on, Florida State does have flying nurses. Miss Agnes E. Salisbury, faculty member of the School of Nursing, literally has to fly to her classes to get there before her pupils.

Leaving Tallahassee on Monday of each week, Professor Salisbury takes a plane to Jacksonville, flies on to Sarasota for classes on Thursday, arrives in St. Petersburg to teach on Friday, and returns via the big iron bird to Tallahassee on Saturday morning.

THIS UNIQUE plan of teaching is sponsored by the General Extension Division of Florida to provide registered nurses with the opportunity to take specialized courses.

The classes Miss Salisbury teaches are two and a half hour courses in Administration in Nursing Services and Teaching in Schools of Nursing. The classes are open only to registered nurses or graduate students of schools of nursing.

Last year, FSU's School of Nursing had five flying faculty members who covered a record distance of 45,000 miles, teaching some 400 nurses in the state of Florida. The mileage represents the trips made to teach in West Palm Beach, Pensacola, Orlando, Tallahassee, Tampa, St. Petersburg, Jacksonville and Gainesville.

MISS VIVIAN Duxbury, dean of the School of Nursing, and a "Hawkeye," as people from Iowa are called, reports that she is pleased with the progress of the flying and teaching program.

Although time for rest comes very seldom, Dean Duxbury claims that the faculty members who travel and teach enjoy it immensely, becoming acquainted with nurses from all over the state. Dean Duxbury taught a class in Gainesville last year as a part of this extension program.

Since the School of Nursing opened at FSU in 1950, it has joined the ranks of progress, adding a new note in the line of teaching. Not only does our campus have the famed "Flying High," but it has flying nurses as well.

Foreign Students

How old are they? The average foreign student is older than his American counterpart. He often has several years of practical experience behind him when he undertakes Amercian study. The exception is the Latin American who often comee north for his entire undergraduate training.

DO MANY FOREIGN women study here? One out of every four students polled in the census was a woman. The largest percentage of women students was found among Europeans. The smallest was among the Africans, where the few existing educational opportunities are likely to be filled by men.

Where do they study? Every region of the U. S. plays host to foreign etudents. In general, their distribution follows the general population pattern, with large numbers of the visitors on the West Coast and in the Northeast. Over half of the educational institutions surveyed reported some foreign students enrolled.

HOW LONG do they stay? Foreign students often stay in the United States longer than a single year. If finances, visa requirements, and study plans allow, many students etay until a degree or special project is finished. Of those polled, forty-six per cent arrived in 1952. Over one quarter, twenty-eight per cent began American studies at some time before 1952. Twenty-six per cent did not answer this question.

Who pays the bill? Schools and campus groups, private organizations, business corporations, the U. S. and foreign governments all contribute to the financial support of foreign students in the United States. Although sixty per cent of the students listed their own or their families' funds as one source of income, many of them reported support from more than one source. Sixty-six per cent were fully or partially supported by private organizations or colleges. Sixteen per cent received funds from their own or the U. S. Government. A large proportion of this public or government support has been granted to students from Africa and Europe. While private agencies have assisted more students than have public, it is probable that the financial value of government support has been greater.

THE LAST SECTION of the census discusses the foreign student in the community. The large "incoming" exchange movement is a potent educational force whereby people can learn about other peoples directly. Many communities have coordinated programs for foreign students while others arrange informal contacts.

The Institute of International Education is the central private agency in the U. S. in the exchange of students, teachers, and specialists. In cooperation with the Committee on Friendly Relations among Foreign Students, New York City, it has conducted a census of foreign students every year since 1921. This is the fifth annual issue of Education for One World. Copies of the census report may be obtained from the Institute's New York or regional offices.

Need Teachers In Elementary High Schools

By ANN BACHMAN

A career in education may not be the most alluring in the sense of financial reward, but it can be most profitable in terms of satisfaction. The greatest shortage of teachers are at the elementary school level, although many are still needed at the high school level.

Good teachers are needed. Those that have a college education plus a Masters or Doctor's degree stand a better chance of getting better jobs.

For a person that may be deciding on a career in education, a good idea is to first of all become acquainted with people who are members of the profession. It is just as important for Education majors to become acquainted with their faculty. Florida State University has eleven new faculty members in the School of Education and ten new people at the demonstration school. Those in the School of Education are: Mr. Edward K. Hankin, professor of Trade and Industrial Arts; Mr. Coolie Verner, teaching Adult Education; Mr. Rossell Kropp; Mr. James McClellan; Mr. Julian Greenlea; Miss Virginia Hicks and Miss Mary Kulynitch, both teaching Women's Physical Education.

Mr. Keith Pitchford is a new Men's Physical Education teacher. Mr. Robert Ollry has been added to the Health Education staff. Mr. O'Dea andn Mr. Lastinger have both been added to the educatoin staff.

At the demonstration school the new faculty members are: Mr. David Wilmot, Mrs. Marjorie C. Miller, Mrs. Lucy Parsons, Mr. Fred P. Renter, Mrs. Dorothy Binger, Mr. Octavio Perez, Mr. Joseph Heoten, Mr. Robert Henning, Mr. Robert Johnson, and Mr. Jack Brown.

OTHER MATTERS on the schedule included co-ed visitation in the infirmary, on which the Flambeau has reported in this issue. The group also voted to send Senator Jackson to the Atlanta Convention of F.I.S.G.A. with a letter of withdrawal from that body, the measure having been voted favorably at the last Senate meeting. The Solons also approved the name of Bobby Temple as Senate Chaplain.

The meeting was adjourned at 5:45 p. m.
